A New Song (by Bulwer.

Joy to him who fairy treasures
With a fairy's eye can see;
Woe to him who counts and measures
What the worth in coin may be.

Gems from withered leaves we fashion,
For the spirit pure from stain;
Grasp them with a sordid passion,
And they turn to leaves again.

Fairy treasures are not rated
By their value in the mart;
Deep in secret earth created
For the coffers of the heart.

Dost thou covet fairy money?
Rifle but the blossom bells—
Like the wild bee, shape the honey
Into golden cloister-cells.

Wretched mortal, once invited,
Fairy land was thine at will;
Every little star had lighted
Revels when the world was still.

Every bank a gate had granted
To the topaz-paven halls;
Every wave had rolled enchanted
From our crystal music-falls.

Now the spell is lost forever,
And the common earth is thine;
Count the traffic on the river,
Weigh the ingots in the mine.

Look around, aloft, and under,
With an eye upon the cost,
Gone the happy world of wonder!
Woe, thy Fairy-land is lost!

MY FIRST DUEL.

It was scarcely dawn when my valet knocked at my door. Two cards were in my hand. Drowsily enough I cast my eyes over them, and saw the names of two members of our club.

A discussion of the previous evening with the Marquis of C—— recurred to my mind, and, although scarcely wishing myself out of this foolish affair, I begged these gentlemen to excuse my not receiving them, and invited them to call that afternoon, at 3 o'clock, upon George G——, one of my oldest friends, an officer of African Chasseurs, on leave at Paris, in order to meet de B——, my other second, and arrange the conditions of the duel.

These gentlemen gone, Joseph made my toilet quickly, and I hastened to George to explain my affair.

"My dear friend," he said to me, "as this is a first duel, here is my opinion: You are very young, absolutely without excuse; if you meet him, good; if you beat, better yet."

"I must write at once to de B——, and go to the smiths about my swords."

"No need of that. Go to the fencing hall to get back your fighting hanes and legs. Practice an hour, not more or you will do too much. I will let de B—— know. As for the swords, there are mine, which are lucky."

I smiled with a constrained air, and pressed his hand. A significant grasp, of convulsive energy, to be found only under certain circumstances. Then I hurried to the hall, and spoke to my fencing master, who, in view of the importance of the case, exercised me for an hour in the counter of quarte, retreating with feints from the arm. I left the hall with delight, armed with the benediction of my fencing master, who pledged his head that I should wound my adversary. Going to Durand's I practiced all the way counter of quarte with my cane, to do honor to Cordelio's teaching. I could think of nothing but my duel. Had the Marquis de C——, against whom I had no grudge, offered the fullest apologies, I should have refused them with spirit.

At Durand's I found George and de B——. We all three breakfasted together. The whole talk was of duels. Of course George recounted to me his meetings in Algeria, from which it appeared that one is seldom killed in cold blood with the sword. I coolly declared that I would drink the blood of the Marquis, at which George laughed outright. I asked myself if I should send him also a couple of seconds. On the whole, no. He was very fond of me; besides, I suspected I was becoming a little too much of a bully.

These gentlemen left me in order to meet my adversary's seconds. I went home. A little nervous excitement. I was short with Joseph, who did not know what to make of it. I got off my horse, as usual, and went to the Bois de Boulogne. Every one spoke of my duel, which began to be noised abroad. I put on my most indifferent air, and listened politely. I talked and bowed a great deal. Charming, the Bois. Magnificent weather. Autumn toilet—the prettiest possible. Two danseuses of the ballet troupe stopped their victoria.

"Tell me," said little V., "are you really going to fight the Marquis de C. to-morrow?"

"Yes. Don't mention it; it is not public. To-morrow morning, with swords."

"Ah! my poor Gaston! Good luck."

Her jet black eyes smiled a caress that charmed and drew me. I followed the carriage at an easy gallop. She regarded me with a softened air. The look turned my head, and I began to think it a fine thing to have a duel. Perceiving George at a distance, on his Arabian, I moderated the pace of my thoroughbred. George joined me.

You will fight to-morrow, at four in the afternoon, at Vesinet. The arrangements are all made. Keep cool during the affair. Your antagonist is nothing remarkable, but he has had three duels, and fences pretty well. We will go to the hall to-morrow morning before breakfast."

"Very well," I answered laconically.

His last words had somewhat dampened my enthusiasm. I was less pleased with the prospect before me. Nevertheless, I kept up appearances, and persisted in being extremely gay. I tried to be witty, and made bad jokes. George was thoughtful and silent. From time to time, however, I saw a smile across his lips. I imagine he understood my flow of spirits.

On returning, I dined with George and de B——, and afterwards, when I proposed taking a box at the Bouffes, we all went to the theater together. The conversation was the same as in the morning, though even more personal.

"Your adversary is taller than you," said George to me. "You should retreat, but keep your sword aimed at his body as much as possible, and if you see an opening, stretch out your arm, but don't lunge."

"Bah!" said I, laughing; "let us have supper, and talk of something else. To-morrow will be enough for all that. I mean to enjoy my last night."

This was the fourth or fifth time that I had spoken of my last night, last evening, last dinner—allusions in questionable taste.

"You will oblige me by committing no follies, and taking yourself off to sleep early this evening. De B—— and I are going to talk awhile with you and see you to bed, and to-morrow at ten I shall come for you to go to the fencing-room."

I remonstrated, but to no purpose and after the play we all went to my apartments. We lit cigars, chatted an hour, and then my friends went away, leaving me alone, face to face with myself and the prospect of the morrow.

Naturally I desired to set my affairs in order.

Hardly had I begun to take out the various papers, bills, inventories and letters, when I saw them in such disorder that I pushed them all back pell-mell into the drawer without the courage to examine further.

So I simply wrote a short letter, in the most tender terms, to my mother, sealed and addressed it carefully, and left it on the bureau. Then I went to bed; and, contrary to my expectations, was able to sleep. My last conscious thought was this: Who knows if to-morrow evening I shall see this chamber once more? Who knows if I shall ever again lie down upon this bed?

On waking, the first thing I saw was George's head beside my pillow. In a second the thought of my first duel flashed across me, and I felt a sort of oppression at the heart. Then, after the first hand-clasp, I examined his dress—black coat, light trousers, pearl-gray gloves. I was sure he had intentionally avoided the lugubrious toilet common on such occasions. He perceived my impression.

"My dear fellow," said he, "it is no longer the custom to go to such a meeting as to a burial; it is a simple promenade."

Joseph seemed surprised, but returned a moment later with the objects designated. George examined the shirts with scrupulous care.

"Good. That will do. Now, Take these boots to the shoemaker, and tell him to cut off the heels close to the sole—like this. Go, and be quick."

I listened in bewilderment while this was passing.

"It is important," he explained, "not to have the heel catch and make you lose your balance when you are handling a sword. Besides, you want your foot firm, but not pressing too hard. It is superb weather. You are really fortunate. You can fight in linen trowsers, which is much the most convenient dress."

Decidedly my friend George took gigantic proportions in my eyes. Without a word I put on the things he showed me; black coat, black waistcoat, white linen trousers. A few minutes more and we were at the hall. George appeared very well satisfied with my fencing, but he renewed his recommendations of the day before, to which I listened with all my ears.

"That's it; stick him in the arm as you advance—good—capital! When you quit your adversary's sword to attack, disengage, and lunge below his hand. Well done! There, that's enough; no need to fatigue yourself for nothing."

We went for the doctor; a common friend and old college comrades. A good liver, with a frank, merry face and a jovial eye, and ready to do anything for us all. He took his case of surgical instruments, slipping it into his pocket aside that I might not see. Lint, some bandages, a few phials, and a bottle of pure water, which he gave to the coachman.

All three of us breakfasted with de B——. The meal was gay, with occasional moments of unusual gravity. 'Spite of the carelessness of my character I was afraid of making a fool of myself. When no one saw me, I stole a glance at the clock; obviously the waiting at once excited and enervated me. What I dreaded was neither wounds nor death, but the unknown; in a word that inseparable emotion of a first debut, which has become proverbial. I felt the need of locomotion, of occupation, mental or physical. I gave way to abrupt, nervous movements, harsh bursts of laughter. And yet I was not afraid. We talked a great deal, and it was noticeable that whenever the conversation wandered away from the palpitating present one of us involuntarily recalled it.

"Tell me, doctor," I said to Æsculapius, "do you consider 4 o'clock in the afternoon a good time to fight?"

"Assuredly," replied L——, tranquilly; you have none of the uncertainties and tremors of too early rising; you are at your ease; digestion is effected, and that allows the performance of an operation."

Against my will I shuddered at the phrase, "performance of an operation," uttered with so much placidity.

To turn it off I went to the piano. Just then the footman came to tell us that our landau was at the door.

"Come," said George, "we have no time to lose. We have still to go for the other gentleman who will take us to St. V——'s Park. That is where the affair will take place; nobody will distrust us there. Come on."

I took my hat quickly. I had the honor of being the first outside, but in the depths of my heart I am afraid I likened my friend George to the most accomplished of torturers.

We got into the landau. The other gentlemen were all ready, and went on before us. The way was long, too long. To me it seemed interminable. From the back seat I gazed at the landscape, smoking all the while, with an absent air. Opposite me was George's pale face, his black mustache emphasizing his manly countenance. His eyes never lost sight of me, and his hand again energetically pressed mine.

Beside me sat the doctor's good comfortable figure. In the bottom of the carriage were the light swords, with curved guards and light hilts, easy in hand, not too long nor so flexible as easily to turn the edge. I felt a childish delight in unsheathing them as we drove along, and seeing how they glittered after the grinding and sharpening of the evening before. Then I passed my finger over the point, as an epicure passes his finger over his lips, and in spite of myself, I secretly found them a little too well pointed.

At last the end of our route appeared. As we turned to the left I perceived the park railing, at which something seemed to tighten suddenly about my heart. But I lit another cigar, and went on smoking, with the greatest apparent tranquility.

The carriage stopped. We had ceased to talk—involuntarily our voices had become hoarse and hollow. I put my head out of the door and George jumped down. The other gentlemen parleyed with the porter, who opened the gates. Not a soul was about the chateau. The first carriage proceeded slowly along the alley conducted by the porter, cap in hand. No one spoke. The alley was narrow and shady. The gates had been closed again. Nothing now was heard save the wheels turning slowly, and grating with a sharp sound on the gravel of the garden. We turned to right, then to left, with frequent stoppages, as if following a funeral procession. I bent down to the doctor's ear and whispered with great coolness, "Do you know if the family vault is still some way off?"

He looked at me in astonishment and burst into a peal of laughter.

George's head appeared at the carriage door. "Get out," he said to me.

De B—— took the swords, and he jumped out. I still smoked my cigar mechanically, because I felt in absolute need of the occupation. The carriages remained at a little distance. The four seconds greeted each other and talked together some moments. The ground was measured—I looked at the doctor with a smile.

"Bah!" he said to me, "it will go off well enough."

With a stealthy glance, I observed my adversary. He seemed exceedingly indifferent, and was also smoking. The seconds tossed up some pieces of money.

George came towards me. "You have lost the sun," he said.

"With my luck you might as well have tried for the moon; I should have lost all the stars of the firmament, one after the other."

"And you have lost the swords. You will have to fight with your antagonist's. Well, take off your coat, and don't forget what I have said. Above all, keep cool."

All my self-possession returned; my heart beat rather hard, but I deliberately took my place, lit up by some rays of sunlight, and threw off my hat, coat and waistcoat. My adversary and I now stood face to face three paces apart, measuring each other with the eye. That is certainly the most trying moment of all.

Perfectly cool. I stooped to turn up, one after the other, the bottoms of my trousers; then I tightened the waistband, so as to support the hips, and, pulling up the shirt, puffed it out around the breast, in order that the sword might catch there without entering.

George came up and extended to me one of the swords which he and another of the seconds had just measured, then, crossing the weapons, he uttered the preparatory—"Begin, gentlemen!"

Like a man accustomed to the surprises of the first moments, my adversary retreated a step. The blade became somewhat engaged. With the corners of my eye I regarded Saint V——'s red gloves, brand new ones, which dazzled in the sun. The Marquis advanced two steps and attacked me with a rapid disengagement. I parried, retreating quickly, and sent him a riposte, which made him in turn retreat. There was no other sound than the clashing of steel; in the silence was heard the gasps of laboring breasts; we were both exhausted. As for me, my heart beat terribly, and my profuse perspiration gave the effect of two or three minutes of complete submersion in learning to swim.

All at once the Marquis exposed his shoulder for perhaps a second; I stretched out my arm and felt a slight resistance; the point entered. I dropped the sword as if it had burnt my hand.

"O, pardon me, sir!" I exclaimed.

The first movement, quite involuntarily, too, is beg pardon, as of some one whom you have accidentally hurt. The sensation is very like that caused by treading on a gentleman's foot. The blood gushed freely from a pretty deep wound; the shoulder and arm stiffened; the Marquis, supported under a tree, smiled rather gloomily.

I put on my things a little apart; I must own to a certain pleasure in assuming my coat while contemplating, at a distance, the group formed by my friend, the Doctor, probing the wound, and bathing it with fresh water, the Marquis reclining on one side, and Saint V—— bending over him, with those eternal red gloves, which kept up a shining like the morocco of top-boots.

George carefully wiped the swords and sheathed them. Then he came up to me, his moustache biting, in a smile, which he had the good taste to swallow; his eyes sparkling with pleasure.

"Bravo, my little Gaston!" he said, in a low voice, "now, my boy, go and shake hands."

I made no objections, and approached the group just as the Marquis de G—— was saying to Saint V——:

"I leave it to you, Saint V——, with queen of spades, second, and two trumps what should you do?"

"My dear boy, there is no doubt; play, of course."

"Good! I have been wrong, then. Well, that is odd, my dear Saint V——; I should have given."

"Will you permit me sir," I interposed, "to offer my most humble apologies?"

"Not at all, my dear fellow," he replied, extending his hand; "you were perfectly right; the play was the true game."

I confess that on returning, the sunset to my eyes assumed the most ex exquiste fires. My heart was full; I was conscious of an extreme need of expression, a gayety, perhaps, even more unnatural than that of our departure. Nothing but George's side glances retained me.

The incidents of the duel were discussed.

"Do you think, doctor, the poor Marquis will have a long time of it?"

"Pooh! Fifteen days or three weeks in a sling."

"Did you notice," George asked me, "Saint V——'s sublime calm?"

"My dear fellow, I noticed nothing about him but his red gloves."

Many times since I have had a couple of gentlemen come to rouse me with their cards, at these early morning hours sacred to the rag-pickers and washerwoman. But never again have I experienced the sensation, at once full of fear and fascination, of the first duel. Never have I felt the enervation, the impatience, the feverish excitement, and the heart-throbs of my first expedition to Vesinet.—From the French.

"IRON AND BLOOD."—This phrase, "Eisen und blut," iron and blood, now exceedingly popular in Germany, was made use of by Count Bismarck at a sitting of the German Parliament. In an address on the general state of affairs, Count Bismarck said that it was desirable and necessary to improve the social and political character of Germany; but that such a movement could not be effected by resolutions and votes of majorities, or speeches by individuals, but by "iron and blood." The phrase, it however appears, is not original by Count Bismarck, but was composed by Mosem, a German lyric poet, who wrote "Blut und Eisen machen Frei;" that is, "blood and iron are the true liberators." Bismarck, it is also argued, has borrowed his definition of a journalist, as being "a man who has missed his vocation, from Disraeli's description of critics, "men who have failed in literature and art."

Mark Twain's Advice to Little Girls.

Good little girls ought not to make mouths at their teachers for every trifling offense. The retaliation should only be resorted to under peculiarly aggravated circumstances.

If you have nothing but a rag doll stuffed with sawdust, while one of your more fortunate little playmates has a costly china one, you should treat her with a show of kindness nevertheless. And you ought not to attempt to make a forcible swap with her unless your conscience would justify you in it and you know you are able to do it.

You ought never to take your little brother's "chewing gum" away from him by main force; it is better to rope him in with the promise of the first two dollars and a half you find floating down the river on a grindstone. In the artless simplicity natural to his time of life he will regard it as a perfectly fair transaction. In all ages of the world this eminently plausible fiction has lured the obtuse infant to financial ruin and disaster.

If at anytime you find it necessary to correct your brother, do not correct him with mud—never on any account throw mud at him, because it will soil his clothes. It is better to scald him a little; for then you attain desirable results—you secure his immediate attention to the lessons you are inculcating, and at the same time your hot water will have a tendency to remove impurities from his person—and possibly the skin, also in spots.

If your mother tells you to do a thing, it is wrong to reply that you won't. It is better and more becoming to intimate that you will do as she bids you, and then afterwards act quietly in the matter according to the dictates of your better judgment.

You should ever bear in mind that it is to your kind parents that you are indebted for your beautiful clothes, and for the privilege of staying home from school when you let on that you are sick. Therefore you ought to respect their little prejudices and humor their little whims, and put up with their foibles until they get to crowding you too much.

Good little girls always show marked deference for the aged. You ought never to "sass" old people unless they "sass" you first.

Ashes as a Cattle Feed.

The Maine Farmer says: "One of our substantial subscribers—in a recent conversation—gave his experience in training neat stock affected with a habit of eating wood, chewing bones, &c. His cattle were one spring affected in this way, they became thin in flesh, refusing to eat hay, and presenting a sickly appearance. He had an impression that their food lacked the constituents for making bone, but his neighbors used bone meal, without noticing any good result whatever. Last spring he put about four bushels of leached ashes in his barnyard, and threw out to them about a shovelful each day. They all ate it with evident relish. After turning them out to pasture, he put one peck of dry ashes per week on the ground in the pasture. They ate it all up, and gnawed off the grass where it had been lying. The cattle began to improve, gaining flesh and looking better than they had for several years, from the fact that the land was new and ashy from the burnings of the woods and land-clearings. He has another proof of the value of ashes for stock from this incident. He had a large tub full of leached ashes, which remained in it some time. It was afterward used as a watering tub; and when the cattle drank from it, they would lick and gnaw the sides and the bottom of the tub; actually biting out pieces and eating them. Latterly he gives one quart of ashes mixed with the same quantity of salt, to twelve head of cattle, about once a week, and finds it to agree with them wonderfully.

From the South Bend Register.

Jake Emberlin, with his wife and little daughter, has been living for some time in the western part of the city, near the Northern Indiana College. Last Thursday night he went to one of the numerous saloons here and invested in a large flask of liquor, and that night drank copiously of it. The next morning, which was the coldest of the season—the thermometer indicating fourteen degrees below zero—Emberlin got up and kindled a fire in the stove, and then went back to bed. Shortly thereafter his wife arose, dressed herself, prepared breakfast, and then called her husband. He did not answer, and she went to the bedside and attempted to awaken him, but was struck with horror and overwhelmed with grief to find him dead.

Emberlin was a stout, robust fellow in good health, apparently, up to the time of his death, though addicted to the use of strong drink. The last it is alleged was undoubtedly the cause of his death. A coroner's inquest was held, but no further information was elicited than that given above. Emberlin leaves his wife and child in destitute circumstances.

COURAGE IN EVERY DAY LIFE.—Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary you should do so, and to hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to make a will and a just one.

Have the courage to tell a man why you do not lend him your money.

Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle. "A friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not his vices."

Have the courage to show that you respect honesty in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonest duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you pay for your new ones.

Have the courage to obey your Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by men.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and prosperity to fashion in all things.

How Rain is Formed.

To understand the philosophy of this phenomenon, essential to the very existence of plants and animals, a few facts, derived from observation and a long train of experiments, must be remembered. Were the atmosphere, at all times, at a uniform temperature, we should never have rain, hail or snow. The water absorbed by it in evaporation from the sea and the earth's surface would descend in an imperceptible vapor, or cease to be absorbed by the air, when it was fully saturated. The absorbing power of the atmosphere, and consequently its capability to retain humidity, is proportionably greater in cold than in warm air. The air near the surface of the earth is warmer than it is in the region of the clouds.

The higher we ascend from the earth the colder we find the atmosphere. Hence the perpetual snow on very high mountains in the hottest climates. Now, when, from evaporation, the air is highly saturated with vapor—though it be invisible—if its temperature is suddenly reduced by cold currents descending from above, or, rushing from a higher to a lower latitude, its capacity to retain moisture is diminished, clouds are formed, and the result is rain. Air condenses as it cools, and, like a sponge filled with water and compressed, pours out water which its diminished capacity cannot hold. How singular, yet how simple, is an arrangement for watering the earth.—Scientific American.

The Duty on Sugar.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 21 of the act reducing internal taxes, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1870, as relates to sugar, be amended so that it will read "on all sugar not above No. 2, Dutch standard, in color, 1 3-4c per pound; on all sugar above No. 7, and not above No. 10, D. S., in color, 2c per pound; on all sugar above No. 10, and not above No. 13, D. S., in color, 2 1-4c per pound; on all sugar above No. 13, and not above No. 16, D. S., in color, 2 3-4c per pound; on all sugar above No. 16, and not above No. 20, D. S., in color, 3 1-4c per pound.

"On all sugar above No. 2, D. S., in color, and on all refined, loaf, lump, crushed, powdered, and granulated sugar, 4 cents per pound; provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, prescribe and require that samples from packages of sugar shall be taken by the proper officers, in such manner as to ascertain the full quality of such sugar, and the weight of sugar imported in sacks or boxes shall be marked distinctly by the custom-house weigher, by scoring his figures indelibly on each package, provided that all syrup or sugar-cane juice, melado concentrated melado, or concentrated molasses, entered under the name of molasses, shall be forfeited to the United States."

JACKET FOR STEAM BOILERS.—The practice of insulating steam boilers with a loose jacket of wood or tin, and filling in the cavity between the two surfaces with plaster of Paris, is now coming into use extensively and with marked results. Independent of economy and fuel, the radiation of the heat is greatly reduced, and consequently applied more directly to the formation of steam; while there is much less inconvenience and annoyance to the firemen from the heat. When the gypsum has hardened the exterior casing may be removed, if it is considered expedient. Quite recently cork has been used for a somewhat similar purpose, especially for coating tubes for conducting hot air or water, and for locomotives.

Bonner on Horseflesh.

When I was a boy living in New England there was a significant phrase in familiar use there, and applied to old, broken-down horses, "He is a good old has-been." Here in New York there might be introduced an equally significant phrase, "He is a good to-be." I have heard of a good many horses that were going to beat Dexter's time. This one, that, and the other were going to do it. Notwithstanding these portentious announcements, the simple fact remains indisputable that at the close of the trotting season, and in the closing month of the year 1870, no horse has beaten Dexter's time. The best judges say that there are several horses in my stable more likely to do it, if it ever be done, than any other horses known. I see that you have an account by your New York correspondent of one of these multitudinous going-to-be prodigies, that are always going to do, or ar about to do, the thing that ever as yet remains undone. The colored people of the South have a habit of saying "White man very unsartin." Now, horsemen pretty generally understand that timing quarters with a white handkerchief, as was the case in this instance, is "very unsartin" also. It affords a pretext for guessing the time to be just about what any one would have it. It is something like the printing in the old-fashioned almanacs, stretched along opposite to three weeks' date, "Rainy weather about this time." Besides, it is a very convenient kind of timing for breeders to sell colts by. I would give almost as much for it is as I would to see a colt trot loose in an open lot. Moreover, this method of timing is admirably and peculiarly adapted to timing colts out of Clay mares—and that is the breeding of the one your correspondent writes about—because, to make the Clays appear very fast, especially after they trot one quarter, which generally exhausts them, the more uncertain the mode of timing is the better. When your correspondent states that Mr. Backman has "the fastest horse in the world," he shows how egregiously he has been misinformed. Mr. Backman himself would laugh at the absurdity of such an idea. He makes no pretensions to anything of the sort. He has, it is true, a superior collection of brood mares; and fortunately for him but few of them have any Clay blood—so deficient in lasting qualities—in their veins.

Speaking of this Clay blood, a correspondent of the Turf, Field and Farm tells the following story apropos to it:

"Now it is with the Clay blood a good deal as it was with the old farmer who recommended sawdust and meal to fatten hogs. 'You don't say so,' exclaimed an eager skin-flint listener. 'Why, how do you mix it?' 'Oh,' replied, the farmer, 'I am not very particular. I generally mix mine half and half. It don't matter much, only the less saw dust the better.'"

It seems to me—and no well-informed horse-man can question the correctness of the opinion—that if you want to breed a horse that will endure to go a mile at the highest rate of speed, it will not do to have any blood notorious for quitting in him, and that the old farmer's rule for mixing sawdust—namely the less sawdust the better—apples perfectly to the Clay blood.

In conclusion, let me predict that if Dexter's time ever is beaten, it will be by one of my own horses, Joe Elliott, who has made the fastest mile, with full weights, this season, and of whose breeding Commodore Vanderbilt himself thinks so highly. ROBERT BONNER.

From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Press and Herald.

While a freight train was crossing the trestle over Lick Creek bridge, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad, four miles east of Rogers' Junction, the other day, a brakeman named George Walker, while passing on the top of the car, from one car to another, missed his footing and fell, striking the ground fifty feet below.

He uttered a yell as he went down, which was heard by the engineer, sound shrill above the noise of the engine and the moving train. As the train stopped, and all hands were looking around for the cause of the alarm, they saw Walker waving his arm and shouting, away down on the bank of the creek. Aid was immediately rendered the poor fellow, who was more frightened than hurt, having fortunately struck the ground head downwards, and thus escaping no more serious injury than a dislocated neck, which will confine him to his bed two or three days.

ZINC WATER-PAINT.—The unpleasantness of occupying a newly painted house may be readily avoided by the use of zinc water-paint. Powdered oxide of zinc (which may be heated with a little potato starch, if more "body" be wanted) is combined with the desired mineral or vegetable color, and with this an aqueous solution of chloride of zinc, to which some tartrate of potassa has been added, is then mixed; the water-paint thus formed being applied with a brush on the surface to be coated. In half an hour this paint will be perfectly dry; and the object of the alkaline tartrate is to make the drying process less rapid. The advantages of using the water-paints are very numerous; they are more durable than oil paints, do not blacken by exposure to sulphurous vapors, are devoid of odor, dry quickly, resist dampness and the action of water, can be cleansed with boiling water and soap like oil paints, and preserve the wood to which they are applied from decay, and render it less combustible. This latter property may be increased by the addition of borax. Both the oxide and the chloride of zinc can be manufactured without danger to the health of the workmen, sold at a low price, and kept for any length of time in any climate.

A JUDGE FINES HIMSELF.—The Criminal Court was adjourned at noon until 3 o'clock p. m. The Judge, however, failed to appear at that hour, and about 4 o'clock he entered the court-room, and, on taking his seat, said: "Mr. Clerk, enter a fine of $100 against Samuel Dodge, Judge of this Court, for being absent at the hour to which the Court adjourned." The fine was entered by the Clerk. While there seems to be something nonsensical in the presiding officer of a court fining himself for delinquency, there nevertheless is a high moral principle of honor involved, which is the more commendable the more we reflect upon it.—Galveston Bulletin.

High and Low.

From the Galesburg, (Ill.) Republican.

The old axiom tells us that "Love laughs at locksmiths," but in the modern age and in this enlightened community we might travesty it by saying that love smiles on blacksmiths. How it happened that the new adaptation occurred may not be uninteresting to our readers. John Giddings is the nomenclature of a sturdy, honest, intelligent, bright-eyed little Irishman, lately employed in the blacksmith shop of Mr. F. D. Stoddard, on Simmons street. Johnny is peculiar with everybody in these parts, and by his untiring industry has accumulated a couple of thousand dollars and is the owner of some property. One day—no matter how long since it may have been—while Johnny was toiling like Tubal Cain at the forge, a young lady passed the door. Brief as was that moment of passing their eyes met—Dan Cupid had kindled a flame, and it was a clear and decided case of love at first sight. By the mysterious and incomprehensible affinity, which is yet so all-powerful, our hero and his lady managed to meet, and that old and beautiful story of undying affection was once more rehearsed to willing and listening ears. It was seldom, however, that they met, as they did not wish the aristocratic relatives of the young lady to discover their love, and thus blast their fond hopes. But the stratagems of love are numerous and ingenious, and they adopted the quiet tactics of correspondence to tell their mutual regard for one another. In this instance, at least, the course of true love did run remarkably smooth between the parties concerned; but the father of the damsel was horrified, only a few short mornings since, to discover that his daughter had eloped with her lover, and that they had been married in Chicago. At first he was inclined to be furious, but we now learn that he looks upon the matter calmly, and that he is inclined to accept the situation with resignation. The bridegroom is a worthy young man, and it is the general opinion that he will make an excellent and affectionate husband. Mrs. Giddings, nee Miss Sarah Edwards, is a lovely and accomplished young lady, and moved in the highest and most aristocratic circles of Galesburg. We trust and believe that the marriage will result happily—it is one of love and not for mercenary consideration, and it is our sincere wish that the united lives of the happy couple will be as serene and placid as a midsummer cloud. Mr. Giddings, by his sturdy independence, is bound to achieve and win a place in the world, and his wife may well feel proud of him, despite any haughty or ill-mannered sneers.

Not for Joseph.

Yesterday morning, about daybreak, a buxom Irish housemaid industriously scrubbing the steps of a house near Astor place, attracted the attention of a disreputable looking young man who evidently did not earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. He wore a sickly pink mustache; his boots were dirty, but his hair was elaborately greased and frizzed, while he displayed on his person enough Attleboro jewelery to form the basis of a gift enterprise. Approaching the damsel, and assuming an expression intended to be extremely fascinating, the youth accosted her:

"You are up early this morning."

"To be sure, sir," was the answer, while Bridget scrubbed away more vigorously than ever.

"So you can if you have eyes, sir," was the response.

"You are a smart girl, I think."

"Of course I am, sir."

"Now tell me—are you engaged?"

"Don't you see I'm engaged at my work?"

"I mean have you got a beau?"

"To be sure I have a bow—three or four of them; but what would I be wearing them in the morning for?"

"No, no, you don't understand me. Have you got a sweetheart?"

"Oh dear, no; I cant find one."

"I know better than that. You are just the nice kind of a girl that I would like to keep company with. Can I call on you this evening?"

At this Bridget sprang upon her feet, placed her arms akimbo, and, looking her would-be follower squarely in the face, exclaimed with emphasis:

"No, sir; not for Joseph. What do you want to call on the likes of me for? I know. You want to look at the windy fastenings, and to fit a key to the dure, and then steal in some dark night, and carry off every blessed thing in the house. Pooh! to the divil wid ye!"

This shot rather discomfited the young man, coming from one whom he had taken for an unsophisticated, newly arrived emigrant; but, not being disposed to give it up so, he imitated the example of the excellent Mr. Sparrowgrass, who, while exercising his new horse, found comfort in attributing a violent attack of the blind staggers to the exuberance of animal spirits. So, with the intention of prolonging the conversation, he endeavored to laugh the matter of by saying jokingly:

"Ah, I see that you are a lively girl."

"Yes, and I'll be alive when you are swinging dead on the gallows," was the reply; and then, giving the house-cloth a twirl which sprinkled her pertinacious wooer from head to foot with the dirty soap-suds, Bridget disappeared down the area steps, humming the familiar air of.

"Not for Joseph, if he knows it."

"GO" AND "COME."—"If you want your business done, says the proverb, "go and do it; if you don't want it done, send some one else." An indolent gentleman had a freehold estate producing about five hundred a year. Becoming involved in debt he sold half his estate, and let the remainder to an industrious farmer for twenty years. About the end of the term the farmer called to pay his rent, and asked the owner whether he would sell him his farm.

"Will you buy it?" asked the owner, surprised.

"Yes, if we can agree about the price."

"That is exceedingly strange," observed the gentleman; "pray tell me how it happens that while I could not live upon twice as much land, for which I paid no rent, you are regularly paying me two hundred a year for your farm, and are able in a few years to purchase it!"

"The reason is plain," was the reply; "you sat still and said, Go; I got up and said, Come. You lay in bed and enjoyed your estate; I rose in the morning and minded my business."—Self-Help.

IOWA MARBLE.—We saw at our State and District Fairs this fall some of the finest specimens of marble that we have seen, in quarries of Messers. Helm & Richardson, at Orford, in Tama county this State, where they have erected works to shape the marble in forms and styles, required for all the purposes for which marble is used. The quarries furnish many colors suiting the taste of all, such as light gray, light and dark blue, brown and orange prevailing, clouded more or less than can be but on any other American marble, and equal to any from foreign countries. It is as compact and quite as heavy as the Scotch granite. It is furnished fifty per cent lower than the Eastern marble can be supplied in the West. The firm are enlarging their works so that they will be enabled in a few weeks to fill extensive orders. There is no marble in the United States Capitol superior to it in any respect, and it is to be hoped that this Iowa marble will have a conspicuous place in our own new capitol.—Ex.

MAKE NO MAN FEEL HIS INFERIORITY.—Nothing is more insulting than to take pains to make a man feel his inferiority in knowledge, rank, fortune, etc. In the first place it is both ill bred and ill-natured; and in the two latter articles it is unjust, they not being in his power. Good breeding and good nature incline us rather to raise people up to ourselves than to mortify and depress them. Besides, it is making ourselves so many friends instead of so many enemies. A constant effort to please is a most necessary ingredient in the art of pleasing; it flatters the self-love of those to whom it is shown; it engages and captivates more than things of much greater importance. Every man is, in some measure, obliged to discharge the social duties of life; but these attentions are voluntary acts, the free-will offerings of good breeding and good nature; they are received, remembered, and returned as such. Women, in particular, have a right to them; any omission in that respect is downright ill-breeding.

MOUNT BAKER, a peak of the Cascade ridge, on the northern border of Oregon, ninety miles east from the mouth of Frazer's river, has recently been measured by Prof. Davidson, of the United States Coast Survey. The measurements are as follows: North peak, 10,719 feet high; south peak, 10,079 feet; upper part of the crater, 10,124 feet; bottom of the crater, 9,925; slope of the crater, 20 degrees; length of crater, 407 feet. These measurements, it is stated, have never before been given. The height of the snow line on the west side of the mountain was found to be 5,301 feet, or 2,150 feet higher than the elevation heretofore reported. Prof. Davidson also expressed the opinion that the highest peak on the coast of California is Mount Rainier, in the Cascade range, differing from Prof. Whitney, who considers Mount Shasta as the highest.

WE TAKE the following from the Paducah Kentuckian: "There is no use in talking, people will have their fun. On night before last three young gentlemen of Paducah were skylarking around the streets, when they came up with a spoony-looking fellow, and at once determined to have some fun out of him. After quizzing him for some time, all of which he took in good part, one of the trio remarked, 'You are the man who killed Ben. Haiden, in Johnson county, Illinois, a few days since; there is a reward of five hundred dollars offered for you, and you must consider yourself our prisoner.' At this spoony pulled out a six-shooter, and bringing it to bear, said 'You have told a d—d lie; I never killed Ben. Haiden nor any other man, but if you three scoundrels don't git, somebody will be killed pretty soon.' It is useless to say they got."

THE JAPANESE.—There have recently been staying in New York city eleven young Japanese, destined hereafter to be attached to the suites of the Princes of Japan, but who now have been sent to receive an education in political economy, international law and engineering in the colleges of England and the United States. Five of these youths remain here, and the other six will at once proceed to England, where two of them have been before, having pursued a partial course of studies at Bayswater College, near London. These young Japanese are small in stature, of courteous and affable manners, and dress in the European style.

RAILWAYS IN RUSSIA.—The latest foreign mails announce that on November 3d the railway to Revel, on the Baltic, was formally opened by a great dinner at Narva. Revel lies on the Gulf of Finland, and as its port is open nearly all the winter, a large trade, it is anticipated, will be carried on with England during all the year round.

VALEDICTORY.

As our readers were informed last issue, the Air Line was sold to Mr. T. C. MAYS of the Ft. Wayne Sentinel. Mr. MAYS will from this date publish the paper at Auburn, and the change of location will, of course, require a change in the name of the paper, Mr. MAYS comes well recommended and it is to be hoped that the friends of Democracy throughout the county, without regard to locality, will give him every assistance and encouragement in their power. Six months have now elapsed since the Air Line came into our hands. We found it already circulating as an independent paper. Our object was to make it a thorough Democratic journal, and to use its columns for the advancement of the interests of our party. We flatter ourself that our efforts have been successful. And while we have avoided extremes in all things, have, we trust, assisted in advancing that spirit of intellegent conservatism that has ever been one of the characteristics of the great Democratic party.

To our brethern of the Press, we return heart felt thanks for the many courtisies received at their hands, and trust that no uncourteous expression has found its way into our columns, in anything that has occcured in our relations with our fellow editors of Northern Indiana. We are happy to know that our connection with the Press, began at a time when slang and abuse has become almost a thing of the past.

To our friends and patrons at home we can give the assurance that the Air Line has been a success. Perhaps no paper in this section of the country has been so successful financially. We hope that our successor may enjoy your confidence and your patronage to even a greater extent than has been bestowed upon us. We now for a time resign the editorial chair, to resume it perhaps at no distant day, in some other locality. We bid our friends an affectionate farewell, hoping that the kindness you have exhibited towards us, may prove a four-fold blessing to you and ot ours.

JAMES A. BARNS.

OUR BOW.

With this issue we commence, in DeKalb County, the publication of THE AUBURN COURIER. In accordance with the usual custom, we greet our readers with an announcement of the course to be pursued.

FIRST—We shall at all times and under all circumstances, without fear or favor, advocate the vital principles of Democracy, using all fair and honorable means for their maintenance and success; having an abiding faith in the party that carried our country through sixty years of peace and prosperity, up to the present reign of extravagance and corruption that now threatens the destruction of the glorious fabric of our free institutions.

In advocating the cause of this great political organization, we propose to treat those opposed to us with due respect and consideration, and shall endeavor to avoid those asperities and personalities, so much in conflict with true and honorable journalism.

SECONDLY.—In local affairs, THE COURIER will take a prominent stand, not in the building up of any one part of our county alone, but of the whole, promising to each locality a fair and impartial representation of its interests. Instead of endeavoring to disintegrate, or bring into violent controversy, opposing sections, we shall deem it our duty to harmonize all, by introducing into active co-operation a spirit of enterprise and good will, that shall make us a happy and prosperous people; placing our county, with its ample agricultural mechanical and commercial resources, among the first in the State.

To the accomplishment of these objects we shall devote our time and energies, trusting in your generosity and encouragement for a realization of that success which shall result in our mutual benfit.

ATTEMPTS are proposed to introduce sponge-growing into the industries of the harbors on the northeastern coast of our continent. It seems that one species of the sponge has recently been found thriving in Portland harbor, and it is inferred that it would live in all places on our eastern coast south of that place, and that the naturalization of choice sponges is a matter of national importance.

A YANKEE has recently invented a rat exterminator, consisting of a sort of snuff. The animal is expected to jerk its head off at the third sneeze.

County Examinership.

As conducted by many examiners the office does not pay. Feelings override sense of duty and the fleeting breath of popular favor raises the grade and there is often failure to honor the patient worker and justly chide the shiftless.

Too many boys and girls, old men with practices of the past and others sadly wanting in a knowledge of their work, are importuned to teach when their own better judgment tells them that they are not fitted, and when such persons are refused a license, frequently, the householders call a meeting and vote unanimously that the said party is qualified to teach their school and thereby ask said examiner to give him a license. Some offices are created for men. The superintendency of schools ought not to be so considered. The imperative demand of the schools is efficient teachers and the power to secure them rests with the examiner as he does his duty educational interests flourish or decay.

The duties of Indiana examiners consist almost entirely in grading teachers as an estimate for the watchful trustee and his good influence is found in stimulating teachers to make improvement and rejecting the vicious and ignorant.

The standard to reach which is to get a license to teach, is uniformly very low, and he who cannot correctly answer sufficient questions to obtain a six months license, is poor enough There has been some trouble in getting enough teachers and a few of the schools have a poor chance to make progress either in manner or education.

Examiners have different grades. Some issue two years license to those who answer a few of the simplest questions; others apply a severer test and cut down the same party to six months or entirely reject. One grants special licenses; another never licenses without public examination, and so in other ways.

To correctly grade a large class of teachers in the brief time allowed for the work, is almost impossible, and injustice may be done to some who are confused and unable to acquit themselves creditably, a remedy is found in permitting the applicant without farther expense, to try as often as he chooses, at subsequent examinations and in many cases this course has been attended by gratifying results, both to applicant and school. The highest ends held in view by the examiner are to have large districts, good school houses, useful and used apparatus, well qualified teachers, and, as an incentive to effort, good paying wages.

Fault finding with these aims must come from those who ignore the needful preparation of study and appear for examination, expecting to pass on the credit of precious experience or strong recommendations.

The teachers of DeKalb County number in their ranks many men and women of good culture, excellent character and inherent energy who are doing a work on these brief days of winter whose influence shall be felt long after they shall have been gathered home, in pure motives, strict integrity and solid attainment and a thought of this aside from wages, urges them day by day to persevering effort.

Our best teachers have studied and still study hard to keep pace with the progress of the times and valuing the laurels won by mental labor are justly jealous of those who seek to share them without corresponding exertion or monetary outlay, and warmly welcome all those who by the same toilsome effort gain that full fund of knowledge requisite to success.

Our schools are reported by trustees to be doing well. Some say that this winter's term will show more real progress than any former, and so it should be for the truth is that past progress has been snail-paced. Schools ought to do well. Trustees are well informed educational men and some of them experienced teachers; they are doing what they can for the schools. Teachers are working manfully and a large numbers of children are availing themselves of their privileges with laudable zeal, while parents help on the on the work by commendation of all concerned.

May our teachers show a life and movement to spur the slow; a true politeness to repel clownishness and invite courtesy, and an aptitude at teaching and governing which will make them be eagerly sought, gladly honored and fully paid.

Let public opinion favor rigid examination; let it say "we want our teachers to be posted in all the branches required by law to be taught." Let schools be visited; the energetic encouraged the deficient be discharged and the great question regarding the perpetuity of our republic will be solved with satisfaction by every true lover of intellectual attainment and believer of the right and ability of people to govern themselves.

If not, get one of

J. B. TAYLOR'S CELEBRATED Excelsior Mills.

These mills have been tried for 14 years past, and not found wanting, in any respect, for cleaning wheat, corn, barley, oats, beans, peas, grass seed, flax seed, and all kinds of grain. We challenge the world for competition. These mills have taken the first premium at the Michigan and Indiana State Fairs, in 1864-65-67-68. Come and get a good Mill, and don't bring dirty wheat to market and get 20c. less per bushel.

Teachers, Attention!

Examination regularly on the 1st Saturday of each month, at Auburn, in the Seminary Building. Exception from any one or more of the eight branches limits license to six months and the particular district requiring such excuse. Satisfactory evidence of good moral character required. Teachers must accommodate teaching without a license. Applicants are expected to show an improved grade on a second examination, when previous grade is low, or be subject to rejection.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY.

Local and Miscellaneous.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Having sold my interest in the Air Line I respectfully request all those indebted to me on subscription to call and settle immediately at this office or to me personally. A reasonable time will be given, for all to make their settlements, and as I intend removing from the county, those accounts which still remain unsettled will be left for collection. It is important that this should be attended to immediately.

J. A. BARNS.

We hope our exchanges will make the necessary connections so that their papers will be received at this office direct.

TAX LIST.—We publish in this issue the Delinquent tax list for DeKalb county, for 1870.

WOOD.—We wish several of our subscribers would bring us good wood on subscription, at their earliest convenience.

ANY of our subscribers desiring to have their paper changed from one post office to another, can do so by giving us notice.

HON. L. D. BRITTON, member elect from this county to the Legislature left for Indianapolis last Monday morning to attend the present assembling of that body.

SUBSCRIPTONS.—We hope our friends generally will interest themselves to extend the circulation of the COURIER, and we shall be pleased to place the names of responsible parties on our list at all times.

THE COURTS.—The Court of Common Pleas, Hon J. M. Clapp, Judge, will commence on the third Monday of this month, Jan. 16th 1870. The Civil Circuit, Hon. H. S. Tousley, Judge, will convene on the first Monday in February.

PERSONAL.—Supt. A. H. Reese of the Ft. W., J. & S. R. R. passed through this place yesterday, from Ft. Wayne where he has been confined several days by sickness. We trust he will speedily recover, as the road cannot well do without his efficient services.

SAD.—We regret to learn of the death of the only son of our esteemed friend Mr. Eli Brown, editor of the Columbia City Post. He was a bright, promising child, and the parting is one which only a fond and devoted parent can feel.

COUNTERFEITERS.—Look out for counterfeit money. A gang of counterfeiters infest Northern Indiana and their agents are "shoving the queer" on the unsuspecting, as rapidly as circumstances will admit. So look sharp.

FIRE.—The Confectionary and Bakery of Mr. C. Baker, of this place was discovered to be on fire about 2 o'clock Christmas day but by dint of hard work, the fire was extinguished, after damaging the building to the extent of $100.

CHANGED.—The COURIER takes the place of the Air Line, recently published at Waterloo, the material having been removed to this place. We will be found at our office, corner Main and seventh St., at all times and will be pleased to receive a visit from all of our friends.

BURNED.—On Friday evening last, the Tannery, opposite the depot, in Kendallville, was burned to the ground, cause of fire not known. The building was insured and as the stock was mostly saved, Mess. Draggoo & Oviatt will perhaps not sustain much loss.

JOB WORK.—We have added largely to the job department of this office since it came into our hands, and with new material of the latest styles, we feel confident of doing first-class work of all description. Those abroad can send in their orders and rest assured that they will be attended to without delay.

TOBACCO.—Oil of sassafras, it has been discovered, will entirely neutralize the narcotic effects of tobacco, and it will prove an excellent remedy against the bite of rattlesnakes. Oil of sassafras, it is stated, has long been used to prevent the fermentation of mucilage and inks.

LUCKY.—A printer in Indianapolis has just fallen heir to a couple of millions of dollars, by the demise of an uncle in the old country. Dunder und blitzen! don't we wish we had some rich relative in the old country to lose. Two millions of dollars, would help us out of the drug amazingly.

DESTROYED.—The large bridge of the Toledo Wabash and Western Railroad over the Maumee river, at Defiance Ohio, was totally destroyed by fire last week. The Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad affords an avenue, however, for the transfer of freight of that line. Large trains have been passing this point every day since the occurrence, and will continue until the bridge is rebuilt.

THIEVES.—We understand that there is considerable thieving going on in various parts of the country. Our citizens should be careful how they leave home without first securing everything safely from the hand of a set of worthless vagabonds who imagine that this world owes them a living without working for it, and who are now perambulating the city and country stealing whatever they can lay hands on.

WINTER.—Cold winter has come, with its frost and its snow, and is snapping at our heels, toes, ears and noses, with its usual surlishness. That indefinite and omnipresent creature "IT," is cold as the brow of old Toreno. Furs and overshoes are all the style. Mud is ignored. Wheeled instruments out of fashion. Sleds are on parade in all their dignity, and the sleigh bells are as noisy and garrulous as a young belle at a ball.

ADVERTISING.—A business house in Bellefontoine, Frank Case, appreciates the value of advertising. A nine column advertisement appears in the Republican of that town. A Van Wert hardware dealer has a two column displayed advertisement in the Mercer county Standard. Blessed are they who advertise for they will not only profit thereby but make the printer happy.

FASHIONS.—Literature among our fashionable young ladies is receiving more attention now-a-days—a fact all should hail with delight.

The prevailing style of chignon is called "drozzling" braids by the New Evening Post. We don't care. It is far preferable to the enormous old style chignon, so much in vogue last year. Ladies, go in for the "drozzling" braids.

MANY of our old citizens will remember the following graphic epitaph, which at one time, marked the resting place of an old citizen near the Ohio line:

> "This is in memory of Jonn Bent.
> She kicked up her heels and away she went."

AT the Lyceum, last evening, an enthusiastic young debater astonished his auditors by bringing his fist down on the table and shouting: "Where is the religiosity of the autropoid quadrumana?" Pretty good for this cold weather, but if he thinks we have got it he can search us. We never saw it, at all, at all.

ANGRY.— At a wedding the other day, the choir sung "Come ye Disconsolate." The bride said if the people would wait until the ceremony was over, she would put a mansard roof on the head of that leader. She was as mad as the lady who had to wear a last year's bonnet.

PIOUS.—A pious young girl at Waverly has broken off an engagement because her lover insisted upon devoting Sunday evening to courting exercises. She mourns because camp meetings are like angel's visits, few and far between. But, never mind, some fellow will marry her one of these days out of pure revenge.

PAPER SKIRTS.—It may be interesting to the ladies to know that paper skirts, costing but fifteen cents, are becoming common. The paper is of great tenacity and does not easily tear. It is of various colors, from snowy white to doleful black.

COLD WEATHER.—The extreme cold weather we are having, accompanied with a good sleighing snow and passable roads has been favorable to farmers for hauling. Loads of pork and produce of all kinds are being brought into market by our farmers during the cold spell, bringing about a lively trade with our merchants and business men generally.

FUN.—Josh Billings had a correct idea of what constituted enjoyment among young people during the winter months when he wrote the following:

> Now gather round the kitchen fire,
> Git out the fiddle and partner's choose,

GRATEFUL.—A large number of our friends at Fort Wayne have subscribed for the COURIER out of personal considerations and from a desire to assist in establishing a good paper at this place. They are wholesouled clever gentlemen, and we expect to find many of the same kind in DeKalb County. We are grateful for this encouragement and trust that we shall merit the same appreciation at home.

NEW CARS.—The Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad is increasing the amount of its rolling stock. We noticed four new cars for that road, at Ft. Wayne this week. Two of them are passenger coaches, and are very finely finished both inside and out. The other two are combined baggage, mail and express cars. They came from the works at Wilmington, Del., and are very handsome. The patent coupling is used, so there will be no danger of broken fingers.

WATERLOO.—In a brief visit to Waterloo the other day we found the place as stirring as ever, and we are glad to note the general business appearance which our neighbor puts on. We like to see enterprise everywhere and we have no hesitancy in giving credit where it belongs. Waterloo distined to be a town of some importance, and we hope its increase will be in proportion to the liberality of her citizens.

NEW YEAR.

In consequence of having to remove the material of this paper from Waterloo to this place we were unable to issue a paper last week, and therefore could not wish our readers, publicly, a merry christmas. It is not to late however, to wish you a happy new year, trusting that when the bells high up in the Cathedrals shall peal out the hour of twelve on the last day of this year, we shall all be found in a happier, joyous and more prosperous condition than that of to-day. When twelve more moons of ice and blossoms shall have waxed and waned, and the sweet chimes of the dying hour shall be flung out by the wintry winds across the naked woods and snowy hills, let us trust that it will not be the requiem of all our bright hopes perished and never to be realized this side the jasper sea and stary portals of immortality, but that it will ring in brighter hopes and dreams more beautiful than ever before.

REMEMBER THE POOR.—The winter season is an eminently appropriate time for all who are in sympathy with suffering humanity to bestir themselves and seek out the truly needy and lead them in the ways of comfort and add to their well being as much as possible.

The most deserving of aid are not, usually, those whose forlorn condition attracts the greatest attention, for they are retiring in dispotition and manner, and possessed of that native and laudable pride that leads them to avoid, as far as possible, everything having the appearance of charity. Yet misfortunes will come, and often, not singly. They are, it may be, unable to procure work, or they may be prevented by sickness from supplying themselves with the efforts of life.

Thousands know by sad experience the hard struggling to keep up appearances, the bitter fight with the wolves of adversity, the apparent futility of all their efforts the sad sorrow that agonizes their hearts, as one after another of the souvenirs of better days, of even the necessities of the present, find their way to the pawn-brokers, soon to be swallowed up by the exorbitant rates of interest which they are unable to pay.

There is a need of much more of the spirit of true humanity, of kindly interest in others well being, of less selfishness and more self-sacrifice, more care for, and attention to, the needs and well being of those around us. No one, until they have tried it has any idea of the vast amount of good they can do, and the lasting pleasure it will afford them.

THE COURIER.—We have now got fairly under headway, and intend supplying the COURIER regularly and promptly every week, to our subscribers, at two dollars per annum. We believe in the system of paying in advance and shall strictly adhere to it at the soonest possible moment. We shall have to be somewhat lenient, however, in this matter at first until we assure our friends that the COURIER is a permanent institution. It will not require a very long time, we think, to convince any reasonable person of this fact, and then we hope they will comply promptly with our terms.

The COURIER will be largely devoted to local news, and in order to facilitate this object we ask our friends throughout the county to furnish us with the news of their neighborhood that will be of interest to the general reader. Send us the facts and if you are not accustomed to writing, we will take pleasure in putting it in a readable shape. We want to make the COURIER a No. 1 paper, and with this assistance, we will certainly be able to do so.

Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad—Meeting of Directors.

Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw Railroad,
Secretary's Office,
JACKSON, Dec. 23, 1870.

A meeting of the Directors of the Fort Wayne, Jackson, and Saginaw Railroad Co., called by order of the President, to meet at his office, at one o'clock p. m., Dec. 22, was held in this city, Jackson, on that day.

Present: H. H. Smith, A. P. Egerton, E. O. Grosvenor, H. J. Rudisil, P. B. Loomis, E. A. Webster, D. Merriman, Henry Baker, W. D. Thompson, J. M. Gale John Bass.

The board was called to order, when the Secretary read a communication from H. H. Smith, Esq., offering his resignation as president, which, on motion, was accepted.

Hon. A. P. Egerton then offered the following preamble and resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, H. H. Smith, President of the Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroad Co., has presented to the Board of Directors his resignation of the office of President, therefore.

Resolved, that in accepting his resignation we regard this a fitting time to express our satisfaction of the manner in which the interest of the road has been managed by him.

Resolved, That as by his far sightedness the importance of the connections made by the road was early made manifest, and by his ability its organization quickly accomplished, so to his energy and industry its rapid progress and speedy completion are largely to be attributed.

Resolved, That while we regret the loss of his assistance and services in the future management of this road, we hope the same measure of success will attend him in whatever he may hereafter undertake that he has contributed to the Fort Wayne Jackson and Saginaw road while it has been under his management.

On motion of W. D. Thompson, the Directors present proceeded to ballot for President, with the following result.

Whole number of votes cast - - - 11
Of which P. B. Loomis received - - - 10
" E. O. Grosvenor " - - - 1

Whereupon P. B. Loomis was declared duly elected President.

On motion of P. B. Loomis, the following was adopted as by-laws:

1. All stockholders, where subscription shall have been fully paid and a certificate issed before the closing of the transfer books, and none others, shall be entitled to vote in person, or by proxy, at all future meetings of the stockholders.

2. The books for the transfer of stock shall be closed at four o'clock p. m., on Tuesday next preceding any annual or special meeting of the stockholders, and shall remain closed until after the final adjournment of such annual meetings.

3. The annual meeting for the election of Directors of the company, shall be held at the office of the company in the city of Jackson, on the second Tuesday of the month of February in each year, at eleven o'clock a. m.

EUGENE PRINGLE, Secretary.

LETTERS.—A letter received by one of our citizens, says German women send all sorts of things through the mails to their husbands, sons or sweethearts, away soldiering. Letters are permitted up to sixteen ounces weight, so they send cigars, tea chocolate, shirts and slippers. A pair of slippers can be sent—one in each. One woman sent a flannel shirt in six pieces, by six posts. The last letter contained the left sleeve, with the needle and thread for sewing the shirt together.

DEATHS.

DIED.—On the 22d of December, of brain fever, THOMAS only son of HENRY W. and FANNY A. FORD, aged nine years.

None but those who have gone through the terrible ordeal, can fully realize the fond hopes thus rudely blasted and the agony of those who mourn the departure of their little ones. Thomas was a bright intelligent little fellow, for one of his years and had entwined himself in the hearts and affections of all, so that none who knew him, but what partook of the general grief that followed his early demise. No more the childish voice, in sweetest tones shall find an echo in the hearts of loving ones, and the little, feet now cold and still, shall never more keep step to the music of that cherry glowing heart; but e'en a few more days, and then will be revealed the pure and glorious life to which the bright spirit has taken its flight, away in the ethereal blue above, where the wearying grief of parents and all shall find an end in everlasting peace.

EX-SENATOR DRAKE, of Missouri, recently appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Claims, has entered upon the duties of his office. He was introduced to the bar by Judge Loring, when he delivered a few remarks, asking the gentlemen to excuse him for any imperfection until he should become better acquainted with the usages of the Court. The belief is general that the best thing the new Judge could do to become acquainted with the duties of the office, would be to study law.

THE charge that Admiral Porter, in conjunction with General Meigs had got up an office during the war to be filled by a Secesh Captain, that would enable the Confederates to get all the news they wished from Washington, is met by Porter's friends with a charge that Ben. Butler, when in command at Fortress Monroe, was prevented by Porter from smuggling supplies to the Confederate army, from the proceeds of which he expected to make a fortune. We give due credit to all these worthies say against each other.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—Michael Duignan, a laborer, during a quarrel with his aged mother, at Elizabethport, N. J., shot her dead.

—It is believed that the schooner Elisabeth, from New York to Portland, Me., foundered at sea, and that all hands were lost.

—A Poughkeepsie, N. Y., dispatch states that the Assistant State Cattle Commissioner yesterday reported 1,000 head of diseased cattle in Dutchess county, and that the health of the county is seriously endangered by the people using the milk.

—The steamship Fairbank, from Wilmington to New York, was forced on the 19th to put into Hatteras Inlet for harbor during the heavy gale. From some unknown cause she took fire, and was completely destroyed, her crew barely escaping with their lives.

—A terrific explosion, causing the death of three men, occurred Friday night, in the iron foundry of Miller N. Difare, in Brooklyn. The water in the boiler being allowed to go too low, was the cause of the explosion. The engineer and firemen were instantly killed, and the dead body of a painter employed about the building was picked up in Bushwick creek, three hundred feet distant from the scene of the disaster.

—A fire occurred in Brooklyn Friday, eleven houses being destroyed and the occupants turned upon the streets with very little clothing. The fire originated in one of a row of two-story frame cottages, and the flames spread so rapidly from one to another that eleven were demolished before the firemen could check them. Twenty-two families are rendered houseless, and a good portion of their furniture destroyed.

—The Atlantic and Great Western mail train, bound west, on the 29th, ran off the track about five miles west of Meadville, near Sutton's. The rear car, which was filled with emigrants, was thrown down an embankment 30 feet, turning over several times. One man named Hopkins was killed, and two others badly hurt. One of them is not expected to recover. Fifteen others were slightly injured. The train was about two hours late, and was running very rapidly when the accident occurred. The cause is unknown, but is supposed to have been a poor rail, as one was found broken, and the ties were entirely broken off. The injured parties were brought to Meadville.

—The Marshall House, situated at the west end of the wire bridge over the Alleghany river at Franklin, Pa., took fire at 11 o'clock Friday morning. The flames communicated to the bridge, and the cables soon becoming red hot, parted from the anchorage, precipitating the bridge structure into the river. There were about twenty persons on the bridge at the time. Wm. Neil, a farmer; Mrs. McIntyre and Miss Mary McIntyre, wife and daughter of the toll-keeper, who were engaged in removing furniture on the bridge, were fatally injured. The bodies were recovered. Mary and George McIntyre, John and Alexander McCartey, J. Heange and two unknown persons, were seriously injured. Wilfred Kilgore, the freight agent of the Alleghany Valley Railroad, is supposed to be buried in the ruins, as he was known to have been on the bridge.

The West.

—McKay's block, on South Clark street, Chicago, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 29th ult.

—Wm. Lentz struck a man named Valentine, in Perry township, seven miles from Evansville, Ind., on the 29th, with an axe, cutting his left hand in two places, from which he bled to death.

—The Lawrenceburg (Ind.) Woolen Manufacturing Company has made an assignment. Their liabilities are near $200,000. Assets are estimated at $150,000. The mills were erected about four years ago.

—A San Francisco dispatch states that a blast of 60,000 pounds of powder was successfully exploded in the Blue Point gravel gold mine, recently. Gold-bearing earth two hundred feet square and seventy-five feet deep was lifted twenty feet and completely shattered. This is the greatest mining blast ever fired in California.

—On the 26th, Zach Brown, colored, was shot and killed by Wm. Lillytt, clerk of Mayor Morris. Brown was drunk and insulting, and Lillytt threatened to have him arrested, whereupon he made hostile demonstrations, causing Lillytt to shoot him through the head. Lillytt gave himself up to the police.

—The steam flouring mills of William Cottle & Sons, at Trafalgar, Johnson county, Ind., were injured by the explosion of a boiler. The proprietors, James M. Cottle and John M. Cottle, were fatally injured; and E. H. Joliff, foreman, William Pyster, James Feathergill and a son of Joliff, were considerably hurt. Low water in the boiler caused it.

—The Apache Indians are active, and are committing many murders and running off large herds of cattle. In the vicinity of Tucson, Arizona, on the 18th, a freight train on the Lilly, Ochoca and Poug, en route to Camp Goodwin, about thirty miles east of Tucson, was attacked by a large party of Indians, and after a sharp fight, in which Martin Rivera was killed, and two others wounded, the Indians got away with the oxen. The wounded men were brought to Tucson.

—George Smith's flouring mill in Watertown, Wis., together with all its contents, including the safe and several thousand bushels of wheat, was burned on the 29th. Loss, $40,000; insurance, [illegible],500. Mr. Smith has been peculiarly unfortunate, his residence, which was a fine one, having been destroyed by fire three months ago last night. [illegible]athaniel Blanchard was killed by falling from the roof of his own building, which stood opposite to the burning mill.

—The ice-boat Chesapeake, a steamer of great power, used for clearing Baltimore harbor and bay of ice, blew up Sunday, off Sandy Point, near Annapolis. One man was instantly killed and three others severely scalded. After the explosion, the Chesapeake was burned and sunk. She cost $135,000, and was insured for $95,000, principally in Baltimore offices.

—On Monday evening, Napoleon Brown and Frank Dean were riding together on the same horse in Platte county, Mo., when a quarrel took place between them, which resulted in Dean stabbing Brown twenty-one times, killing him instantly. Brown is nineteen years old, and a son of Judge Thomas Brown, of Buchanan county.

—Last Saturday afternoon, at Brownestown, Jefferson county, Ky., some men and boys filled a hollow anvil with powder, placed another anvil upon it, that the explosion might be loud, when an explosion occurred. One piece of the anvil struck a negro, Josh Lawson in the breast, killing him instantly. A boy in the party was slightly injured at the same time in a bar-room.

—A Washington dispatch says: "Surratt's re-appearance to public notice has brought out a fact concerning him which has never heretofore been published. It is stated on the most responsible authority that when his mother was on trial here, Judge Advocate Holt consented to release her if he (Surratt) would give himself up for trial. Surratt was informed of this by his friends, who were in communication with him. Instead of complying and thereby securing the release of his mother, he immediately absconded, leaving her to her fate."

—Dr. Stillman Spooner, of Oneida, N. Y., a homœopathic surgeon, has been struck from the list of examining pension surgeons by Commissioner H. Van Aarnum on the ground that all examining surgeons for the bureau should belong to one school and adopt but one theory of medicine recognized by the bureau. Dr. Spooner protests in a long letter to the Commissionor against the insult thus offered the large and influential body of homœopathic practitioners in the United States.

—A destructive fire occurred at Nevasota, Texas, Sunday morning. Sixteen buildings were consumed. The sufferers are: E. J. Johnson, B. Goodman, J. W. Peterson, G. Coburg, Fox & Black, H. D. Patrick, W. White & Co., Arnold, Bridge & Co., A. Levington, J. W. Hageman, J. Ettis, A. Montgomery, J. P. Shaffer, Storey & Streaten, Smith & Powell, B. F. Rucker, H. Levy, and the Masonic Hall. —A terrible affair occurred at Lauderdale, Miss., last Wednesday. Mrs. Clayton sent a negro named Jeff and her sons, aged 13 and 26, to town with a bag of cotton to be sold, Jeff having an interest in the cotton. After selling, a dispute arose between him and the boys about his share. All started home, the boys in a wagon, and the negro on a mule. When a short distance from town Jeff rode up to the wagon and shot Gabe Clayton, the eldest boy, in the face, mortally wounding him. The negro was arrested, and on Thursday, after an examination, was ordered to be committed to jail. While in charge of a constable at the station 15 or 20 masked men rode up, and taking the prisoner, carried him off a short distance, and shot him to death.

—A St. Louis dispatch gives the following statistics of that city for the past year, which show a large increase of business over 1869. Foreign.

—Completion of the Mont Cenis Tunnel. A dispatch from Susa announces that the Alps were pierced through on th 26th, and that the workmen from both ends of the Mont Cenis tunnel joined in congratulatins upon the completion of the great work.

—The intensely cold weather causes fearful mortality among the German wounded. Nearly all the occupants of fifty-six carriages, filled with soldiers wounded at the assault upon Belfort, on the 21st of December, were frozen to death before the train reached Chatenos.

—The sinking of six English ships in the Seine, by the Prussians, for the purpose of obstructing navigation, has occasioned great indignation throughout England. The British vice consul at Rouen has presented the Prussian commander a formal protest against acts of spoilation committed upon British subjects in the city.

—The steamship City of Baltimore, at Queenstown, from New York, reports having passed, 800 miles from Fastnet, a steamer, black, with white ports, who reported a loss of crew. She was bound east under sail, and wanted no assistance. She is thought to be the Virginia, which left New York Dec. 3, for Queenstown and Liverpool.

—Dispatches from Versailles, received here, state that the general evacuation of the departments of East Paris, which had been occupied by German troops, still continues. It is thought that this is being done in order to concentrate Prussian strength around Versailles.

—Advices from Santiago de Cuba, dated the 23d, state that on the 18th, three hundred insurgents, including forty negresses, armed with cutlasses, burned Socapa, a fishing village, distant five miles from that city, opposite the the Morro fortress at the mouth of the harbor. They found the small detachment of defenders to retreat, and killed nine persons, including two women.

—The Prussians, on Wednesday, furiously attacked Forts Rosny, Nugent and [illegible] teries were unmasked, and an attempt made at a [illegible] bombardment of the position, but the attack was repulsed, with heavy loss. The morale of Paris is exceedingly good.

—Accounts received at Bourdeaux show that both Prussian and French troops have suffered terribly from cold. Strong reinforcements have been sent forward to all points to replace the French soldiers thus incapacitated. Vast quantities of material, calculated to increase the comfort of the troops, have been also sent to the front.

—Bourbaki's command is charged especially with the duty of revictualling Paris, and has already on hand a vast amount of live stock and provisions for that purpose. At the proper moment this army will make a desperate effort to join Chaufey's forces and reunite the Army of the Loire, which will then, with great energy, push on for Paris.

—The World's special from London says: "The Manchester Guardian contains a statement that King William and the princess royal of Prussia wrote to the queen that they were opposed to the marriage of Princess Louise with the marquis of Lorne. The queen replied with vehemence, advising them to mind their own business. The incident has materially changed the feelings of the court toward Germany."

—Balloon advices from Paris are down to 4 o'clock on the morning of the 27th. The citizens and soldiers were in excellent spirits, and are still determined on a vigorous defense. Intensely cold weather had suspended military operations in good part. Preparations are making on a large scale, and important results are looked for. The preparations had imbued the inhabitants with increased confidence.

—Under orders from Generals Bressoles, Bremens and Garibaldi, the army of Bordeaux is to march directly on Paris. As the French advance the inhabitants hasten to join the ranks, and thus the army increases rapidly. Numbers of the smaller towns now resist the enemy, as in the case of Tours, which, in consequence of the combat at Manual, was not occupied by the Germans. At Argent and Cog the Prussians were repulsed by the population.

—Official contradiction is given to the dispatches of the Prussians, which falsely represent the Port Noyelle battle as a German victory, and in which they also claim to have taken some French troops prisoners. Not a single Frenchman was captured. The Prussians have lost heavily in battle and from sickness in the north and northeast of France. The villages are encumbered with German wounded. Great numbers of German soldiers are suffering from opthalmia. There are 10,000 sick and wounded Germans at Chalons sur Marne.

—A special to the World from London contains a dispatch from Versailles, dated Dec. 23, which says: "A scheme to assassinate the king of Prussia, Von Moltke, and Bismark was discovered here a few days since. A number of strangers arrived in the city on Wednesday, when the gates were closed and the citizens ordered to remain in their houses on pain of death. The patrols then searched every place, and arrested 200 persons, of whom 70 were armed with guns and pistols."

—A dispatch from Blois the 22d says: Plenty fighting, but no battles within the past ten days by the army which is operating on both sides of the river, and has possession of the country in the neighborhood of Orleans and Blois. The result may be a retreat through the latter city without a general action. Every day the outposts have a collision, and the lines of one side or the other are shelled. The French have repulsed the enemy, but every night have slept a little nearer Blois, on the north side of the river. The engagements have taken place for the most part on the triangle formed by Beaugency, Mien, and Marchenoir. Five days' skirmishing in that quarter has filled the hospitals with wounded, and the roads in rear of the army with stragglers. On the other side the same continual and moderate activity is kept up, the Prussians always taking the initiative, and always seeking a weak place.

Death of Gen. Prim.

Madrid, Dec. 30.—Marshal Prim died last night from his wounds. All those engaged in his assassination, six in number, have escaped. The death of Gen. Prim has intensified the excitement in this city. The Marshal retained consciousness to the last, and, when made aware of the rapid approach of death, bade adieu to his friends, and, it is said, expressed much anxiety for the safety of the King. Great apprehensions of an outbreak of the conspirators exists, but the government is making efforts to allay the excitement. The Cortes has adopted a resolution of honor to the memory of Gen. Prim. It declares that the deceased deserved well of the country, and places his family under the protection of the nation. The Cortes also adopted a vote of confidence in the government.

How a Boy Wakes Up.

There he lies in his crib, a nut brown stub of four years. He sleeps the sleep of healthy childhood. In the same position he lay when he dropped into unconsciousness, one arm under his head, one leg kicked out from under the coverlet. He is perfectly motionless. His round cheek pillows itself on the extended arm, and his legs seem to have been arrested in the middle of the last restless kick, as the curtain fell over his blue eyes, and he was asleep. You can scarcely perceive his regular respiration. A train of cars thunders by without noise—he might be carried across the street without awakening.

It is morning; daylight streams into the windows; the sun shines on the hill-tops. The sounds of stirring life are beginning to be heard about the house. Watch the boy. Still and motionless as a figure of marble. As you look, the gates of sleep are suddenly unlocked. He is awake in a twinkling—awake all over. His blue eyes are wide open and bright—his lips part with a shout—his legs fly out in different directions—his arms are in rapid motion—he flops over with a spring—in ten seconds he has turned a couple of somersaults, and presents before you a living illustration of perpetual motion. There is no deliberate yawning, no slow stretching of indolent limbs, no lazy rubbing of sleepy eyes, no gradually becoming awake about it. With a snap like a pistol shot, he is thoroughly awake and kicking—wide awake to she top of each particular hair. The wonderful thing about it is its suddenness and completeness.

Three Southdown Bucks have recently been imported into New York for the large sheepfold now in course of erection in the Central Park. It is stated that specimens of the Cotswold and Leicester breeds, as well as sheep from Saxony, will be imported for the Park, so that visitors will have an opportunity of inspecting the different varieties of this valuable domestic animal.

The celebrated Durand divorce case of New York has been settled. Durand, a prominent merchant of that city, was sued for $45,000 damages, claimed by his wife for disowning her. He claimed that she was not his wife, and never was. Thinking her demand for $45,000 exorbitant, he persuaded her to throw off $44,000, and take the balance, and so she did.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

Nilsson Concerts and Reception—[illegible]—Rooms—Amusements.

Chicago, Dec. 27th, 1870.—The sensations of the past week were the Nilsson concerts at the Opera House, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, and Saturday afternoon at Farwell Hall, and her reception by the Scandinavians at the German House Thursday evening. Her concerts were very fully attended, and musically, popularly and pecuniarily were a great success. She was assisted by Miss Louisa Carey, Brignoli, Verger and Vieuxtemps. She gives two concerts this week, Thursday and Friday evenings, and a matinee Saturday afternoon, at Farwell Hall. No singer has ever given the citizens of Chicago so much as Miss Nilsson.

THE NILSSON RECEPTION

was a great occasion among her countrymen. Music, feasting, toasts and speeches were the order of proceedings, and Miss Nilsson was presented with a laurel wreath of gold, beautiful and costly.

THE COLD WEATHER

the past week came upon us suddenly and severely, the thermometer Friday morning varying as low as seven degrees below zero. With the opening of this week the weather began to moderate, till to-day it thaws in the streets. About six inches of snow fell a week ago, and an inch or two more last Sunday, but very few sleighs are yet seen in the street.

CHRISTMAS

was quite generally observed both on Sunday and Monday, the stores being generally closed, and the week day kept as a holiday. As usual, there was some dissipation, and one case came to my knowledge where a wife fled to a neighbor's to save her life from the fury of a drunken husband.

BUSINESS

is now at the dullest season, sales are moderate and collections slow. But the pork-packing business, which has now began in earnest, will distribute a vast deal of money, and make money plentier in the country. There have been several recent of merchants, though none of very large amount. Some have wound up and others compromised with their creditors and gone on again. The high price of is a great load for business men to carry, cutting up their profits and in some cases diminishing their capital. Landlords will will have to reduce their rents, or have empty stores or bankrupt tenants.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

The art of transferring the likeness of the human face and form has reached a great degree of perfection. In canvass painting, where the eye guides the hand in limning the features and tracing the shape, size and relations of the different parts, there is necessarily more or less imperfection. But when the sun was made pencil-holder and painter the likenesses were true to nature, and daguerreotypes, ambrotypes and photographs succeeded each other, and now pictures are taken on wood, porcelain, and the different metals. There are several styles of pictures, recently introduced by the best artists, that are deservedly popular.

1. The Rembrandt, or shadow picture, so called because the lights and shadings are after the style of the great master. These pictures are very fine, and the artistic effects most striking.

2. The Berlin Vignette; very large sized heads, from retouched negatives. A peculiar style, very beautiful and popular.

3. Medallion Heads, resembling the Berlin Vignette, but differing from it in the style of printing.

4. Victoria Cards, in size between the Carte de Visite and the Cabinet—the largest size that can be put in a letter envelope, and very appropriate for the large Berlin Vignette or Rembrandt.

5. Porcelain Pictures, of all sizes, from miniature to life, the most beautiful of all styles for portraits, for they can be finished equal to the finest ivory pictures.

A great improvement in photography is the retouching of negatives before painting. To do this successfully requires the highest skill of our best artists. The best specimens of the art, in the various styles of pictures, can be seen in the photograph studio of successor to J. Carbut, whose well-known Photographic Art Gallery he has purchased, with all its art treasures, improved upon its methods and increased its reputation and attractions. Mr. Sawyer, though a recent comer, is a pioneer in the art, took the silver medal for the best daguerreotypes, ambrotypes and photographs, at the Maine State Agricultural Fair, in 1859, and stood in the front rank of his profession, at the East. He excels especially in the Rembrandt and Porcelain pictures. I saw some exceedingly beautiful pictures in these,—as well as other —styles there, exquisitely finished, with a perfection of light and shade, a softness and naturalness of flesh tint, with a glow of life which no artist could equal on canvas, and which rival the finest ivory portraits. He has also special arrangements for taking children's pictures, and ample facilities for executing work in every department of the photographic art. Using only the purest chemicals, and the best stock, and employing only the best artists, his Gallery is the favorite resort of the lovers of art, and those who wish the finest pictures, at reasonable prices, should visit his studio, when they come to Chicago.

AMUSEMENTS.

All through this week the theaters and places of amusement present unusual attractions. Fisk's Opera Troupe of Blondes open their season at Crosby's Opera House Wednesday evening, the 28th inst., in the grand pageant of Twelve Temptations.

J. K. Emmett is starring it at McVicker's, in "Our Cousin German."

Aiken's Museum has a great variety of attractions.

Manning's Minstrels, at the Dearborn, have some new and mirth-provoking performances, and Allen's Globe Theater, on the West Side, are running Paul Pry, and the Omnibus and The Thicket-of-Leave Man. B.

An Eventful Week.

Being a page from the Private Diary of Miss——

Monday—Went with Jenny to Stewart's to choose a new rep for the autumn. Couldn't decide upon one, so, got Jenny to buy gloves for herself, and came away.

Tuesday—Went again to Stewart's Chose the rep.

Wednesday—The rep came home. Heard from John, who sent some of his hair, but no locket to put it in!

Thursday—Began cutting out the rep. Went out to tea at Mrs. Slammer's, and didn't enjoy myself at all.

Friday—Went on at the rep. Shall I "gore" it much at the waist, or only a little? Thought a good deal. Could not decide. Mem—To write and ask Lizzie Martin what she thinks about "goring."

Saturday—Wrote to Lizzie. Began at skirt. Wonder what Lizzie will say? Made the sweetest thing in paniers. Wrote to John, and sent him some of my new "plait;" it's a better color than my own, and he will not know the difference; also hinted about a locket.

Sunday—Went to church at St. Alban's. Saw such a pretty bonnet on such a plain head. Wondered about the rep —should I have a basque and a pouf? Long sermon. Wondered whether mamma would give me a new bonnet before thanksgiving.

Sunday evening—Went to church again. Long sermon. Thought about John, and whether he would send a locket. Thought about the dress—should I have it made open, square, or en chale, so as to wear in as well as out of doors. Mem—If I do, must have a chemisette of the same stuff to put under,

Monday morning—Heard from Lizzie. "'Gore' it in well at the waist." Such a weight off my mind.

Monday afternoon—Began the "goring."

A woman living in Pennsylvania recently had her eyesight restored by an operation, after having been blind for several years. The first thing she did, after objects became visible, was to sit down and read a number of letters, which she presumed had been sent to her husband by ladies during her blindness. The feelings of the poor woman can be better imagined than described when she found that her jealousy had been occasioned by a number of coal and washing bills.

CHAPTER I.

A FEARFUL CATASTROPHE.

A wild storm was raging upon the Mediterranean Sea, near the close of a dreary November day, and sky and waters were black with the gloom of the sudden and furious tempest, before which a small sailing vessel was scudding under bare poles. Her build and rigging proclaimed her Sardinian. She was The Gull, Captain Varino, master, on her way from Cagliari to Palermo.

She had on board two seamen, and two passengers.

These passengers were Englishmen, who had procured passage on The Gull to Palermo, whence they intended to embark by steamer to Marseilles, the following day.

While the Captain and his assistants were attending to their duties, and expressing apprehensions as to their safety, the two Englishmen stood apart, leaning against the low bulwarks, and surveying the wild scene around them.

These men were both young, apparently of the same age, about three and twenty, but evidently they were not of the same station in life.

One, the more striking of the two, was aristocratic in his bearing, tall, slender and handsome, with a frank, smiling mouth, a pair of fearless blue eyes, set under a wide and massive forehead, and tawny hair blowing back from his face. Noble, generous and kind-hearted, he had an adventurous disposition and a dauntless courage.

He was Guy Tressilian, the only son and heir of Sir Arthur Tressilian, Baronet, of Tressilian Court, England.

His companion presented a remarkable resemblance to him, being also tall and slender and fair, with tawny hair and mustache, but he had not the frank smile, the bright, fearless look, or the joyous spirit that characterized young Tressilian. Young as he was, he had seen much of the dark side of life, and his experience had been such as to develop in him some of the worst qualities of his nature.

He was Jasper Lowder, Guy Tressilian's hired travelling companion and bosom-friend.

The meeting and connection of the two had a touch of romance. Young Tressilian had spent four years in a German university, whence he had been graduated with honor. On leaving the university, in obedience to his father's written command, he had undertaken a tour of the countries inclosing the Mediterranean Sea, in company with one of his late tutors. This gentleman being unexpectedly promoted to a professorship, abandoned Tressilian at Baden, leaving him to find another travelling companion.

On the evening of the very day after this desertion, as Guy Tressilian was sauntering through the streets of Baden, he had been assaulted by a trio of his own countrymen, all more or less intoxicated. It was apparent that they took him for another, and intended to wreak vengeance upon him. Without allowing him to speak, they forced him to defend himself. Guy was getting the worst of the conflict, when a stranger came running to his assistance, and in a few moments the two had put the ruffians to flight.

This stranger who came so opportunely to Guy's assistance was Jasper Lowder. His resemblance to young Tressilian awakened in the latter a romantic interest. He questioned Lowder, learned that he was poor and alone in the world, and took him with him to his hotel. Believing that the similarity of features indicated a similarity of tastes and natures, he engaged Lowder as his travelling companion, and the past year they had spent together more like brothers than like employer and employed.

"This storm is a regular Levanter," said Lowder, clinging with both hands to the bulwarks. "Do you think the craft will stand it, Tressilian?"

"Oh, yes," answered young Tressilian, wiping the salt spray from his face. "The Captain knows the Sicilian coast perfectly. In two hours, or less, we shall be in the bay of Palermo. In three hours we shall be domiciled in the best rooms of the hotel Trinacria, with the best supper which Messer Ragusas can furnish. And to-morrow, at noon," he added, "we shall embark for Marseilles in a Messageries steamer."

"And from Marseilles you will proceed to England and to Tressilian Court," said Lowder, with some bitterness. "And I—what is to become of me? I have had a year of unalloyed happiness, and now comes back the drudgery, the hopeless toil, the anxieties of the wretched old life. You picked me up at Baden, a poor adventurer seeking to gain a living by teaching English, and the same destiny is open to me now."

Tressilian turned his handsome face upon his companion in surprise and affectionate reproach.

"Jasper!" he exclaimed, "you talk strangely. Do you suppose I have called you friend and brother so long, and loved you so well, to lose you now? I meant to have written to my father concerning you and your future, Jasper, but his sudden recall, received yesterday, causes me to return home without writing. I shall telegraph from Marseilles that you will come home with me. And you will, will you not? You will not abandon me, my friend? I will charge myself with your future. I will see that you obtain the position to which your talents entitle you. You have no ties to keep you on the Continent?"

"No, I have no ties," he said huskily.

"And you will go home with me?"

"What will your father say to my coming?" demanded Lowder. "He will think your generosity Quixotic. He will dismiss from his house the hired companion who dares to resemble his son—"

A sudden lurch of the little vessel, a wave sweeping over the deck, interrupted the sentence.

"You wrong my father," said Tressilian, his blue eyes kindling, when the vessel had righted. "He is the noblest man in the world. He will welcome my friends as his own. You will love him, Jasper, as I do, when you know him."

"He doesn't seem very affectionate," remarked Lowder. "You have been away from your home for five years, and he has but just recalled you!"

Young Tressilian's cheeks flushed, as Lowder saw in the lurid glow that momentarily lighted up the tempestuous scene.

"You know, or can guess, the reason, Jasper," he said, with something of an effort. "My father has a ward, the daughter of an old friend.—Ah! hear that wild shriek! The gale is increasing!"

"Yes," assented Lowder. "And the ward is Miss Irby—the golden-haired Blanche of whom you have talked so much, and with whom you have exchanged letters!"

"Yes. My father formed a project to have me marry Blanche. He did not wish us to grow up together, lest we should learn to regard each other as brother and sister. When Blanche came to live at the Court my father sent me to Germany. The night before I left home, he called me into his library and told me all his hopes and plans for the future, and entreated me to continue worthy of his innocent ward, and to keep my heart pure for her. I have done so, Jasper. I have never yet loved any woman. And yesterday I received my father's summons to come home. He has recalled me after five years of absence. I know the wish that lies nearest his heart. He wants me to return and marry Blanche. I shrink from the proposed marriage. I dread going home. And I dread offending my dear father, whom I love better than any woman. It is hard, Jasper, to revolt against the hopes and plans of a kind and generous father, whose very love for me causes him to urge on this marriage!"

"Is it?" said Lowder dryly, and with a strange smile full of sneering bitterness. "My experience has been widely different from yours, Tressilian. Did I ever tell you of my father?"

"No. I took it for granted that he is dead."

"Perhaps he is. I don't know," said Lowder, with a reckless laugh. "But if he is living, he is a scoundrel. Don't start, Tressilian, at my unfilial speech. Wait till you hear my story. I am in a desperate mood to-night. This storm stirs up the bad within me. As nearly as I can discover, my father was the youngest son of a proud old county family—"

"You do not know, then?" asked Tressilian, pressing his companion's hand.

"I have no proofs of it. All I positively know, is this. My mother was of humble station, pretty, with blue eyes and an apple-blossom face, and tender, appealing ways. She was the daughter of a widow, residing at Brighton. The widow, my grandmother, kept a lodging-house, and my father, a gay, dashing young fellow, came to lodge with her. As might have been expected, he fell in love with his landlady's daughter. He offered the young girl marriage, on condition that the union should be kept secret until his affairs brightened and he chose to divulge it. The young girl loved him. Her mother was ambitious and penurious. The result was the lover had his way, and married the [illegible] his landlady secretly, almost [illegible]. Then he took his bride to London, to cheap and [illegible] lodgings, where, a year later I was born."

The wind for a moment drowned his voice. As it presently failed, he resumed [illegible], and with passionate bitterness:

"For years my mother and I lived in those stuffy, obscure lodgings until her bloom had faded, and she had grown thin and wan and nervous. My father visited us at stated seasons, once or twice a week, but he never brought any of his family to call upon us. I doubt if his aristocratic relatives even suspected the existence of the faded wife and son of whom he was secretly ashamed. I have good reason to believe that he had fine lodgings at the West End, where he was supposed to be a bachelor, and that he went into fashionable society, while my poor mother and I lived securely. He was a profligate and a roue, but he had an air of fashion that awakened my boyish admiration and aroused my mother's affectionate pride in him. She was always pleading to be introduced to his relatives, and to have her son publicly acknowledged. But my father always put her off, saying that he was not yet ready. Worn out and despairing, my mother died when I was ten years old."

The captain screamed his orders to his men, and for a few minutes disorder reigned.

"A nasty bit of weather!" said Lowder. "And a bad sky!"

"Yes, but I've seen as bad," returned Tressilian. "We shall make port all right, never fear. We must be well on toward the Cape di Gallo. And it's only seven miles from the Cape to Palermo."

"But the seven miles in this storm are worse than seventy in good weather. These coasts are dangerous, Tressilian."

Lowder shuddered as he surveyed sea and sky.

"But about your father, Jasper?" asked Tressilian, who had become deeply interested in his companion's story. "What did he do after your mother's death?"

"I remained at the old lodgings with our single old servant a month or more, my father visiting me several times, and expressing anxiety as to what he should do with me. A week after my mother's death, he told me that his brother was dead. A month later, his father was killed by being thrown from his horse. My father came into riches and honors by these deaths. At last, deciding to rid himself of me, he took me down to Brighton, to my old grandmother. Her sons were dead; she had given up keeping lodgers, and was grown miserly. He promised her five hundred pounds a year to keep me, and to keep also the secret of my paternity, solemnly promising to acknowledge me some day as his son and heir. The old woman agreed to carry out his wishes. She would have done anything for money. I went to school, grew up, at the age of twenty-one came into my grandmother's money, the fruits of years of saving, she dying at that time. My father had deliberately abandoned me. I did not know where to seek him, if I had wished to. I took my money and came abroad. I had been two years on the Continent, and had spent my little fortune when I met you. The rest you know."

"An odd, romantic story! But why did your father abandon you?"

"That he might be freed of encumbrance to make a grand marriage. From what my grandmother said at different times, I conclude that my father was in love with a titled lady before my mother's death. No doubt he married this lady. If he lives, this lady's son may be his acknowledged heir. My father has utterly disowned the son of his first hasty, ill-starred marriage. I have a fancy that I will meet him some day," and Jasper's brow deepened to deeper blackness. "However, I stand no chance of ever receiving justice at his hands."

"What is your father's name, Jasper?" asked Tressilian.

Lowder's face darkened. He bit his lip savagely.

"What I have told you about myself I learned from my own observation, or from chance words of my parents and grandmother. My mother's maiden name was Jeanette Lowder. At our London lodgings, my father bore the name of Lowder. I don't know his real name, but I should know his face anywhere, although I have not seen him in thirteen years. My mother was actually married, Tressilion, but I never heard my father's name. The clergyman who married my mother was dead; the witnesses also. When my grandmother was dying she tried to tell me the story. She had put it off too long. All that I could understand of her mumblings was the name of Devereux. I shall never forget that name—'Devereux!' Probably that was my father's name —my own rightful name. But as I should never find him if I sought him, and as he would repulse me if I did find him, I stand no chance of inheriting his property. He may be dead. He may have other sons who have succeeded him. It is all a mystery, but the prominent truth is that I am an outcast, poor, disowned and friendless."

Tressilian's heart warmed to him.

"My poor friend!" he said. "Must I say again, you are not friendless while I live. My father has influence enough to obtain for you a government appointment. This tangle may straighten itself out some day. But if it don't, you are resolute enough to make your own happiness."

He grasped Lowder'r hand, and looked with warm, bright eyes, full of sympathy, into Lowder's lowering face.

There had been a temporary lull in the storm. But as the two stood there the tempest revived and swept over the wild sea in maddened rage.

There was no time for talking now. The wind rose so high that the words would scarcely have been distinguished. The storm that had gone before had been but play to this awful outburst. The vessel drove on, creaking and groaning, a mere cockle shell on the billows.

"Mother of Mercies!" wailed the captain. "It's all up with us, signors. I can't make out the cape in this darkness. We shall go on the rocks. St Anthony save us!"

The seamen echoed his cries.

For the next few minutes it seemed that a Pandemonium reigned.

Then a noise like the report of a cannon suddenly boomed through the storm and the darkness. The little vessel shivered, staggered, and careened upon her side.

She had struck upon a rock.

A moment later crew and passengers were struggling in the water.

A few moments of buffetings and tossings, of vain struggles and agonized, involuntary prayer, and then Jasper Lowder felt his senses slip from him, and became unconscious.

When he came to himself, he was lying upon a rocky beach of the Sicilian shore, sore, bruised, and weak as a child.

He opened his eyes. The wind had spent its fury, and now moaned along the coast with a desolate, despairing wail. The waves beat against the rocks.

Lowder struggled to his elbow.

"Wrecked!" he muttered. "I am cast ashore, while the others are drowned. Oh, this is terrible! I have lost my best friend to-night!"

He moaned and wrung his hands.

"He is dead, who would have done so much for me, and I so worthless am saved! All my hopes of an easy and luxurious life must be resigned now!"

At that moment he beheld a dark object at a little distance in the water. The waves hurled this object against the projecting head of a sunken rock. At the same instant Lowder secognized it as the body of a man.

He crept toward it, and the waters dashed the body on the shore at his feet. He put his hands on the face. How cold and wet it was! It felt like the face of a dead man. Lowder's fingers came in contact with the soft, silken moustache, and he knew that the body was that of Guy Tressilian!

Of the five who had stood on the sloop's deck a half-hour earlier, these two alone were left. The captain and his crew had found their deaths among the cruel, yawning waters.

Lowder thrust his hand under the waistcoat of his friend, but he could not perceive the beating of his heart. Despair took possession of him.

"Dead!" he said shrilly. "Dead! And he would have done so much for me if he had lived! And his father and the young girl he was to have married will wait in vain for his coming. His place at Tressilian Court is empty. Who can fill it?"

A thought came to him—a thought so strange and sinister that he shivered involuntarily. Again he felt of Tressilian's heart. It gave no throb against his hand. He passed his hand over Tressilian's head, and discovered a gaping wound in the skull. The hair was clotted with blood.

Putting his hand into his breast pocket, Lowder drew out his little water-proof match safe. He opened it with trembling fingers and struck a light. The red flicker danced on young Tressilian's face.

[illegible] how ghastly and terrible it seemed. [illegible] eyes were [illegible] the [illegible] was gone. [illegible]

Lowder examined the wound. It had been made by contact with the sharp rocks, and even Lowder perceived its terrible character.

"If he is not dead, he soon will be," he muttered. "His brain has received an awful injury. He will never know who he is again. He won't live till morning, and he is perhaps dead already. He must be dead!"

Again it seemed to him as though some demon echoed his words.

The match dropped from his fingers into the water. For a little while he crouched on the wet stones in silence, battling, it may be with the better and nobler instincts of his nature.

At last, with sudden and abrupt stealthiness, his hand stole into the breast pocket of Tressilian, and drew out his private note-book, a packet of letters, a few trinkets. He secured these among his own wet garments. Their possession seemed to give him courage, and his face hardened, and he knelt beside the body of his friend and rifled his garments of all that they contained, bestowing the plunder en his own person.

Then he took his own purse, his note book, a few receipts and trifles from his own pockets, and put them in the pockets of Tressilian.

"It is done!" he whispered to himself, looking with wild defiant eyes through the darkness. "No one is harmed. He is dead. If he had lived, he would have provided for me. As he is dying or dead, I must provide for myself. This likeness between us will make my fortune. His friends will be spared a terrible grief, and I—I shall live at last! Fortune gives me a chance to gain name and wealth at one lucky stroke!"

As if to give himself no chance for repentance, he arose to his feet and turned his searching glance in an inland direction. A light, as from a cottage window, glimmering faintly through the thick haze caught his gaze.

Raising his voice, he called loudly:

"Help! Ho, there! help!"

The wind had abated, and his cries rang out through the night with startling distinctness. The light he had seen moved and disappeared. A minute later answering cries reached Lowder's ears, and he heard hasty steps, and saw the approaching light of a lantern, borne aloft by a man's upraised arm.

"This way!" shouted Lowder. "We are wrecked on the rocks! For the love of Heaven, hasten!"

The bearer of the lantern, attended by a male companion, came running to him, and was soon at his side. The lantern bearer was a rough Sicilian fisherman, a grade above his class. His companion was also Sicilian, but evidently of somewhat higher degree. Both were all excitement, astonishment and sympathy.

In as few words as possible Lowder told the story of the shipwreck, and called attention to the condition of his noble young employer.

"I think he is dead!" he said, in a choking voice. "Carry him up to your cabin. Let everything be done that can be done to save him. I will pay you well for any kindness to him. Poor fellow! He was my travelling companion. I loved him as if he had been my brother instead of only my hired attendant! Poor Jasper!"

The two Sicilians lifted the helpless form of poor young Tressilian, and carried it between them toward their cottage. Jasper Lowder followed them bewailing his loss.

Dickens' Poetry.

When the lessons and tasks are all ended,
And the school for the day is dismissed,
And the little ones gather around me,
To bid me good night and be kissed;
Oh! the little white arms that encircle
My neck in a tender embrace!
Oh! the smiles that are halos of heaven,
Shedding sunshine of love on my face!

And when they are gone, I sit dreaming
Of my childhood too lovely to last;
Of love that my heart will remember,
When it wakes to the pulse of the past,
Ere the world and its wickedness made me
A partner of sorrow and sin,
When the glory of God was about me,
And the glory of gladness within.

Oh! the heart grows weak as a woman's,
And the fountain of feeling will flow,
When I think of the paths steep and stony
Where the feet of the dear ones must go;
Of the mountains of sin hanging o'er them,
Of the tempest of fate blowing wild;
Oh! there is nothing on earth half so holy
As the innocent heart of a child!

They are idols of hearts and of households;
They are angels of God in disguise;
His sunlight still sleeps in their tresses,
His glory still gleams in their eyes;
Oh! these truants from home and from heaven,
They have made me more manly and mild;
And I know how Jesus could liken
The kingdom of God to a child.

I ask not a life for the dear ones,
All radiant, as others have done,
But that life may have just enough shadow
To temper the glare of the sun;
I would pray God to guard them from evil,
But my prayer would bound back to myself:
Ah! a seraph may pray for a sinner,
But a sinner must pray for himself.

The twig is so easily bended;
I have banished the rule and the rod;
I have taught them the goodness of knowledge,
They have taught me the goodness of God.
My heart is a dungeon of darkness,
Where I shut them from breaking a rule;
My frown is sufficient correction,
My love is the law of the school.

I shall leave the old house in the autumn,
To traverse its threshold no more,
Ah! how shall I sigh for the dear ones,
That meet me each morn at the door!
I shall miss the good nights and the kisses,
And the gush of their innocent glee,
The group on the green, and the flowers
That are brought every morning to me.

I shall miss them at morn and at eve,
Their song in the school and the street;
I shall miss the low hum of their voices,
And the tramp of their delicate feet.
When the lessons and tasks are all ended,
And death says, "The school is dismissed!"
May the little ones gather around me,
To bid me good-night and be kissed.

A WINTER NIGHT'S RIDE IN THE SIERRA.

My medical friend had puffed away at his cigar for some minutes in silence; and then, throwing away the stump, quietly began:

It was in the winter of 1868–69, when I had just been placed in charge of a division near the summit of the Sierra Nevada, on the then half-finishe Centrald Pacific Railroad. After a long day's ride, I came back to the boarding-house at ten o'clock in the evening, and was told that a messenger had been there from Camp No.—, with a request that I should lose no time in hurrying over there to attend upon John Smith, who was in a very critical condition. The messenger had been very urgent, and it was evidently a case of life and death—nothing less. I took a few moments to consides. I was tired out and wanted sleep badly, but I could, on a pinch, go a little further without breaking down entirely.

The moon would be up at 11 o'clock, and the night was still and clear, though the snow had only just ceased falling and was from five to six feet on a level, if you can use the expressien properly where there is nothing like a level to be found, and the road—or trails, rather—are obliterated by the drifts. I inquired the location of Camp No.—. It was twelve miles away, and directly over a ridge or spur of the mountains. My own horse could not stand the trip, but a big lubber of a cart-horse, that they said was a good saddle-horse, was offered me. I got supper, put on dry socks, and an extra pair of fur-lined over-boots, and just before midnight was in the saddle and off.

A good saddle-horse! The brute belonged to the nightmare family, and his mother must have taken special pride in him. Great heavens, what a gait! He had traveled so long in the cart that the steady jolt had communicated itself to his spine and became chronic. At every step he jerked his back up, as if expecting to feel the girth-strap strike him underneath, and neither curses nor blows would induce him for a moment to recognize the fact that he was out of the shafts, and abandon his eternal hyptyhop. When I started out there were hard lumps in the saddle as large as chestnuts; before the twelve miles were half completed the lumps had grown to the size of paving stones, and awfully sharp-edged and rasping. The snow which had just fallen filled the trail, but the old snow underneath being hard packed, and the trees along the route well blazed, I had no difficulty in keeping in the right track most of the time.

But when about three miles from my destination, as near as I could guess, clouds obscured the moon for a long time and I lost the road. I kept on as I knew how, guessing at the location of Camp No.—, and after rolling down the steep sides of the ravine, and working half an hour to get old Jerky back upon the ridge, filling my overshoes with snow, fairly exhausting myself in floundering through the drifts, I was rewarded with the sight of lights in some cabins half a mile away. No doubt that this was Camp No.—, I rounded a small canon, worked my way over a point of rocks, Jerky stumbled and falling repeatedly, and reached the cabins at 12 o'clock.

The lights had disappeared. "Halloo the house, there!" No answer. "Halloo the house!" louder and longer than before. A panel in the side of the nearest cabin opened slowly and cautiously, and after time enough had elapsed to allow of a critical examination of the party outside, a voice demanded: "Who you, John? What you wantee catchee here?" It was a Chinese wood-cutter's camp, and there was not a white man about the place.

The Johns told me that there was a camp of white men on the other side of the ravine I had just crossed, and perhaps half a mile further up the mountain; they thought it might be Camp Number.

Half an hour's floundering through the snow brought me back to the point where I had sighted the lights, and soon after 1 A. M. I reached the white men's camp. I roused the inmates more easily here, as they were indulging in a friendly game o "pitch" or "draw"—that being Saturday night—and had not retired to their virtuous bunks. No, that was not Camp No.—, my informer told me, and what was worse, Camp No.— was right over the summit of the mountain, a mile and a half away. I could go round by the trail, three miles, or ride up to the railroad track, tie my horse, and walk through the snow sheds, a little more than a mile—it was contrary to the rules to take an animal inside the sheds.

I started up toward the track, and reached it at 2 a. m. The night was now clear and still; not the least noise could be heard, and the silence was something awful and oppressive. The last man and the last horse on earth will not feel more completely alone than Jerky and I did at that moment. As I was about to dismount and tie him to a tree, a thought struck me. I knew every regular train on the road, and there was none due for hours from either direction. I had a time-table in my pocket, and I took it out and carefully examined it by the moonlight. The track was clear; why might I not venture to save my strength and that of the horse, and, be saving time, perhaps save a valuable human life as well? Why not, indeed? The more I thought of it the more satisfied I became that it was a safe thing to do.

The moon, now obscured, was high in the heavens as I entered the snow-shed, and it was very difficult to keep the way, as the light came scintillating through a thousand cracks and crevices in the rough timber structure. Three or four culverts, to allow the passage of mountain streams when the snow is melting, checked my progress for a brief time, but there was a plank across one or two, for the convenience of "foot passengers," and, as the water was hard frozen, I got old Jerky around the others in safety.

The worst was over, and I was already beginning to chuckle over the adventure, and to pride myself on my forethought and pluck in making the venture. I had undoubtedly saved at least an hour of hard work wading through the snow, and possibly—not improbably, in fact—saved a life. Just then I heard a low, tremulous, humming noise running along the frost-laden rails, and instinctively checked my horse to listen. It had subsided for a moment, and I went on in silence. Suddenly it commenced again, and seemed louder and clearer than before. I halted again. God have mercy upon me! I exclaimed, involuntarily. It was the rumbling of the wheels of a coming train, beyond a question. I sprang to the ground and placed my ear to the rail. The train was coming from the west; it must be a "construction train," laden with materials for the road, and possibly with laborers as well. The train occupied the full width of the shed, allowing only for the overhanging of the cars.

A man might escape by lying down, but a horse was almost sure of death, and if the train struck him it must go off the track almost inevitably. I was upon old Jerky's back before I was even aware of what I intended to do, and started down the grade, to the eastward, as fast as whip and spur and the attraction of gravitation could move him. Clearer and clearer came the humming noise, and I heard, at length, a short, sharp whistle, as the rushing train entered a tunnel, turned a curve, or passed out of a tunnel. It could not be more than two miles, or three at the most, away. Jerky skated over the ice patches, and floundered through the snow-drifts which had filtered in through the crevices in the shed-work, but reckless of danger to limbs alone in the presence of the greater danger to myself, and perhaps hundreds of my fellow-creatures, I whipped and spurred unceasingly, and drove him at the height of his speed.

Nearer and nearer came the train; I could already hear the cough, cough, cough of the locomotive behind me. At last I saw an opening in the side of the shed, not many rods distant, and, with a triumphant yell, I urged my steed to put forth his utmost effort. Sixty seconds more and I would be saved, and the danger to the train avoided. The seconds seemed hours in the feverish excitement of the moment, but they were over at last, and I sprang off my horse on the instant that he reached the opening, and rushed, with the rein in my hand, through the aperture. God Jerky snorted and sprang backward, throwing me down and pulling the reins from my hand. I saw the trouble at a glance. The opening was not of sufficient height to admit of a horse going through it erect, and a heavy timber to which the planks were nailed ran across the top.

I sprang inside and took a survey of the situation in an instant. The beam had borne ten times the strain that I could have brought to bear on it, as it was a foot thick, sound and firmly placed. I threw all my strength and weight against the planking a little beyond the beam and fell back upon the icy ground; the planks were imbedded in the frozen ground at their lower ends, and I could not start them in the slightest degree. I sprang up and run to the other side of the shed, to try if the planking on the other side was less secured. Through the crevices I saw a precipice running hundreds of feet sheer down from the side of the shed. I could not escape that way, and if the the train went off there, no person on it would survive to tell the tale.

I fell on my knees to pray, but, before I had uttered a word, the thought passed through my brain that I might throw the horse down, and pull him through the opening by main strength. I had the rope from the saddle in an instant, and throwing it around his fore legs, I sprang to one side, and with my whole strength attempted to trip him. The brute jumped backwards and refused to fall, while the rope ran through my hands, tearing the skin and searing the flesh as if I had grasped a red-hot iron. I remembered at that moment having seen a Mexican vaquero showing off his skill at San Jose, amid an admiring throng, and making the sneering remark to a friend, "And he is nothing but a bull-driver after all!" In that time of supreme agony, I would have sacrificed every advantage of birth, education, talent, and professional skill, and changed places with that uneducated, despised, bull-driving Greaser, merely to have received in return the gift of the ability to perform the trick of throwing down a horse.

My foot struck a stick of wood such as is used for burning on the locomotives, which was lying on the ground, and I instantly stooped to get it, determined to beat the brains out of the brute with it, or at least stun him into insensibility, and then pull him into the opening. It was frozen fast in the ice, and I could not tear it loose, though I put forth strength which seemed almost Herculean, in the frenzy of my excitement. It occurred to me that I had a pocket-knife, and I might cut his throat; but the train was almost upon me, and there was no time for him to bleed to death; this reflection did not consume a second and a half. In my despair I gave one long-drawn yell!—Help! No answer came!

The train came on, as it seemed to me, with lightning speed, upon the down grade, and the light of the locomotive head-lamp already fell upon me. Ten seconds more and there would be a terrific crash, bleeding and dying men would burst through the side of the shed and go rolling down the mountain side. Deadly faint and convinced that all was over, I staggered against the side of the shed, closed my eyes, and sank half down to the ground. I heard Jerky give a sudden snort of terror, and opened my eyes. He had discovered the danger at last, and comprehended it in an instant. The train could not have been more than thirty feet from him, when he made a tremendous jump and went through the opening. The beam caught the high Mexican saddle, tore it into fragments, and frightfully lacerated his back, but his weight carried him through, and he fell in the snow outside. I sprang after him, just as the locomotive came abreast of me, and fell, trembling and fainting, beside him.

I don't think the engineer saw us at all. I did not see him, so far as I could remember afterward. It was half an hour before I could gather strength enough to regain my legs, and replaced the wreck of the saddle upon his back, securing it as well as I could with some thongs cut from the edge of the rein, and my pocket handkerchief torn into strips, and prepared to resume my journey. In a canon filled with the black shadow of the mountain, I saw what appeared to be the dim outline of several cabins. This must be Camp No—! Pulling my limping steed after me by the bridle, I made my way slowly and painfully down to the nearest cabin, and knocked at the door. "Git!" was the response, which came to the third and fourth knock. I repeated the knocking.

"Git! you drunken son of a gun! You have been yelling around here long enough! Leave, or I'll put a bullet through you!" came in decided and most emphatic tones from within. I called out that I was the doctor from Camp No. —, not the man they mistook me for, and wanted to know if that was Camp —, and if John Smith was there—John Smith, who was dying, and wanted the doctor so bad. There was a moment's debate, in whispers, between two or more persons inside, when I heard the scratching of matches, and the shuffling of heavy slippers over the floor, and at last the door was opened.

"Be you the doctor?" said John Smith—for it proved to be him—after he had held the candle to my face, and deliberately scrutinized my person for some seconds.

"You sent for me, I think, Mr. Smith?"

"Well, yes, I did send for you; but I'm kinder sorry now that I did, for I have concluded to go over thar to-moror, on business, anyhow."

"But the messenger said you were dying, or the next thing to it—almost dead, I think he said."

"Well, yes, I was pretty considerable scared at the time. You see, I had an eruption come out right bad on my leg, and I was afraid that it might be pleurisy, or newamonia, or erisifilus, or suthin o' that sort, and if I come over in the snow and catched cold in it, I might a' gone in."

He sat down on the side of his bunk, and pulled up the drawer from his right shin; there was a patch of ringworm there, about the size of a silver dollar—and that was all. I made use of some strong expressions. I don't often swear, but I felt aggravated, under all circumstances, and considered myself justified. I still so consider. Mr. Smith heard me through. Then he arose majestically to his feet, and thus delivered himself:

"Young man! I jest put you down for a derned fool, on first sight—an' I wasn't sold much! Ef yer haint got no more sense than to get mad about trifles, you'll have many a long day ter wait 'fore you are called on again to visit this camp—an' it's goin' to be a right lively camp in the spring, you bet. I did perpose to ask you to take a drink bein' as how it's late, an' you must a' had a purty good ride over the mounting; but now, I'll jest see you blessed first. Thar's the door; git, you derned, ornary, wizened, contemptible little scrub, an' don't come foolin' around here no more, ef yer don't want ter get hurt! Git!"

I took his advice, and "got" without another word, just as the gray dawn began to streak the sky over beyond the Washoe Mountains.

Bismarck.

A new biography of the Prussian Premier has the following:

There is nothing of the actor about Count Bismarck, as is so often the case with eminent politicians. Not, however, that blind confidence is to be placed in the frankness with which he is accustomed to startle the world. All who have had dealings with him thoroughly well know how much faith they may put in those surprising, confidential revelations, which are calculated to bewilder—now by an excess of sincerity, now by an excess in the opposite direction, according as circumstances dictate. He is a great smoker, and his habit contributes to the recklessness of his appearance. While he was ambassador at Frankfort, his particular enemy, Herr Von Rechberg, called a council of the members of the Diet at his house, and received them in his dressing gown. Count Bismarck to pay him in his own coin, immediately drew his cigar case out of his pocket, took a cigar, offered a second to his neighbor and said, while lighting his own, and without waiting for an answer, "You have no objection, dear Count?" This levity, which is apt sometimes to give offense, is connected with the activity and restlessness of his mind, which desires to do, to see and to know everything for itself. He tormented the very life out of the Chambers and the press. But as soon as he thought that he could win over a deputy or journalist by a confidence or an explanation, he took pains to attract him, and on such occasions he not seldomly entered in the easiest way, and often without the slightest reserve, into conversation concerning the machinery of the State.

In 1849 he sent a challenge to the editor of Kladderadatsch (the Berlin Punch). Later on, during his ambassadorship at the Diet, the public strongly suspected that he wrote secretely for that paper, particularly whenever a specially good skit appeared on an Austrian diplomatist. But it was in committees of the House that he liked best to let himself go just as the humor, now reckless and defiant, now winning and genial, might seize him.

California adds another contribution to her list of wonders. Several live lizards have recently been found embedded in fir trees discovered in a forest near Calistoga. They are unlike any species now known. Scientists will be expected to explain this new miracle of the Pacific Slope.

Trimmings for Winter Dresses and Mantles.

The handsomest velvet cloaks are heavily braided with fine soutache in palm-leaf designs. The leaf is not merely outlined by braid in the old-fashioned way, but is filled in with curled, fancifully-arranged braid as closely as if embroidered, making a rich and elegant garniture. The edge of the garment is then fringed. Passementeries made in imitation of this braiding consist of small cords fastened together to show thick leaves and vines. These are very effective on velvet, silk and cashmere. These passementeries are without jet. Jet balls, amid ornaments for sashes, are among the novelties. Thick bits of jet—not beads, but square blocks, are intermingled in French trimmings. Large buttons, with velvet center and passementerie borders, are used for cloth cloaks.

A great deal of guipure lace is worn this season, especially for cashmere and silk, though there is nothing so handsome for velvet as Chantilly thread lace. The German guipures, hand-made and pure silk, but silk of an inferior quality, are far cheaper than those made in France. These are used for cashmere. The laces used for velvet cloaks are three or four inches wide. French thread lace, called Chantilly, is finer than any other, and very expensive. It is the custom this season to sew on lace above the edge of the garment, and without fullness. Passementerie is the usual heading to lace.

Fur will be much worn for trimming later in the season. Of course, sable is preferable to all other furs, but bands of black martin will be considered very stylish. Bands of ostrich feathers are less used for velvet cloaks than they were last winter, but will be retained for gros grain and cashmere.

For cloth garments bias velvet, heavy gros grain and gros de Londres, with fringes, are the trimmings.

The Crispins' Strike.

From the New York Tribune.

The question of wages is not yet settled between the manufacturers and the Crispins, and in six shops, representing about 210 men, work is still suspended. The unemployed workmen congregate about respective shops and dissuade every man they believe to be a shoemaker from entering to obtain employment. One of the manufacturing houses, whose workmen have struck, advertised yesterday morning for others, adding "Crispins not recognized." A number of applicants came to the door, but were met by Crispins, who explained the state of affairs, and urged them not to enter. The manufacturer, finding few applicants, descended to the sidewalk, and observed there a Crispin, named David Connors, caused his arrest, and charged him with encroaching on his premises, and with having threatened the applicants with personal violence if they persisted in entering. As he was unable to swear positively to the charges, Connors was discharged. The Crispins deny that they have threatened violence or intimidated applicants, and say that they are assured of success; that they are now paying their men at the rate of from $10 to $15 a week, and that by the 24th inst. they will have a large sum of money at their disposal, which will have been forwarded from all sections of the Union.

The manufacturers state that they will obtain as many workmen as they require, and that the principle for which they are fighting will eventually lead to free shops, where every man will have equal rights, be he Crispin or not.

The Striking and Wages Committee of the Crispins met last evening, at the corner of Forsyth and Broome streets, to pay the weekly stipend to those men who had not received it on Saturday. About 240 men have been paid for the last week's idleness, the cost of which to the various lodges amounted to about $2,400.

Motley Correspondence.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The President to-day sent to the Senate the Motley correspondence, called for by the resolutions of Messrs. Morton and Sumner. It is quite voluminous. Accompanying Mr. Motley's last letter is one addressed to Mr. Moran, replying to it, from Secretary Fish. Mr. Motley starts out with saying that long before he was officially notified of his recall, he noticed in the newspapers statements to the effect that the President had determined upon withdrawing him. This he regarded as an insult both to himself and the position. Had he been notified in the regular way that the President no longer desired his services, he would have resigned. He denies that he ever violated his instructions, or that he had any private conversation with Lord Clarendon or any other British official on the subject of the Alabama claims. He quotes his dispatches, as well as those of Mr. Fish, to show that there was no difference of opinion between himself and the President, and, although he had paid strict attention to his instructions, he says that, as a wonderful coincidence, he received his letter of recall on the very day after the San Domingo treaty was defeated by the Senate. He protests, in conclusion, against the manner of his removal, and attributes it to the difference between Mr. Sumner and the President. Secretary Fish takes up Mr. Motley's letter and replies to it, in which he denies that San Domingo or Mr. Sumner had anything to do with his recall, but that it was because he did not carry out the views of the Administration concerning the Alabama question.

A True Temperance Girl.—We were highly pleased with an incident a friend related to us about a little girl who with her parents went to visit the fair at the American Institute. While there, one of the managers took a fancy to the little miss, who was of a lively and social turn, and, to make her visit pleasant, himself conducted her around the hall, showing her the various points of interest. He left her for a short time, to attend to something in another part of the building, and when he returned, immediately sought the little girl, offering his hand to again conduct her around. To his astonishment she refused to accompany him. "Why," said he, "you have not seen half the pretty things yet. Come, and I will show them to you." Still she refused, and clung as if affrighted to her mother. Surprised at such conduct, her mother remonstrated and bade her be polite to the kind gentleman. "Mother," said the little girl, whispering in her mother's ear, "I cannot go with him—he smells of rum." Was she to be blamed, children?—Exchange.

The Galveston News says that while Cotton was once King, "Railroad is now Emperor—he is the coming despot."

The Swedish Marriage Ceremony.

Marriage is the one great event in the life of a Swedish peasant. There are innumerable marriage customs, varying in different districts. Sometimes the preliminary courtship is conducted by a Boneman, or "saker." This is usually a shrewd, elderly peasant, who knows all about the affairs of the neighborhood. If the proposed suitor is likely to be acceptable to the maiden and her parents, the boneman brings him to the house. The young people must not on this occasion speak together, or seem to have any idea of the purport of the visit. Afterward, if matters go on favorably, a public betrothal takes place, the groom presenting the bride-elect with a prayer-book, and receiving in return some article wrought by her own hands. This betrothal is a sort of half marriage, but it may be set aside by the consent of both parties. The wedding proper does not usually take place for some time; in some parts, indeed, not until the bride has bleknat, that is, literally, "bleached," or "turned pale," a euphemistic phrase, indicating that she is likely to become a mother. The Church has set its face resolutely against this custom, but apparently with less success than is desirable.

The wedding takes place either at the church, the parsonage, or at the house of the bride's parents. If it is to be solemnized in the church, the bridal procession, mounted on horseback, and preceded by musicians, ride thrice around the May-Stang, and then proceed to the sacred edifice, in front of which a triumphal arch is often erected. If the wedding is to take place at home, the clergyman and friends of the groom meet at his house, whence, after being hospitably entertained, they proceed to the home of the bride. The bride is arrayed in her best, one distinguishing article of attire being the "bridal shoes," which must be made without buckles or ties, in order that she may escape a difficult child-birth. A silver coin ought to be placed in each shoe, which will insure that money shall never be wanting to the young couple. As soon as she has put on the shoes she ought to go to the cattle-house and milk one of the cows, so that milk may never fail in her new home. The bride ought, if possible, to get a peep at the groom through her wedding-ring before he sees her; this will insure that he will prove a kind husband. If she means to have the upper hand in the household, she ought, while the ceremony is going on, to have her foot a little in advance of his, and drop a glove or handkerchief; if he stoops to pick it up, he will be fated to bend his back during his whole wedded life. While the nuptial preparations are going on, one should not make a noise with the well-pole, as this would lead to quarrels among the guests. It is advisable, also, to set a couple of boys fighting near the house; this will insure that the guests will not quarrel.

After the marriage has been performed there is great feasting at the bride-house. This often lasts several days, the guests bringing the eatables. If the feast is profonged too far, the hostess sets before the guests a large rice pudding. This is understood as a delicate hint that they are expected to take their leave, and is always cheerfully complied with.—From "Folk Life in Sweden," by A. H. Guernsey, in Harper's Magazine for January.

The Late Mrs. Belknap.

A Washington special to the Philadelphia Press has the following notice of the late Mrs. Belknap:

Mrs. Belknap was a native of Kentucky, having been born near Louisville, in that State, in March, 1849. She was the daughter of the late John Tomlinson, of Harrodsburg, and she was married to Gen. Belknap in January, 1868. The disease from which she died was consumption, and was contracted some years ago, though the malady did not show itself in a formidable shape until within three months past. About two months since she gave birth to a fine boy. She recovered from her confinement only to find herself prostrated by the inroads of the disease which ended her life. It made rapid progress, and some three weeks since her attending physician, Dr. Morris, U. S. A., pronounced her beyond recovery. She was entirely conscious up to the moment of her death. A few moments previous thereto she called her husband to her bedside and requested to be raised up. A few moments later she said, "I am dying," and breathed but once or twice after uttering those words. Her widowed sister, Mrs. Bowers, has been with her for the last few weeks, and receives the care of the little child. Mrs. Belknap was possessed of a rare degree of personal grace and beauty, and her happy, easy manner, together with her qualities of mind and heart, achieved for her at the very outset a degree of personal popularity accorded to but few ladies in Washington society.

Ship Building in Canada.—The Quebec Chronicle publishes a statement of the vessels built and launched in that city during each of the last nineteen years, commencing with 1852. The total number is 562, with an aggregate measurement of 559,057 tons, giving 844.5 tons as the average size of each vessel. An examination of the figures for each year shows that the ship building trade has greatly fallen off. Thus, in 1853 there were 43 vessels built, of an aggregate measurement of 48,039 tons, giving for each vessel an average of 1117 tons; an I in 1854 there were 44 vessels built, of an aggregate measurement of 49,951 tons, giving for each vessel an average of 1021.6 tons. In 1863 there were 63 vessels built, of an aggregate measurement of 54,287 tons, giving for each vessel an average of 862 tons. In 1864 there were 63 vessels built, of an aggregate measurement of 56,655 tons, giving for each vessel an average of 899 tons. From the figures for the last few years, it will be seen that the vessels built and launched at Quebec have fallen off not only in number, but also in size. Thus, in 1867 there were 16 vessels built, of an average measurement of 939 tons; in 1868 there were 34 vessels, averaging 697 tons each; in 1869 there were 30, averaging 496 tons; and in 1870 there were 18, averaging 604 tons. The only year that can compare with 1870 is 1859, when there were 17 vessels built, averaging 598 tons each. The Quebec Chronicle says there is no prospect of improvement in ship building, as unless the trade dies out altogether, it would be hard for it to sink any lower. The ship carpenters, it is asserted, will be idle this winter, unless they can find different work. Of the ten vessels at present on the stocks, five are reported finished, leaving only a small amount of occupation for the mechanics employed in ship building.

King William and the Private Soldier.

A Brunswick paper gives an anecdote illustrating the King of Prussia's kind-heartedness. A soldier from Stargard, in Mecklenburg, was on outpost before Paris. Here he received a letter from home, and, as he had been a long time without news, he could not refrain from opening it immediately. In reading it he became so absorbed that he had no eye or ear for what passed around him. Suddenly he heard a noise, looked up and perceived the King and Crown Prince with their retinue. Startled, he let the letter fall and gave the customary salute. The King, remarking his anxiety and confusion, stepped up to him in a friendly way and asked, "Well, a letter from your sweetheart?" "No, your Majesty, from my father," he replied. "May I read the letter, or are there secrets in it?" asked the King. The soldier handed the letter to the King, who turned to his suite and read, inter alia, as follows:—"In a fortnight your sister's wedding comes off. We shall all greatly miss you on that day, but your old mother is most of all vexed at not seeing you here. It does not matter, however, only go to the French in earnest, so that the insatiable mouth of these fellows may be very soon stopped." The King returned the letter and rode on. No long time elapsed before the soldier was relieved from his post. He received 14 day's furlough, and was able, at the King's expense, to make a journey to Mecklenburg and attend the wedding.

Reminiscences of Fitz Hugh Ludlow.—The publication in Harper's Monthly for August, 1867, of his article on the "opium habit," entitled "what Shall They do to be Saved?" brought him hundreds of letters from all parts of the country. These letters he answered carefully, laying down a specific course of treatment, varying in each case, always gratuitously, so far as I could learn. One who read a portion of this correspondence said that the revelations of the extent of the habit, the number of victims to it, and their appeals to Mr. Ludlow for help, were both appalling and agonizing. The article itself in Harper was exceedingly able. A medical man of wide reading and experience remarked at the time it appeared that the scientific knowledge of the subject displayed in it were such that he did not know of a half-dozen men in the medical profession who could have written it. Alas, with what sadness his friends came to know that while he was doing so much to warn and restore others from the effects of this fearful habit, he himself was still under its bondage. Again and again he seemed to have broken it. Only those most intimate with him knew how he suffered at such periods—the war between spirit and flesh! I recall a night he spent with me some months after the publication of the article alluded to in Harper. He was in an excited state, and we took a long walk together, during which he spoke freely of his varied trials, and he finally went to my house to sleep. I went directly to bed, but he was a long time making his preparations, and I at length suspected he was indulging in his old craving. For the first and only time in my life I spoke harshly to him, and characterised his abuse of himself and of the confidence of his friends as shameful. He replied deprecatingly, and turning down the gas-light came around and crept into bed beside me. We both lay a moment in silence, and feeling reproved for my harshness, I said: "Think, Fitz, of your warnings on this subject, and of your effort in behalf of other victims." In a tone and with a pathos I can never forget, he answered: "He saved others, himself he could not save."—F. B. Carpenter in N. Y. Evening Mail.

The Mining Statistics of Great Britain for 1869 have just been published, from which it appears that the production of coal during that period amounted to 107,427,557 tons, valued at $131,284,410. The other principal mineral mined during 1869, are as follows:—Iron ore, 11,508,525 tons, valued at $18,662,800; lead ore, 96,806 tons, valued at $5,945,150; tin ore, 14,725 tons, valued at $6,133,025; copper ore, 129,953 tons, valued at $2,599,560; zinc ore, 15,533 tons, valued at $946,830. The total of all the minerals mined in 1869, including others not mentioned, amounted to $176,260,600. In the table from which the above figures have been taken, mention is made of "gossans." This word is a Cornish mining form, used to designate an oxide of iron mixed with other matters found on the upper portions of lodes, and which is frequently very rich in silver and sometimes gold. The metals obtained from the ores mentioned above are valued in the aggregate at $88,288,[illegible]. Of these metals the principal are as follow: Iron, 5,445,757 tons, valued at $68,081,985; lead, 73,259 tons, valued at $5,987,075; tin, 9,760 tons, valued at $6,008,280; copper, 8,291 tons, valued at $3,290,325; zinc, 4,500 tons, valued at $462,009; silver, 831,891 ounces, valued at $1,039,860. The absolute total value of the metals and coal, with other minerals, excepting building stone, lime, slates and common clay, produced in Great Britain and Ireland in 1869, is placed at $232,248,455.

The Sortie from Paris on the last days of November had one happy result for the besieged residents. The army found in the positions taken from the Germans more than a thousand horses. Their own losses of horses amounted to three or four hundred more, and all these carcases were gathered up and distributed to the butchers of the city, adding a five days' supply of fresh meat to the capital. The horse question, by the way, has come to be a serious problem with the Parisians. Forage is so scarce that a great many valuable animals are fed upon bread. This use of human food has been pronounced scandalous; but there has been so much arithmetic brought to bear on the question that there is a great deal of perplexity in the city as to the true policy to be pursued. If, it is argued on the one hand, you slay your horses at once, you destroy your chances of fresh meat for the future. A horse, on the other hand, eats about as much bread as would support ten citizens, and, therefore, it is asked whether it is worth while to keep him a month in order to enjoy a few hundred kilogrammes of fresh meat at the end of that period? It is a puzzling conundrum.

Sweet Sixteen.

Let the day come wet, or come it dry,
'Mong life's gay flowers I'm a butterfly;
And life to me's one ceaseless charm,
For the blood of youth still keeps me warm;
And I'm sweet sixteen, ripe as a peach
Swinging on a limb. Will anybody reach
For me?

No wealth have I at my command,
But a million would not buy this hand;
That is, it would not buy for you,
Unless to mine your heart were true.
For I'm sweet sixteen, ripe as a peach
Swinging on a limb. Will anybody reach
For me?

And if for yours my name I change,
Your business you must so arrange
That the "Lodge" will not take all your time,
But punctual come at half-past nine to your

Swinging on a limb. Will anybody reach
For me?

A PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

"A tariff for protection," says the Ohio State Journal, the central organ of the Republican party of Ohio, "if at all, enables the manufacturer to sell his goods at higher rate than he otherwise could. This, of course, compels each consumer to pay a higher rate than he otherwise would. Now that, the ratio of consumers to manufacturers of products is not less than ten thousand to one we must, therefore, tax ten thousand persons to benefit one person. We must compel ten thousand consumers to pay two dollars a yard for cloth worth one dollar and fifty cents, in order that fifty cents for each yard manufactured, may go into the pocket of the home manufacturer. Since the nation has grown to manhood had not this business of paying subsidies to favored classes better cease?

"Such is the operation of our present tariff enacted to favor the few welthy manufacturers, at the expense of the many consumets, who are annually taxed hundreds of millions of dollars in the increased price of the articles thus protected, all of which, as was intended by the farmers and advocates of our tariff laws, goes into the pockets of the manufacturers, without adding to the revenue of the government, for which purpose alone has Congress a right to lay a duty upon foreign imports.

Such is the operation of the tariff which the legislation of the Radical party has produced, under the specious plea of "Protection to American Industry." But which, as was intended, robs the laborers, the consumers of the country, to the benefit of organized capital.

ALTHOUGH Grant and other old Bourbon Radical leaders stand out steadily against removing the disabilities which, at a time of heat and revengeful passions, were imposed upon the people of the South by their conquerors of the North, the feeling is steadily and constantly increasing in favor of their removal. At the late election in Missouri an amendment to the Constitution, allowing the old Confederates to vote and hold office, was carried by over 100,000 majority. There were 63,000 votes cast for the Radical candidate for Governor, and yet only 16,000 voted to retain these relics of bigotry and oppression. Reconstructed Tennessee, West Virginia and North Carolina have purged their statute-books of them. In North Carolina lately a resolution was offered in the House of Representatives requesting the delegation in Congress from that State to use their influence in favor of a general amnesty and a repeal of the test-oath; and it received 90 votes in the affirmative to 13 in the negative. Of these ten were negroes, who, having now the right to vote and hold office, were anxious to deprive white men of talent, wealth and respectability from having the same privilege. But of the white Radicals a large number voted for the resolution. In Congress it will not be carried at present, but the movement, gaining additional momentum and pressure as it advances, will ere long sweep every disability away, and with it the partisans who connect their political fortunes with their perpetuity.

THE State election occurs in New Hampshire early in March, and the prospect for Democratic success is certainly encouraging. Our friends there have unwisely divided into fractions, and have as a consequence suffered defeat. They are now seeking to heal old wounds and act together with more harmony and determination. On the other hand, the Radicals are not wholly exempt from the factious influences and feelings that are breaking up as a well as breaking down the party in nearly all the States of the Union. If the Democrats will come together and act with one object alone in view; it seems as though a victory, decisive and complete, is within their grasp.

Correspondence.

Hersey House, Hersey Mich.
Dec., 30th, 1870

MR. EDITOR.—I promised you another letter from this locality, and now I will endeavor to fulfil it. I have not found as much snow here as I expected; and, indeed, it is not what might be called first-rate sleighing as yet. A heavy storm came on yesterday, however, that settles the question; so, that in a few days, when the roads are thoroughly broken and smooth, the merry bells will be in "general order." Up to Saturday last the snow was only about three inches in depth here; but I learn that more snow has fallen to the south of us, as far as Grand Rapids. There is good sleighing from 25 to 75 miles north of here, and lumber men commenced hauling logs nearly 2 weeks ago.

This, in time, will make one of the handsomest villages in Michigan. Two fine streets form a junction here—the Hersey and Muskegon—and the water power is inexhaustible. The soil is light sandy loam and gravel; making fine ground for streets and building sites. Society here is first-class, and wealth, and respetability form a permanent basis for the future purity and influence of the social system. Only 2 years have passed since the first buildings were erected, and there is now a good school house, a handsome church, two good hotels, (one of them a three story building,) half-dozen stores, carriage and blacksmith shops, shoe shops, cigar manufactory, printing office, meat market plaining mill, grist mill, saw mill, druggist, groceries two physicians, two lawyers, barber shop, painter, masons, &c. In short, all the convenience that older towns have, although the bemlock stumps are yet rather prominent in spare corners and vacant lots, and a man has only to take a half hours tramp, with a good rifle, to find the hunts of the fleet red dear and the sly wild turkey.

I tell you, it invigorates and stirs up the energies of a man to stay a few weeks in such a town as this. He awakes out of the drowsy, monotonous bed into which the narrow limits of close graded society has thrown him, and developes according to the limitless wilds that are spread about him. Every thing around him grows rapidly, and changes are made here every week, that would take months to make in old settled towns. Nobody expects to wait all summer here for a house, a store, or shop. Yet the buildings are all of good size and there are but four or five one-story houses in the place. The building in which the printing office now is, was all in boards and logs three weeks ago; and it is really a fine building exhibiting as good work as can be found anywhere. That is the way they "rush things" here continually; and that is the pace at which this town will grow for years eventually to become the center of trade for a large expanse of territory of the northward and westward, as well as up along the Muskegon river.

As specimens of "solid men," as the denizens of the "hub" term it, Hersey can boast of several who count their values by hundreds of thousands. They estimate one at $700,000; another at $400,000; another at $200,000; and so on. It is the influence of such men that is to build up Hersey; and you can perceive at once that it is a sure investment. Lots are already worth from $200 to $500, about the business center, and prices have an upward tendency at all times. Business is lively, and more goods are sold here, in proportion to its size, than at any point north of Grand Rapids.

There are excellent openings here for good industrious, sober mechanics, a practical tinner with capital enough for a stock of hardware could do a "tip top" business. Also, a good watchmaker and jeweler has an excellent chance before him here, a good tailor can make it pay, too.

No saloons are open in the town, and whiskey is not allowed to be sold by the drink. I see some cases of ignited benzine, occasionally; but the "steam" is all generated at some other locality—Buckhorn, Paris, or some other points where a pledge is only made between two tumblers! before taking a "smile." Herseyities therefore cherish the grand hope that they are to grow up a temperate, prosperous and respectable community; innocent of the enticing toddy, and oblivious to the oft sung "flowing bowl."

For the interest of DeKalb county Sunday School Scholars I must not forget to tell them that there is a flourishing Sunday School here, and the happy children were treated to a christmas tree display, on Saturday evening. The festival was held in the school house, which was appropriately decorated for the occasion. Over the entrance door I noticed the motto—"Work with a will," surrounded with a border, all made of richly colored autumn leaves—mostly maple leaves, that keep their colors as well as when first gathered in October, a man dressed as Santa Claus, came into the room, with a large basket, from which he distributed candies to the little ones.

The landlord of the Hersey House is great on providing for his guests. Christmas we sat down to as sumptuous a feast, as an American could possible wish for. Oysters, Turkeys, and "goodies" of many kinds were piled upon the sideboards and tables; and we partook with an appetite that secured to us at least a typo's share.

The land grant of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad traverses this part of the State extending to the straits of Mackinaw Maps of the grant are to be seen in nearly every hotel, and the slice thus cut out of the public lands leaves a gorge like drawing a hoe through a potato hill. The company owns every alternate section for six miles on each side of the railroad track, and an indemnity grant has been added to make up any loss that may occur in sections already taken in the original grant; so that the grant is about thirty miles wide in all, a "big thing" for the contractors some day; yet the road is going to be a "big thing" for developing the riches of Northern Michigan, and, although I am decidely opposed to the habit that Congress and State legislatures are getting into, of recklessly giving away the public domain, and depriving actual settlers of their proper rights, I cannot deny that this grant will be as beneficial in its general results as any that has been made. A portion of country will thus be opened up and made available, that, if we waited for individual enterprise might lie unreclaimed for years to come. The grand argument in its favor is, that we cannot afford to do without the lumber, minerals, and other resources of the country north of this for any length of time and a way must be immediately opened to them.

The Doctor is seated on the opposite side of the table at which I am writing. He is busily scratching away at his editorials for the "coming paper." Between his editorial duties and his attendance upon numerous patients who have secured his services, I think he will have a busy time of it, unless he can manage to have his prescriptions printed to hand, and let the "devil" do the distributing! With pills and print he ought surely to be able regulate the health of the people, both morally and physically, and I think he will do it.

Have you got good

FANNING MILLS?

If not, get one of

J. B. TAYLOR'S CELEBRATED Excelsior Mills.

These mills have been tried for 14 years past, and not found wanting in any respect, for cleaning wheat, corn, barley, oats, beans, peas, grass seed, flax seed, and all kinds of grain. We challenge the world for competition. These mills have taken the first premium at the Michigan and Indiana State Fairs, in 1861-65-66-68. Come and get a good Mill, and don't bring dirty wheat to market and get 20c. less per bushel.

Orders left at O. T. Clark & Co.'s store will be promptly filled.

ORDERS SOLICITED

and filled for any part of the country. Over 500 in use, in DeKalb and adjoining counties.

Teachers, Attention!

Examination regularly on the 1st Saturday of each month, at Auburn, in the Seminary Building. Exception from any one or more of the eight branches limits a license to six months and the particular district requiring such excuse. Satisfactory evidence of good moral character required. Teachers must not commence teaching without a license. Applicants are expected to show an improved grade on a second examination, when previous grade is low, or be subject to rejection.

Respectfully, W. H. McINTOSH.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY.

Local and Miscellaneous.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Having sold my interest in the Air Line I respectfully request, all those indebted to me on subscription to call and settle immediately at this office or to me personally. A reasonable time will be given, for all to make their settlements, and as I intend removing from the county, those accounts which still remain unsettled will be left for collection. It is important that this should be attended to immediately.

J. A. BARNS.

BEGIN the year right and then hold out faithful to the end.

HOGS.—Messrs. Work & Aveline are buying and shipping live hog at this point and will continue until the supply is exhausted.

Get your sale bills printed at the COURIER office. They can generally be had in an hour after leaving your order.

AN exchange says "there is something sweet about little girls." Another adds, "and it grows on them as they grow bigger."

QUAILS.—There seems to be an abundance of quails in some localities of our county. One party went out the other day and brought home thirty seven.

IT is an excellent time to settle up all your bills, and thus start on the new year with a clear conscience—even if it empties your pocket book.

A LUXURIOUS method of keeping the hands soft and smooth, in cold weather, is to wash them in ice water, and hang them out of a window to dry.

Capt McKinney, of the excelsior billard rooms has received two new tables of improved style, and all lovers of the cue can now have an opportunity of indulging in a first class game.

WE are under obligations to the Toledo Blade Company for a beautiful desk card containing a list of the Stamp Duties under the new Revenue Law which went into force on the 1st of Oct., 1870.

COURT.—The Court of Common Please, convenes next Monday. There are a large number of cases to be disposed of, though we doubt not this honor, Judge Clapp will expedite matters with his customary energy.

MODERATING.—The weather is becoming quite mild and the beautiful snow which fell so abundantly last Sabbath, is gradually disappearing to the regret of all. We trust however that a cold snap will occur again soon, and prevent its departure.

WE would say to people who have occasion to stop in the streets with teams, don't stop on the crossings. It may be a little more convenient for some to get out and in, but it is very inconvenient for pedestrians to be obliged to go around.

WE can recommend the following remedies: For corns, easy shoes; for bile, exercise; for rheumatism, new flannel and patience; for gout, toast and water; for the toothache, a dentist; for debt, industry and economy; for love matrimony.

AN Indiana grocer, near the Ohio river, had an empty Kerosene barrel which he wished to clean out to pack pork in, so he lit a match and put it to the bung hole. This was the last public act of his life, as he was blown clear out of the country.

AN exchange makes the following good suggestion: "Always when you get in posession of any good news, go directly to your home paper and inform the editor; you will not only receive his grateful thanks for the favor, but also the thanks of his patrons. Many items of news doubtless escape our notice every week which would add interests to our paper if chronicled.

A MAN in one of the adjoining counties applies for a divorce on the ground that his wife weighs thirty more pounds than he does, and invariably gets the best of him in all their encounters. To guard against such occurrences men should always, before marriage, have the object of their affections weighed and thus become convinced of their own superiority.

SEVERAL papers have tried to beat the Detroit papers telling lies, but with poor success. A Duluth paper, having said a man had a wagon tongue driven through him, which it took four men to pull out, a Detroit paper says a boy there had a wagon tongue driven through him, but let it alone for three months, and it finally worked out of one his toes. No wonder people look upon newspaper reports with suspicion.

ON the first day of January, a reduction took place of fifteen cents a pound in the duty on tea, of about one and a quarter cent a pound in the duty on sugar and two cents a pound on coffee. On spices there will be a large addition to the free list; this last mainly in the special interest of the manufacturers. The surplus revenue for future years is estimated by protectionist organs at one hundred millions per annum, and they propose to keep it up at this figure for their own benefit and that of the bondholders.

"NECKTIE PARTIES have dawned in the rural districts. A neck tie party is defined by an exchange as being one where each lady attending the party makes a neck tie of the same material as the dress she wears. These are taken to where the party is to be held and placed in a bag. When the gentlemen arrives, each one must go to the bag and take out a neck tie, and it is his duty to wait upon the lady, during the evening, who wears the dress corresponding in material with the necktie."

The still later novelty in the way of parties, is that of the sheet and pillowcase. In these, each guest is dressed in a sheet, with a pillow-case drawn over the head, holes being made in the case for eyes nose and mouth. The guests wear their party habiliment under the sheets and at the supper table the sheets and pillow cases are removed, the same as masks at a masquerade,

ENCOURAGING.—We feel highly gratified at the result of the first week's publication of the COURIER. We added one hundred and twenty seven subscribers to our list during that time, and expect to do nearly as well during the coming week. Our paper seems to meet a public want and we intend to improve on each successive number, until we make it one of the best in the State.

We thank our friends for their interest in our behalf, and promise to do all in our power to meet their highest expectations. Any one can obtain a copy of the COURIER gratis by sending their address.

SUSPICIOUS.—Last Friday night about one o'clock, while Messrs Smith & Hare were quietly sleeping in their grocery store under the COURIER office, they heard some one without, approach the door, and remain some time. Then they heard him go to the rear part of the building and try the door, but not succeeding there he returned to the front door, and tried that. One of the firm got up to see who it was, but he unfortuately made a noise, and the outsider "lit out" in double quick time. Our citizens should be prepared for such characters and give them a warm reception.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONCERT.—The monthly concert at the M. E. Church last Sabbath evening, was largely attended, and was a very pleasant affair. The various exercises by the little folks was very creditable, though we regreted to notice that but a small number participated. A good Sabbath School Concert is one of the most pleasant arrangements that can be enjoyed and they wield a powerful influence in the Sabbath School cause. But it requires a unity of action both among old and young to make them a success and parents as well as children should vie each other in contributing their share with this beneficial and highly interesting feature of our schools. We hope that still greater effort will be made to realize the great and important results arising from these concerts by each Sabbath School in our place. We shall be pleased to make any announcements for churches, schools or other public services that our citizens may desire through the colums of the COURIER without charge, if they will let us know in due time.

A GOOD JOKE.—One of our modern Nimrods came in the other day with a dozen quails as his trophy, after an hour's hunt, and felt somewhat pleased over the result. The next day our friend Harvey shouldered his "magazine" and wagered before starting that he would bring in more birds than his friend, or bust. After a full understanding off he started, and the day was spent in speculations as to the result. In the evening up came Mr. Hunter, and taking a seat carefully counted out eleven quails from his game bag, and stopped. At this juncture, the other fellow just yelled and "enumeryed" up and down the room in great glee, evidently of the opinion that he had won. Another plunge was again made however in the game bag, and this time a snow bird, all tattered and torn made its appearance, and the match was a tie. The performance was again varied with more dancing and chuckling, and our friend sat like a statute enjoying the scene. After another long pause, and a grab, up comes another snow bird, and you ought to have seen the effect. No more dancing from that party, but like a second relief of gards, the winner yelled forth loud enough to be heard less than a mile. He had him, if it did take two poor little innocent snow birds to give him the victory

SHARP PRACTICE.—A large robust looking fellow, who from his physical appearance seemed intended by nature for the especial amusement of splitting rails, appeared last Saturday morning at the Weaver House in the role of a beggar, and stated that he would like to have breakfast. He voluntary agreed to cut wood or do any thing else in the line of work for the enjoyment of one square meal. He was generously provided for, and after a hearty breakfast was introduced to the wood pile, by a boy, who had charge of that department of affairs. He carried his over coat, a garment that is not usually indulged in by co-workers in his sphere of life, and laid it near him on the wood. Removing all extra clothing and rolling up his sleeves, he gave every indication of going through that pile of wood in short order. After two or three strokes with the saw, he asked the boy to bring him some soft soap, with which to lubricate the instrument, but the boy could'nt see it, and was'nt to be soft soaped in so easy a manner. Finally he sent the boy to the house for some matches to light his pipe, another luxury, and thudered away at the wood till the boy disappeared. Then there was mounting in hot haste, and lighting was'nt a patching to the agility of this "dead beat." His coats seemed to fly on his back and not a moment stopped or strayed he, but hastily disappeared around the conner with the evident intention of putting as much space between him and that wood pile, as possible. It was soon discovered that something was missing, and a search revealed, the gradually disappeared form of a pedestrian down beneath the Western horizon Considering the distance and the time which it was made in, that fellow certainly ate dinner at Chicago, providing there was a victim there to receive him.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.—The change of purpose and plan has been made to meet a popular demand, and is so great a change that it has been deemed advisable to drop the old and familiar title, even though it has been associated with recognized excellence and popular success.

Dr. Holland, who has recently returned from Europe, after a period of rest which his long and unremitting literary labor rendered necessary, has consented to embark his time and capital in this enterprise; and American readers will need no assurance from us that one who has proved his capacity to meet the wants of the people in so many walks of literature, and whose name has no associations but those of success, will make a Magazine that will be welcomed at all the firesides of the land. His books are everywhere, and his friends are with his books.

The best writers procurable in this country upon the pages of the new Magazine, and every number will be profusely and handsomely illustrated.

THE snow has disappeared, and instead we have a first-class article of mud.

Auburn as a Manufacturing Point.

We are glad to state that the future prospects of Auburn as a manufacturing town, are quite flattering. Having only recently been favored with railroad facilities we feel confident that every department of trade will receive an impetus which will most surely result in the development of the county, to the interest and benefit of all concerned. The magnificent timber lands adjoining remain almost untouched, and as this article enters almost exclusively into the manufactures of this part of the country, we see no reason why we may not expect the investment of the necessary capital and labor to convert them into articles that are finding a ready sale in any market of the country. With a direct Railroad communication to the great lumber regions of the north, we posess an additional inducement for capitalists, who may desire to come in our midst, and erect the necessary buildings for the consumption of this unlimited material. In the manufacture of staves and headings, Auburn posesses advantages unsurpassed in Northern Indiana. With uninterrupted forests of ash Walnut and Oak timber, within easy access, we are only wanting in capital to free us from the lethargy that has enthralled us so long, and place our coutry on a equal footing, in manufacturing interests, with others that have long felt the fruitful yield of a comodity much inferior to our own. If we invite manufactures we enhance the value of our individual property, and develope a source of wealth that must fall with equal benefit on all. With the exhibition of a liberal spirit on the part of our citizens generally to all who may desire to settle down in our midst and engage in business we will soon attain greater achievments, and our place will soon resound with the busy hum of industry and develope itself into a beautiful and enterprising county seat.

WATERLOO ITEMS.

FIRE.—Our friends at Waterloo are having bad luck in the way of fire. Last Sunday morning, the popular Lents Hotel took fire, it is thought, from a lamp in the baggage room, on the first floor, a dangerous place for a fire to begin and had made considerable head way before it was discovered. Commendable discretion was shown in its management by keeping the doors and windows closed, for had they been opened the smothered flames would have found vent, and the whole building destroyed. As it was it only escaped with serious damage. The fire engine did good service, and was mainly instrumental in saving the building. We learn that the damage will be repaired immediately, with new and additional improvements. We believe the insurance fully covers the loss.

BUSINESS.—Considering the general stagnation that always follows close upon the heels of the holidays, business keeps up remarkably well, though the present weather is rather unfavorable for a large trade.

FESTIVAL.—The Lodge of Good Templars, of Waterloo, will give a mush and milk Festival at the Gilchrist Block on Saturday evening next. Admission free, Supper 25 cts.

> "Pile hi the harth, with beechen wood
> Lead down the festive table,
> Fill up the bowl with mush and milk,
> And eat as much as your able."
>
> Gentlemen be sure to,
> "Bring out your bran nu cutter,
> And git yure gals content,
> Then hitch up Dobbin, or som other kritter,
> And let the animule went."

IMPROVEMENT.—The City Hotel is being thoroughly refitted, refurnished and repainted and will be opened some time next week by S. W. Dickinson Esq., a gentleman eminently qualified in every way to make it a first-class hotel. We have no doubt of its proving successful under his efficient management.

It was not until he felt himself being rapidly hurried in the direction of Ninth avenue that he fully realized his situation. When about seven or eight doors from his own residence, he gathered all his strength, broke loose, and fled in the direction of his father's house. The unknown party then disappeared. From the description furnished, it is supposed that the apparent female was in reality a man in feminine attire. Condition of Things in Rome Under the Late Government.

The New York Tribune publishes a letter from W. J. Stillman, late United States Consul at Rome, in which he declares that the late Government of that city was the most atrocious in existence, except Louis Napoleon's; that it was conducted by espionage and tyranny. He adds: "I know spies were placad at the doors of places of Protestant worship to see if any Romans went in, and that one friend of mine, a surgeon in the French hospital, was arrested for having waited on his wife and an English woman, and carried at night to the prison of the Holy Office, the euphonic for the Inquisition, where he was menaced with severe punishment if he not only did not abstain from courtesies to Protestants, but compel his wife to leave the Anglican communion and enter the Roman. The brother of one of my most intimate friends was arrested in his bed at night, carried off by officers of the Holy Office, and never heard of again, until a year after, when the released prisoner came to tell the survivors that his brother had died in the prison with him, and was buried in the earth of the dungeon. The system of terrorism was such that liberal Romans dared meet only in public, and never permitted a stranger to approach them in conversation. Masons know very well the history of two brethren, hanged and buried in the highway for no other offense than being Masons. Worse than anything we conceive was the system of debauchery kept up by the priesthood. It was a proverb among the Romans, if one would go to a house of ill-fame, he must not go by night; at night the priests had all the places. The amours and profligacy of Antonelli were as well known as those of the late Emperor of France, and no one who has lived in Rome long can be unaware that the immorality of that city was greater than any city in Europe, except Vienna and Naples."

THE Russian navy has just received a new uniform similar in cut and pattern (loose and easy) to the naval uniform of other nations. The color remains a dark green, and the epaulets and gold lace of the officers are unchanged.

On August 20th, 1869, I prepared a field which measured sixteen acres. I broke it as deeply as good mule teams could draw the plow, say about nine inches deep. Sowed two bushels and one-eighth of Mediterranean wheat to the acre, and one bushel of oats on the same acre. One man sowed wheat and one sowed oats, all broadcast. With double shovel plows, or cultivators, I plowed the wheat under, as deep as the plows would cover; did not harrow, for that would throw the grain out. With a brush (as much as a span of mules could pull), I brushed it over, and then rolled with a roller nine feet long, and four feet in diameter. By the time frost came the oats were twelve or fourteen inches in height, and the wheat about six inches. The frost killed the oats, which fell on the wheat; covering it completely; laid there all winter under a mulch, and was green and nice in the spring, and was harvested June 25th.

I have practiced this method for five consecutive years, and always with good results. My land does not receive any manure. The fourth crop of wheat is now on the same ground. Here are the figures:

ITEMS OF COST.
Breaking 16 acres	$30.00
Sowing wheat and oats	3.50
Plowing in or under	8.00
Brushing	2.00
Rolling	2.00
34 bushels wheat for seed	30.60
16 bushels of oats	6.40
Harvesting and shocking	20.00
Thrashing and stacking straw	65.00
Interest on value of land and taxes	70.00
Total expense	$237.50
PER CONTRA.
By 610 bushels wheat (heaping ½ bu.), for which I am offered $1.25 per bushel	$762.50
20 tons of straw at $6 per ton, sold in the stack	120.00
Total	$882.50
Deduct expenses	237.50
Net	$645.00

Selling by Weight.

Mr. P. T. Quinn, a vegetable grower for over twenty years, writes wisely about the advantages of selling fruit and vegetables by weight. We quote the following:

There are but few persons who have been in the habit of buying family provisions in small quantities who have not at times been surprised in the difference in quantity of different half bushels of apples, potatoes, carrots or turnips. With vegetables, like carrots, beets and large-sized sweet potatoes, it is almost impossible to measure with accuracy. It may with fairness be supposed that the huckster is likely, under the circumstances, to favor himself instead of the buyer. The same is noticeable with cabbage. In a lot of 100 heads of cabbage, say at ten cents per head, there are hardly two of the lot that are of the same weight. They will vary from four ounces to two pounds, as the case may be.

Still, there is no way of being any more accurate under the present system of guess-work. Shrewdness on the part of the buyer may sometimes get the best of the bargain, but there is no certainty whatever of getting an equivalent for the money. It would be better for both producer and consumers if vegetables and fruit were sold by weight instead of by measure. Take, for instance, cabbage. The head is placed upon the scales, and in case it weighs ten pounds, and the price is, say one cent a pound, the point is decided at once, and the buyer is then satisfied that he gets a fair compensation for his money. It would be much less trouble to the huckster, and ten times more satisfactory to the buyer, to have weighed 10, 20 or 30 pounds of parsnips, carrots or onions, than to have them measured. In one case guessing must always be called into requisition, while in the other the scales would truthfully indicate the quantity.

Animal vs. Vegetable Food.

It is a fallacy to suppose that vegetable food is healthier and easier of digestion than animal.

Comparative anatomy, physiology, experience, our natural appetites, and the history of the world, all show that man should have a mixed diet—flesh, fish, fruit and vegetables.

The contrary doctrine is one of the most monstrous errors that ever infested society. It has carried hundreds and thousands to early graves. The popularity of this error, at one time, was partly owing to the popularity of the men who advocated it.

In this country, we love extremes, and roll them as sweet morsels under our tongues. Vegetarianism is an extreme, and therefore Americans cherished it. At the present time it is not particularly advocated by any large or influential number; but there are very many who theoretically believe in the heresy, and who think that they do wrong when they eat flesh or fish. Thus they go on all their lives violating their consciences. "Woe unto the man who creates a sin!"

The truth is, that vegetables, potatoes, turnips, carrots, etc., are not only less digestible than fresh beef and mutton, but they are also less nutritious. They linger longer on the stomach, and, being composed mostly of water, give less nutriment to the system. Therefore, many, who cannot digest vegetables at all, can eat and relish and assimilate beef-steak, mutton, lamb, chicken, turkey, etc., without difficulty. Chronic invalids and dyspeptics should, as a rule, eat largely of fresh meat and fish, and very moderately of vegetables.

It is true, however, that vegetables, bread and fruit are all necessary, and all should be used under the guidance of experience, and the taste of each individual.

But it must not be forgotten that more acute diseases—far more—arise from fruit and vegetables than from flesh and fish. Each individual must, therefore, find out for himself, by his own experience, what he can indulge in, and what he must forego.—"Our Home Physician," by Dr. Beard.

STORING APPLES.—A correspondent of Laws of Life, who claims to have had extended experience, is decidedly of the opinion that apples keep far better when put into close boxes or barrels, and secluded as much as much as possible from the air. When thus stored, he says they will come out in the spring, full and plump as when taken from the tree. Many varieties, as the Talman Sweet, Spitzenberg, and those kinds that are not considered as long keepers and shrivel badly, will do well treated in this way. I have, he continues, found universally that they keep better to let them lie without picking over. It is much better to pile them into a large bin across the cellar, say six or seven feet high and four or five feet wide, and cover them up tightly, than to lay them on shelves. I once saw such a bin that a man had kept through the winter. About the first of April he thought he would open the windows on the side of the cellar next to the bin to let in the air, that they might keep better. I was at his place and he called my attention to the fact. Two windows just over the bin were opened about ten days or two weeks, and the apples exactly opposite the windows for about one third rotted as much as a foot in depth, and the remaining part on either side were not rotted at all.

IMPROVED PASTE FOR WALL PAPER.—A new form of paste for attaching paper hangings to walls, and one which, besides possessing the merits of cheapness, has the advantage of preventing the paper from separating or peeling off, is prepared by first softening 18 pounds of finely powdered bole in water, and then draining off the surplus water from the mass. One and a quarter pounds of glue are next to be boiled into glue water, and the bole and two pounds of gypsum are then stirred in, and the whole mass forced through a seive by means of a brush. This is afterwards diluted with water to the condition of a thin paste or dressing, when it is ready for use. This paste is not only much cheaper than the ordinary flour paste, but it has the advantage of adhering better to white-washed surfaces, especially to walls that have been coated over several times, and from which the coating has not been carefully removed. In some cases it is advisable, when putting fine paper on old walls, to coat them by means of this paste with a ground paper, and to apply the paper hanging itself to this with the ordinary paste.

LOOK TO THE WINTER WHEAT.—It is rare to find a field of winter wheat on which there are not low spots where the water lies on the surface. Much might have been done to prevent this by "furrowing out" as soon as the grain was sown. Now it must be done with the hoe and spade. Some wheat may be destroyed by the operation, but one-tenth of what will be "winter killed" if the water is allowed to remain on the land. Let not a moment be lost in attending to this matter. It is by no means a substitute for under-draining, but it is far better than nothing. If the land is low, commence to dig where there is an outlet and make the water follow you up into the land. You will be astonished to find how much fall there is, even on land that is apparently a dead level. Try it and you will save wheat enough to buy a first class agricultural library.

A PREVENTIVE OF HOG CHOLERA.—To one gallon of pine tar, add one pound of sulphur; one pound of copperas, four ounces of blue vitriol. Pulverize well, mix and feed on an ear of corn about two or three times a week; take a paddle and spread the mixture on the corn as thick as you can. One man who has tried it, says: "If a farmer will follow the directions in feeding the above remedy, he will save his entire herd. I commenced feeding my hogs in the spring of the year, and they keep clean from venom, and their hair looks well and smooth, and when that is done, the hog is healthy, and at killing time I have no worms about the kidneys, or white spots or blotches on the liver."

THE purest and sweetest Cod-Liver Oil in the world is HAZARD & CASWELL'S, made on the sea-shore, from fresh, selected livers, by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

AN ESTABLISHED REMEDY.—"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are widely known as an established remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, and other troubles of the Throat and Lungs, Their good reputation and extensive use has brought out imitations, represented to be the same. Obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE

The Paper of the People.

The Tribune aims to be pre-eminently a News-paper. Its correspondents traverse every State, are present on every important battle-field, are early advised of every notable Cabinet decision, observe the proceedings of Congress, of Legislatures, and of Conventions, and report to us by telegraph all that seems of general interest. We have paid for one day's momentous advices from Europe by Cable, far more than our entire receipts for the issue in which those advices reached our readers. If lavish outlay, unsleeping vigilance, and unbounded faith in the liberality and discernment of the reading public, will enable us to make a journal which has no superior in the accuracy, variety and freshness of its contents, The Tribune shall be such a journal.

To Agriculture and the subservient arts, we have devoted, and shall persistently devote, more means and space than any of our rivals. We aim to make The Weekly Tribune such a paper as no farmer can afford to do without, however widely his politics may differ from ours. Our reports of the Cattle, Horse, Produce and General Markets are so full and accurate, our essays in elucidation of the farmers calling, and our regular reports of the Farmers' Club and kindred gatherings, are so interesting, that the poorest farmer will find therein a mine of suggestion and counsel, of which he cannot remain ignorant without positive and serious loss. The Tribune has been, is, and must be a zealous advocate of Protection to Home Industry. Regarding habitual idleness as the greatest foe to human progress, the bane of human happiness, we seek to win our countrymen in masses from the ensnaring lures of Speculation, of Traffic, and of always overcrowded professions, to the tranquil paths of Productive Industry. We would gladly deplete our overcrowded cities, where thousands vainly jostle and crowd in misguided quest of "Something to Do," to cover prairies and plains with colonies absorbed in Agriculture, Mechanics and Manufactures, and constantly projecting into the blank, void wilderness the homes and the works of civilized man. Holding the Protection of Home Industry by discriminating duties on imported Wares and Fabrics essential to the rapid beneficent diffusion of Production in all its phases and departments, and so to the instruction of our people in all the gainful arts of Peace, we urge our countrymen to adhere to and uphold that policy in undoubting faith that the true interest, not of a class or a section, but of each section and every useful class is thereby subserved and promoted.

We sell The Weekly to Clubs for less than its value in dwellings for waste paper; and though its subscription is already very large, we believe that a Half Million more farmers will take it whenever it shall be commended to their attenton. We ask our friends everywhere to aid us in so commending it.

AS A FAMILY NEWSPAPER,

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is pre-eminent. In addition to Reviews, Notices of New Books, Poetry, &c., we publish Short Stories, original and selected, which will generally be concluded in a single issue, or at most in two or three. We intend that THE TRIBUNE shall keep in advance in all that concerns the Agricultural, Manufacturing, Mining, and other interests of the country; and that, for variety and completeness, it shall remain altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive NEWSPAPER published in the world.

No newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price.

The Great Pictorial Annual.

Hostetter's United States Almanac, for 1871, for distribution, gratis, throughout the United States, and all civilized countries of the Western Hemisphere, will be published about the first of January, in the English, German, French, Norwegian, Welsh, Swedish, Holland, Bohemian and Spanish languages, and all who wish to understand the true philosophy of health should read and ponder the valuable suggestions it contains. In addition to an admirable medical treatise on the causes, prevention and cure of a great variety of diseases, it embraces a large amount of information interesting to the merchant, the mechanic, the miner, the farmer, the planter, the professional man; and the calculations have been made for such meridians and latitudes as are most suitable for a correct and comprehensive NATIONAL CALENDAR.

The nature, uses, and extraordinary sanitary effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the staple tonic and alterative of more than half the Christian world, are fully set forth in its pages, which are also interspersed with pictorial illustrations, valuable recipes for the household and farm, humorous anecdotes, and other instructive and amusing reading matter, original and selected. Among the Annuals to appear with the opening of this year, this will be one of the most useful, and may be had for the asking. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood. The Festival.

Bring holly leaves, of polished green;
The Christmas feast is bravely set,
And over all the earth, I ween,
The countless Christmas guests are met.
The sunlit air is throbbing fast
With gleeful clang of Christmas bells;
One smote them in the festal past
To cheer sad hearts in prison cells.

The world demands surcease of strife,
And claims the year's last week of life.

The ruddy wine, so rare to sip
In joyous laugh and airy jest
Is born upon the glowing lip,
And wit hath wings from guest to guest;
Yet oft o'er all is overspread
The halo of a sainted death,
And mirth's gay chords fall out of tune;—
The glossy holly overhead,
Emits the sweetest phantom breath
Of roses culled in early June!

The shadow of a great man lies
On pensive brow, on thoughtful eyes;
The memory of a great heart swells
Each bosom where his image dwells.
The carol of the poor he sung;
The sick, imprisoned, suffering, vile,
Had mighty champion in his tongue,
Nor sinned beyond his tender smile.

O faithful voice of "Little Nell,"
O holy thoughts of "Tiny Tim,"
Sound ever in the organ's swell,
Ring ever in the Christmas bell,
Inspire the universal hymn!

O purity, and truth, and worth,
One noble spirit sought you long;
In bloom of deeds array the earth,
And keep his memory green in song!

YOUNG LADIES AS THEY ARE.

From the London Saturday Review.

We have lately heard so much discussion of what is called "the movement on behalf of women," that it is a relief to find that there are still women in the world whose thoughts are occupied with love, dress and cookery, and who seem to have neither grand aims nor lofty inspirations, nor any desire for what is called the "intellectual development" of their sex. We suspect, indeed, that the vehement advocates of women's rights would denounce the editor of the Young Ladies' Journal, like Canning's knife-grinder, as a "wretch whom no sense of wrong can rouse to vengeance," and we suspect that this editor would be tolerably comfortable under the denunciation. To judge from a copious correspondence, the young ladies who read the Journal have aims and aspirations which their more exalted sisters would probably deem contemptible. They write to the editor to inquire how they may obtain white hands and avoid red noses. The questions of these correspondents are not given, but we may infer from the answers that one young lady inquired how she might look intelligent. The editor properly answered, that by study and observation she might not only look, but become, intelligent. She is advised to mix in society as much as possible, and employ her leisure in study; but it is to be feared that the object of this advice is to enable her to please men, and not to show how she may rival them. Another piece of advice appears to be founded on the old maxim of the cookery book, "First catch your hare." A lady is recommended not to mark any of her linen until after marriage. "Then let it bear your married name." A pretty domestic picture might be made of Mrs. Smith marking pocket-handkerchiefs while Mr. Smith contemplates the process, and feels that he is comfortably bagged. Several correspondents desire to be informed on which finger the "engaged ring" is to be worn. It is a frequent practice to subjoin to questions on other subjects a request to the editor to give an opinion on the hand-writing of the questioner.

HOW TO KEEP BRIGHT.

A young lady, who desires to know how to keep herself bright and fresh-looking, is advised to rise and retire to rest early, and to take plenty of outdoor exercise. The same young lady is informed that oysters and stout are considered good to take before singing. "A Sailor's Bride" is instructed in the art of making vegetable-marrow preserve, which we conjecture may be intended for the sailor to take with him to sea. "A Disappointed One" is informed that it is very early to show wrinkles, which good health and a happy temper should keep away for another ten years at least. The editor receives a vast quantity of poetry, which, for the most part, is very summarily dealt with. Thus, "Emily" is asked why she writes such nonsense verses. "A love song needs something more than rhyme. An idea is at least desirable." Equally severe is the criticism on "Brida," whose lines are declined because they are deficient in rhyme, and do not contain an idea that has not been done to death by amateur poets. The editor seems here to need to bear in mind a precept which we find in the same page, that "a soft brush is better where the skin is tender." The editorial brush must sometimes be disagreeably harsh. Thus, "Lucy" is told that her writing is not free enough, and she should use better ink and paper. Next to the character of handwriting, correspondents seem to be most solicitous about the color of their hair. One answer is, "Dark brown; a very fine texture. Writing good." Another is, "We advise you to be content with the color of your hair as it is, and not to attempt to alter it." It may encourage young gentlemen to know that one, at least, wrote to the editor and got an answer; but we think he must have put a very improper question, since the answer is, "Certainly wrong, unless she were decidedly engaged to the gentleman." We don't think that young gentlemen ought to be encouraged in censorious observation of the conduct of young ladies. The same correspondent is informed that he cannot take anything to remove a natural and healthy color without injury to his health. A young lady who suffers under the same distressing affliction of vigorous health is recommended not to be ashamed of the indication of it, and not to take drugs to make her pale. "They may bring on indigestion." Another correspondent is informed that there is no way of compressing the waist without injury to the health. Another is answered that cold tea is harmless. "We do not think it would have any effect upon your complexion." Another is assured that if she keeps in good health her complexion will be good. Another is informed that her handwriting, although not elegant, is very legible. Those correspondents who do not write well are advised to practice assiduously with good copies. We hope that the confidence of the editor in this method of improvement is well founded.

The next case in which advice is sought is more serious. "If," says the editor, "you have not the courage to speak, write and ask whether you are to CONSIDER YOURSELF ENGAGED TO HIM; otherwise he had better discontinue his attentions." The next case is also serious, but the answer, we trust, is satisfactory. "You will find a table of kindred and affinity in the Common Prayer-book, and the relation you name is not included in the list of those forbidden to marry." An inquirer who rather oddly assumes the title "Nil Desperanuum" is recommended, "if he will not take a hint," to tell "him" that she would be obliged by his not calling so often. We certainly do not see any reason why this young lady should despair. The title "Love Lies Bleeding," which occurs in the same column, is even more unsuitable to the apparent nature of the queries. We should have expected some hint of a moving story of man's deceit and woman's sorrow, but the answers are only "Yes;" that velveteen is likely to be fashionable; and that certain articles not mentioned cannot be well washed at home. We are happy to infer that love is as well as can be expected under the sanguinary circumstances. Another correspondent is informed that sermon-cases are mostly preferred plain, but if for the clergyman of a High Church, they are sometimes embroidered. A young lady calling herself "Rose Alice Maude" administered comprehensive interrogatories. She is answered (1) that banns are not published when persons are married at a register office; and (2) "We can tell you of no other way than frizzing." In a separate column of queries intended to be answered by other correspondents, we are happy to find that "Love Lies Bleeding" has banished a levity which we deemed unsuitable to her condition, and now desires to be supplied, not with information about fashion, but with the words of a pathetic ballad. The case of "Lucy Gray" appears to be rather serious. She is advised (1) to go to a doctor, (2) to forget "him" as soon as she can, (3) same as (1), and (4) to wash her hair with soft soap. "A Dark-eyed Beauty" is advised to wait patiently the result—advice which must be highly irritating, and probably useless. "It is not advisable to go out too often with him until you know really what he means." "Lizzie B." has evidently sent her photograph to the editor, who pronounces it "very pretty, though rather melancholy-looking." Another young lady is suspected by us of having submitted "his" photograph to the same unerring judgment. Many correspondents require to be told that the finger for the "engaged" ring is that on which the wedding-ring is usually worn; but here is one who is evidently familiar with the former, but desires to know where the latter ought to be placed. We may note, for the information of gentlemen, that an "engaged" ring ought to have on it either pearls or diamonds. It is curious to observe an inquiry for the name of the author of the lines:

> Where ignorance is bliss
> 'Tis folly to be wise.

In the last century, no young lady of ordinary education would have needed to ask where she might find the poem which contains them. "Rosebud" is informed that "it is not generally considered a study for ladies, and is difficult." We should much like to know what "it" is. If "Rosebud" would consult the learned contributors to the Victoria Magazine, she would be informed that all studies are proper for ladies, and difficult studies more especially proper for them.

TITTLE TATTLE.

This flood of feminine tittle-tattle, poured out weekly throughout the year, is highly comforting to men who had begun to fear that women in general were going in for the elevation of the sex. There still seem to be young ladies who are like what young ladies used to be before any "movement" was set on foot for their supposed benefit. They desire to be told that they look nice and write prettily, and they are busy with fancy work, music, and novels, and interested in fashions until "he" appears and absorbs all their thoughts. They seem to read an amazing quantity of novels in small print, which appear to us, on cursory perusal, to be neither better nor worse than many novels in large print with which we are more familiar. Mr. Disraeli himself could not surpass the splendor of the properties and distinction of the characters in a story called, "Against His Will," which was written for the special gratification of Rosebuds and Lilies, and other young ladies who have not yet been benefited by any "movement." A chapter of this story begins by stating that "the ball at the French Ambassador's was one of the pleasantest of the season." We are thus plunged at once among people who are not only at a ball of the highest fashion, but can go to or stay away from any number of similar balls as their fancy takes them. The novels which are published in these magazines and journals have the enormous advantage of illustrations which are worth any quantity of description in order to explain to a Rosebud or Lily of Corwall or Cumberland how they do things at a French Ambassador's ball. "She was sitting beneath some crimson draperies playing with her fan." Such are the words inscribed beneath a representation of this ball. We learn from further persual of the chapter that the Lady Alicia was ill at ease. She loved Percy Ayvisson (called by the world Lord Ayvission) as much as it was her nature to care for any one, but she loved herslf best, and therefore she intended to wed Mr. Dunstan. It is necessary for the purpose of the story that one of Lady Alicia's lovers shoud be a commoner, but then he partially compensates for his intrusion into such noble company by being a millioniare. Mr. Dunstan was sitting beside Lady Alicia beneath the crimson draperis, and in the course of the evening it "transpires," as the penny-a-liners say, that she is engaged to him. Lord Ayvisson, after a fortifying or exciting visit to a buffet, demands an explanation of Lady Alicia as she is quitting the ball, and obtains it. She answers his questions whether she is going to marry Mr. Dunstan with a faint "Yes," which he answers with "a bitter imprecation." Here our Rosebud may perhaps reflect that, if she were so fortunate as to have two lovers, she could throw over one of them, after due consultation with the Editor, almost as gracefully as Lady Alicia at the French Ambassador's ball, and possibly without liability to be sworn at. The unhappy Lord Ayvisson, having taken to drinking, also takes to gambling, which brings him next door to ruin, and there we leave him. It is possible that Rosebud may not, like ourselves, have read something like this many times before.

"INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT."

If we say that we rather like the frivolity of Rosebud and her sisters, we shall of course be reckoned among the opponents of the "intellectual development" of women, and shall be charged with desiring to keep women ignorant in order that they may remain content in slavery. But the jealousy of educated women which is sometimes ascribed to educated men is, we believe, imaginary. Let women enter trades and professions freely, but let them not expect, after they have done so, that they can compete for men's affection with our Rosebud, if she could only be better educated and leave off reading gorgeous descriptions of Lady Alicia's boudoir and the ball room at the French Embassy. Of course it is open to a woman to say that she does not care for marriage; but if she does, she should be warned that a doctor of law or physic might find a dangerous rival even in an unimproved, unsophisticated Rosebud, who, with an imperfectly developed intellect hangs with breathless interest over the stories, and is actually capable of admiring the poetry of the Young Ladies' Journal. We are happy to observe that the editor of this publication gives no countenance to the modern doctrine that marriage may or may not be desirable for women. Indeed, we should like to see how the editor would answer a correspondent who might have the temerity to prodound this doctrine. The editor's views as to the expediency of marriage for men are very decidedly expressed in a passage which describes the house of "the forlorn single man," who drowns for a while his cares in "the intoxicating bowl," then rushes to the gambling saloon, and ends his selfish cares a miserable drunkard. We are sure that any unmarried man who reads this description of the fate which awaits him will determine to gather a rosebud while he may, and here is a garden full of them.

Natur never makes enny blunders. When she makes a phool she means it.

A French geologist, in a recent memoir upon the origin of coal, takes the ground that it is derived entirely from marine plants, such as fucus or sea weed, which are destitute of woody fiber, and that its first place of deposit must necessarily have been at the depth of the sea, and at a place different from that in which these plants had their growth. The arguments adduced by him are varied and ingenious, and will doubtless be responded to in due course of time by those who maintain that the same substance was derived from the gradual accumulation of terrestrial plants of somewhat varied forms.

England and America.

The London Times of December 22d, after commenting on the smallness of the American army and navy, and contrasting them with the British, observes: The Americans, though pursuing a policy of economy and disarmament far more unhesitatingly than we have done, contrive, nevertheless, to command as much respect as if they were armed to the teeth; whereas we, with armaments far more extensive, are told that we have lost our title to the consideration of the world. It is worth while inquiring how such facts, if facts they are, can be accounted for or explained.

The first and most obvious reflection is that a nation of forty millions of people, rich, industrious, energetic and intrepid, must comprise resources which no enemy could venture to despise. The Americans had no army in 1860, but in 1862 they had hundreds of thousands of soldiers in the field. They had no navy, and yet in a few months' time they produced a powerful fleet of new and formidable fighting-ships. In the course of five years they raised and spent upward of £600,000,000, and such is the magnitude of their national resources that what they did in the civil war they could certainly, on a similar impulse, do over again. All this is true; but we, also, are a people of thirty millions; our wealth and credit are practically inexhaustible; and the most inveterate alarmist would not scruple to admit that our national spirit, once roused, would be capable of any efforts or sacrifices. One advantage, it must be owned, the Americans do certainly enjoy—they are a long way off. It is a "far cry" to Washington, and the Prussians observed as much to our correspondent in explanation of their patience under American offendings. But this consideration does not touch American commerce, or the liabilities of the navy, which, as the President remarks, is the only instrument at the command of the Union either for national defense or the enforcement of any foreign policy.

We must look elsewhere, therefore, for the explanation we are seeking, and it will be found, we believe, so far as it is applicable at all, in the known readiness as well as ability of the Americans to fight, notwithstanding their practical appreciation of the benefits of peace. Their exposed points are comparatively few, their resources are unbounded, and, though they do not desire war, they would not be slow to accept a challenge. We, on the other hand, have many points exposed, we make no secret of our aversion from war, and it is alleged that almost any provocation might be offered with impunity. In these considerations there is a certain force; but we must now say that, in our opinion, the contrast itself from beginning to end is more apparent than real. We do not believe that what is sometimes said of us is actually thought either in America or elsewhere. The people who taunt us with reluctance to fight are mostly those who, for purposes of their own, desire to see us fighting. As a matter of fact, we may take it for granted that foreign States have not the mean opinion of us which we are occasionally pleased to suppose. That we are not sudden or quick in quarrel, they know very well, but they also know that we can fight if we choose, that our power is truly formidable, and that when we begin a war we are not in a hurry to leave off. To a certain extent they may presume, no doubt, on our love of peace; but at the bottom they take a juster measure of our temper and resources than might be inferred from their occasional sneers and our own candid comments. When it was declared that England by the mere expression of her will could have prevented a war between the two most powerful nations of Europe, the belief itself might have been false; but the state of opinion which it implied was far nearer the truth than that which has been since represented for our warning.

Terrible Adventure.

Capt. McArthur, of Kingston, Canada, had a fearful adventure on the Grand Trunk Railway, last week. He got up from his seat and walked out to the platform, when the train was near Lancaster, to find out how near he was to the station. He overbalanced himself and fell, but managed to save his life by catching the coupling, and there he hung by his arms, in a position which offered him very little hope of reaching the platform above, in the one case, and a sure and awful death were he to drop off, in the other. No one could be placed in a more agonizing position. Through his great strength, being of strong muscular power, he held himself up while the train traveled four miles, undergoing the greatest mental as well as bodily suffering. No one discovered his danger, as it was night, and very dark. When his strength was exhausted, and he saw a bridge or tunnel on the track ahead, which would increase the danger of his situation, he prepared for the inevitable plunge, and, with a prayer of despair upon his lips, he let go his hold. Instant death would have followed, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, but, providentially, Mr. McArthur fell, more dead than alive, into a hollow or excavation in the track. The train passed over him safely, and he laid there, unconscious from his injuries and sufferings, for seven hours.

After daylight his reason came back, and once more he entered into the contemplation of an awful situation. He was unable to walk, but dragged himself, on hands and feet, to a house quite far off—some say two miles—where he got that care and assistance which his condition required. A friend he discovered who lived near by—and he proved a friend indeed—caring for him as a brother. His arms and side were quite black from the muscular exertions he was subjected to; his boots and a portion of his trowsers were torn off and his feet lacerated by being dragged along the track. He got a severe injury in the back, also, by his fall. His body presented a dreadful sight. The Kingston Whig says that on Thursday morning he was brought home, and now lies at his residence, under the care of Dr. Yates. His injuries have been very severe, but the Doctor hopes to bring him through safely.

About Fifty Cents More.—Harper's Magazine has printed many a good story, and occasionally a hard one, on clergymen; but this is a trifle ahead of any yet. A clergyman in Massachusetts engaged a brother minister to preach for him one Sunday, and subsequently—this was years ago—tendered him the usual compensation, ten dollars. He seemed hardly satisfied with the amount and remarked, as he slowly put it away in his wallet:

"I talked to the Sunday School nearly half an hour; and, besides, I had some conversation with an impenitent sinner on the church steps, and I thought fifty cents more would be about right."

Further dispatches have been received at Versailles from the command of Prince Frederick Charles, with reference to his military movements lately executed in the neighborhood of Le Mans. On Tuesday afternoon the 10th the Prussian troops engaged the main body of the French army under Gen. Chausey, occupying a position a few miles east of Le Mans. The French troops occupied a position in every respect superior, having full and excellent scope for rendering their artillery service very effective. The Prussian columns advanced rapidly on the enemy's position, and the battle soon grew hot and general. The Prussian artillery was also moved into such positions as were calculated to be most deadly and effective, and this, combined with a determined onslaught of infantry, soon began to tell on the ranks of the French troops, whose disordered and broken condition offered great and overpowering advantages to the enemy. The German front, in repeated and overwhelming charges, pressed steadily forward, while the French battallions, already wavereing, began to realize the effect of a terrible and deadly cannonade which was being poured into their midst. After a desperate but futile resistance against overwhelming fate, the French troops were compelled to evacuate the field of battle, and fell back on Le Mans, carefully covering their retreat from the enemy's pursuing columes. The losses to the French have not been ascertained, but it is known to be very considerable. Two thousand five hundred prisoners fell into the hands of the Prussians, who also captured one piece of ordinance and several mitrailleuses.

A FRENCH ACCOUNT.

A general battle was fought on the 11th under the walls of Le Mans. The Germans attacked the French Army of the Loire along the whole line. Gen. Jaurezibery, who commanded the right wing of the French, held his position on the right bank of the Huesin, and Gen. Colomb on the left and center fought desperately for six hours. The French maintained the most of their positions. The Prussian losses are estimated at 18,000 killed and wounded. The extent of French loss is unknown, but is serious.

A Midnight Marriage.

From the Pittsburgh Leader.

Edward Monaghan was determined to have his future prospects for happiness decided for good or evil before the new year came in, and with that idea uppermost called on Deputy Mayor Nichols at about 11:30 p. m. New Year's eve, with his intended, Annie Shields, who, according to her statement, was almost as aged as the woman who "fell dead in love with the dog meat man," and which the song records in such beautiful and rhtymical measure. The Deputy Mayor is always careful not to transgress the law which relates to marrying minors without the consent of their parents or guardians, and asked, as preliminary to the ceremony, "How old are you, Edward?" "Fifty years," said Monaghan. "Say you're only forty-three," suggested the blushing Annie. In reply to the same question propounded to Miss Shields, she answered, "Just forty-seven, your Honor." "Sho, say you're only thirty-five, dear," said Edward; and after this first difference in their proposed new start in life was happily and satisfactorily adjusted and the family record written in their favor, the knot was tied, and the party managed to barely get through by midnight. The young couple probably thought that it is better late than never, and have done their share towards reducing the number of old bachelors and maidens of uncertain age who hanker after the state matrimonial.

Smiths Wanted.—It has transpired at Locust Lane, Indiana county, Pa., (through Joseph Collins), that a great fortune is coming from the great-grandfather of the Smith family, and Joseph writes our postmistress to know whether there are any Smiths in Springfield connected with the Collins family, Joseph writes that "about the time of the rebellion in England, his great-grandfather came to Baltimore, with two sons. The great-grandfather had a sister who was married to a man of the name of Smith. Mr. Collins' grandfather was raised by this Smith family. A fortune to go around the Smith family would have to be a rather large thing, even if each member of the family should receive but a half cent. Whether any of our Smiths are related to the Collinses we cannot say, but we have some Collinses who can easily trace back to the Smiths, if there is any money in it.

Breeding Cows for the Dairy.

So great is the demand, and so insufficient the supply, of really good milch cows, that it is a wonder more attention is not paid to the matter of breeding them exclusively. The dairymen themselves cannot well raise their own calves, as they require all the milk of their cows for the manufacture of cheese; but they can at least do something toward the improvement of this class of stock, by using only first-class bulls of pure blood, either Short Horns or Ayrshires, to run with their cows during the summer. This would greatly enhance their value when they are sold off in the fall, and those who purchased in order to keep till their calves were dropped and old enough to be fed by hand, would be more likely to raise and well care for the heifer calves, from the certainty that they would prove valuable as milkers in the future.

Grade cows, with a strong infusion of good blood in them, always command fair prices, and usually prove better milkers and better feeders, as well as finer and larger animals, than those of purely native stock. Two crosses of Short Horn blood followed by a cross of Ayrshire make the most profitable dairy stock that can be had, without at the same time going to the heavy expense of keeping a herd of thorough-breds. If some of our best farmers, in those districts that are as yet not given to cheese-making, would go into the business of breeding cows for the dairy, we think they would find it exceeding profitable.

If good grade heifers, with one or two crosses of Short Horn heifers of a milking strain, can be had, they would form a good foundation for a herd; and, by using a Short Horn bull to them, and afterwards an Ayrshire bull to their progeny, animals could be obtained that would combine the large size and good feeding properties of the Short Horn, to which the Ayrshire cross would add the adaptability for producing milk in quantity. The Short Horn blood should be stuck to, giving a cross of Ayrshire only after two or three of the Short Horns have been put in.

If large, well made heifers of native stock, from good milking dams, can be had, the use of the Short Horn blood will soon bring their progeny into better size or form, and then a cross of Ayrshire might be added. It is now proved that the capability of a cow to secrete milk depends greatly upon her being a large feeder and good digester, and these qualities are best obtained by using Short Horn blood to cross with. Large, heavy cows are the best milk producers, yet they are not as profitable for general dairy as the larger Short Horn or Ayrshire grades. It must not be overlooked that large, heavy cows can be made most out of as beef, when their best days as milkers are passed.

By a judicious course of breeding, taking care to feed well, so as to bring the young heifers early to maturity and ready for the pail at three years old, more money can be made than one would suppose. Such animals readily command any price in reason. We have seen some sold this fall at prices ranging from $100 to $160 each. The actual cost of breeding and keeping such animals till three years old would be but little more than that of raising native stock; the principal item being the purchase and keep of a pure blooded bull, of sufficiently good pedigree to impress the high qualities of his blood upon the stock to which he used. He must be of undoubted purity of blood, and from a milking tribe, otherwise the effort to breed a high class of cows would result in a failure.

The matter of breeding stock exclusively for the dairy is one well worthy of consideration, and we are inclined to think that those who would undertake to start and establish herds with that view, would find it not only profitable, but also feel a sense of pride and satisfaction in witnessing the success of their efforts to obtain a high name that would of itself bring buyers to their doors ready to pay such prices as only really good animals can or ought to command.—Canada Farmer.

Cattle Disease in New England.

From the Boston Post.

The cattle disease, which has lately made its appearance in various parts of this State, has evidently been communicated, in each section, by cattle driven from Brighton, from which the contagion rapidly spread, in many instances being carried in the clothes of men, or contracted by cows traversing the road where diseased creatures had passed. In some instances sheep and hogs have taken the infection. In Hingham, a yoke of oxen, bought at Brighton by Mr. Caleb Cushing, were found to be diseased, and in two weeks, seventy head, some of them the finest in town, were affected. The most stringent means have been adopted to prevent the disease from spreading. Not only is the driving of cattle through the streets stopped, but no men are permitted to visit the stables where the sick cattle are, except those who have the care of them. In Newbury, Bristol county, and parts of Worcester county, the disease has appeared and spread rapidly. The symptoms are suppuration between the claws of the hoofs, blistered mouths and inability to eat. In some cases the tongues peeled, as a beef tongue will after boiling, and the rough skin was found in the manger, in large places. Salt rubbed on the tongue with a gloved hand has proved efficacious in some instances, and applications of blue vitrol and turpentiue, poultices of lard and sulphur, and carbolic acid and tar to the feet have been used with good results.

Influence of Sire on Milking Qualities of Cows.

An interesting fact has been well established in the breeding of dairy stock, that the power of transmitting the milking qualities of the breed, which belong more properly speaking to the female, resides with the male, showing that he possesses the germs, so to speak, of the qualities belonging to the cow.

It was first proved in the use of the Jersey bull, which transmitted the rich butter-making qualities of the milk belonging to the breed; but it has often been shown since, and may be regarded as well settled. And it is a practical point of so much importance that it ought to be kept constantly in mind by the breeders of dairy stock. No doubt both animals should be good of their kind, but the bull should be derived from a milking stock, or come from a cow remarkable for her excellence as a milker. A disregard of this rule has often led to unexpected failure, and hence the great importance of knowing something of the origin of the animal we intend to use as a breeder.

We have known many instances where farmers have gone to great expense of time and labor to raise the calf from some favorite cow without regard to the quality of the bull that sired it, and after all have only disappointment and disgust at the result. If any farmer has such a cow, he should remember that it is equally important to know something of the male from which she is bred.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

To See Down a Well.

It is not generally known how easy a matter it is to explore the bottom of a well, cistern, or pond of water, by the use of a common mirror. When the sun is shining brightly hold a mirror so that the reflected rays of light will fall into the water. A bright spot will be seen at the bottom, so light as to show the smallest object plainly. By this means we have examined the bottoms of wells fifty feet deep, when half full or more of water. The smallest straw or other small objects can be perfectly seen from the surface. In the same way one can examine the bottom of ponds and rivers, if the waters be somewhat clear, and not agitated by winds or rapid motion. If a well or cistern be under cover, or shaded by a building, so that the sunlight will not fall near the opening, it is only necessary to employ two mirrors, using one to reflect the light to the opening, and another to reflect it down into the water. Light may be thrown fifty or a hundred yards to the precise spot desirable, and then downward. We have used the mirror with success, to reflect light around the house, to a shaded well, and also to carry it from a south window through two rooms and then into a cistern under the north side of the house. Half a dozen reflections of light may be made, though each mirror diminishes the brilliancy of the light. Let any one not familiar with the method, try it, and he will not only find it useful, but a pleasant experiment. It will perhaps reveal a mass of sediment at the bottom of the well that has been little thought of, but which may have been a frightful source of disease by its decay in the water.

Turkey Raising.—The turkey is the largest bird on this continent; its flesh is the most savory and pleasant of any of the feathered creation, except the quail and pheasant; it will endure more than any other bird; it will eat more corn than any other domestic bird except the goose, yet it will pay us to raise them, just as it will pay us to raise the pig, which will eat more corn than any domestic quadruped.

The turkey is the most tender when young, and most difficult to raise of all the domestic fowls; yet with proper care in setting the eggs under game hens and cooping the brood at night regularly, while the turkeys are young, they may be easily reared in great abundance.

Never feed the young turkeys boiled eggs or cornmeal dough, or wheat bread crumbs. They need very little food of any kind under seven days of age, and should have nothing but sour milk set in tin pans. At about a week or ten days give them also wheat screenings or crumbs soaked in sour milk. Let this be their only feed till they begin to feather, and then give them grain of any kind. Tie the hen to a peg off to herself, with a coop near her so that she can enter at night to roost. At two weeks' old let the hen loose to roam, and if she is a game hen she will do the work of rearing the brood.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

Use of Carbonic Acid in Tanning.—In the new tanning process of Mr. Polefroy, carbonic acid is employed for the purpose of facilitating the penetration of the tannin into the interior of the skins, and thus accelerating the working of the leather, without deteriorating the quality of the product. After the removal of the hair, the skins are plunged into a bath of lime, the consequence being that, upon contact with the oak bark, tannate of lime is fermed, and the tannin penetrates as deeply as the lime has attacked; carbonate acid is then made to operate upon the lime, and an insoluble carbonate is the result, the precipitate being thrown down in the state of mud. The skin is then finished in another pit, and the whole process is completed much more quickly than usual.

Another Steamboat Burned—Thirty Lives Lost.

A dispatch from Memphis, dated Jan. 15th, says, the steamer T. L. Magill, St. Louis to New Orleans, was burned on Shoofly Bar at 9 o'clock on Saturday night. The fire broke out aft, and owing to the gale prevailing she was rapidly in flames. The passengers barely had time to rush to the bow and plunge into the water before the fire was upon them. To add to the horrors of the scene, the weather was intensely cold. Many who plunged into the river were chilled, and sank to rise no more. Survivors' names received are but imperfect. The boat had been aground for two days, and had unloaded 200 tons of her freight in order to get over the bar. She was laden with 500 tons of merchandise, including pork and coal oil. Just as the passengers were preparing, the alarm of fire was raised, and a general stampede ensued. Eleven bales of cotton were thrown overboard and were saved. The steamers St. Francis and Ann White, which had passed, were several miles above, but seeing the fire turned back, and arrived in time to render valuable assistance. The H. C. Yeager, lying near by, also rendered assistance. The reports are so confused that it is impossible to form an accurate estimate of the number of lives lost, but there were probably thirty, including four women and three children. Among these supposed to be lost are Capt. Wm. Tompkins, First Clerk Wm. McFarland, and Mr. Gorman and wife, of St. Louis. The latter were bound for Greenville, Miss. Mr. Emill, of St. Louis, states that a man and wife, cabin passengers, came floating by him, holding on to a large plank. The lady cried, "Husband, I am freezing, let us die together," and let go the plank. The husband loosed his hold, clasped her in his arms, and both sank together. By the arrival of the Alice, Pilots Murray and Kelly, and Clerk Woodruff report the following lost: Nelson Brown, second engineer; John S. Shockey, carpenter; John Snyder, deck sweep, and Cooney Cavanaugh, nephew of Capt. Dave Selwen. The second watchman and three deck hands were saved. Out of thirty-six boosters only thirteen escaped. Charley Hazlett, book-keeper, the last to leave the boat, jumped on a cotton bale, and the wind blew it ashore.

The following are known to have been lost on the steamer McGill, burned on Saturday night: Nelson Brown, second engineer; Wm. Johnson, pantryman; Annie Thomas, chambermaid, St. Louis; and an old lady and daughter. The second cook was saved.

The Arlington Resolution.

There is no man in the South w would approve an indignity offered the grave of a dead soldier, be it that a Unionist or a Rebel, a Revolutiona patriot or a Tory of '76. Doubtless th heirs of Curtis and Lee would be the la persons in the land to seek the desecr tion of a soldier's cemetary, and it was piece of hideous damagoguery to impu any such motive to Senator McCrear when he merely sought to ventilate scandalous robbery and vindicate vital and palpable provision of th Constitution.

Four years after the close of th Revolutionary war the people of th United States, in determining the po ers of the government under whic they were to live, deemed it necessary limit the power of punishment by inser ing this provision in the Constitution "No attainder of treason shall wor corruption of blood or forfeiture excep during the life of the person attained. This was done after thirteen years' ex perience in the several States, all o which had declared forfeited the estate of their Tory citizens, and was th deliberate action of the delegates fro those States with that experience fres in their minds. And now, five year and more since the close of our last wa the Senate of the United States, swor to obey that Constitution, has been aske to inquire if it has not been violated, i regard to the Arlington estate, by th government itself. The mere reque for leave to introduce a resolution of in quiry brings to the surface an exhibitio of hate and malignity such as the exci ing events of an existing war might po sibly extenuate, but not excuse. Th request was at once stigmatized by a Ne England Senator, Edmunds, of Vermon as "perfectly monstrous—a proposal dig up the bones of our dead soldier in order that certain property might b given back to rebel owners." Nine othe Radical Senators seized upon the occ sion to vilify a dead man whose memo will be a pride to Americans when th lives of these nine shall have nothing remind us of their forgotten littlenes Senator Sumner unblusingly stated th Secretary Stanton had selected th place for a grave yard expressly as means "to forever prohibit the rein tatement of the Lee family there." T do this thing, which no department o the gov ernment can, legally do, with on accord they appeal to a prejudice again the removal of the dead. Mr. Sumne brings down applause from the galler by a pompus recital of Shakespeare's ep taph, and says he would write it abov the grave of every one of our patrio dead.

The Republican Party in the South.

The Republican party in the Souther States seems to be gradually becomin demoralized. In Texas the Senators ar making war upon Governor Davis. I Arkansas Governor Clayton is a cand date for Senator against Senator Mc Donald, whose term expires the 4th o March next. In South Carolina Gov Scott is arrayed against the entire Con gressional delegation fro that State. I Louisiana Gov. Warmoth, it is said b some, is preparing to go over to th Democrats, and a lively fight is in pro gress between him and Lieutenant Gov ernor Dunn. There is little reliance however, to be placed in this allegatio against the Governor. It arises, proba bly, from his opposition to some of th appointments made by the President i Louisiana. During his recent visit her Governor Warmoth spoke in the mos cheerful manner, not only of the mate rial prosperity of the State, but of th continued supremacy of the Republica party. Still, looking at the Souther section altogether, the general impres ion among Southern politicians here i that, according to present appearance, majority of the Southern states will g Democratic at the next President election.—Herald Washington Special.

A Poor Investment.—It is reporte from Washington that the Judiciar Committee of the House will report i favor of repealing the bayonet law of th last session. The reason for this cours is not that it is unconstitutional and ar bitrary, as well as dangerous and viciou in its tendencies, but that it operates t the disadvantage of the party. Th party must be taken care of, at all ha ards. It was for the benefit of the part that this outrageous and unconstitu tional law was passed. Its repeal is no demanded for the benefit of the party The rights and liberties of the peopl are not matters of consideration. It i the interests and ends of the Radica Party that are to be subserved. Part is everything—country nothing. Th advancement of the Radical cause i essential even at the expense of the fre government. Everyththing is given u to party. No measure, however just, ca find favor in the eyes of Congress unle it is to aid "the party."

The Washington correspondent of th New York Tribune has a very poor opi ion of Congress. He says: "The XLI Congress is not likely to go down to histor with a commendable reputation for goo morals. Two of its members have bee expelled for selling cadet-ships, one re signed to escape expulsion, three or fou others got off only by the hard swearin of their accomplices, one has convicte himself of attempting to procure coun terfeit money to pass among the po negroes, one is charged with cheatin soldiers widows out of their pension and now the indictment of another fo bigamy is reported."

The re-election of Senator Roberts of South Carolina, is not received unf vorably by the Conservative press of th State. The Charleston News accepts h good promises for the future, and assur him that as long as he labors for th good of the whole State, without rega to class or party, it, at all events, w not rake up needlessly the ashes of th past. And the Columbia Phœnix sa that had the minority in the Legislatu been called upon to make a choice b tween the Radical candidates, th would very generally have voted f Senator Robertson as the least objectio able man.

A remarkable illustration of the in tative propensities of negroes was giv in the proceedings of the Georgia St Senate, the other day. Bradly, the c ored Senator from Savannah, indul in a violent tirade against a broth Senator of the same shade, nam Spring, when another went for him, brought up against a revolver and bow knife. The whole affair was an exce ingly accurate reproduction of the m ners which prevailed among the blo ed chivalry a dozen years ago.

It is stated that if eight parts of dium are mixed with five parts of p sium, the alloy will resemble merc and will remain a permanent liquid.

GOSHEN, IND., JAN. 17th 1871.

In accordance with previous call, the Editors' and Publisher's association of the 10th and 11th Districts of Indiana convened in special sesion at Goshen, on this day.

Several amendments were offered and elaborately discussed. After a full interchange of opinions, the resolution was finally amended and adopted as follows:

OUR LEGISLATURE.

We give the following extract from a letter addressed to us by Hon. L. D. Britton, Representative from this county:

"The Democracy have been successful in organizing both branches of the General Assembly, and in electing all the officers thereof; and for one I rejoice that the dark shades of Radicalism are being lifted from our political horizon, and can fully appreciate the change in the political atmosphere between now and two years ago. Yesterday we elected R. J. Bright, State Printer, James P. Mitchell, of Morgan Co. Canal, Trustee, James D'Sanno of Dearbon Co., State Librarian, Capt. Fisk, of Madison, Gen. Sparks, of Clark and Ed. Price of Sullivan, Directors of Southern Penitentiary, block of Porter Co., Smiley of Putman and Loughridge, of Miami Co., Directors of of North Prison and Williams, of Knightstown, Trustee of the Soldiers Home, all reliable Democrats,"

Now, that the Democracy have full control of the State Government, we trust, and feel confident, that the great work of economy and retrenchment will begin, and the people delivered from the enormous frauds—such as the canal swindle—and extravagant measures, which have characterized the corruption party, for the last ten years, in this State. We look for the dawning of a new era, not the millenium, perhaps, but something akin to it, when compared to the abuse and extravagance of Radicalism.

CAMELS IN NEVADA.—On a ranche on the Carson river, eight miles below the mouth of Six-mile cannon, and about seven miles below the city, is to be seen a herd of twenty-six camels, all but two of which were born in this State. But two of the old herd of nine or ten brought here some years ago, are now living. It would seem that the original lot fell in the hands of the Mexicans, who treated them very badly, overloading and abusing them. The men who now have them are Frenchmen, it seems, who formerly had some experience with camels in Europe. They find no difficulty in rearing them, and can now show twenty-four fine healthy animals of Washoe growth.

The camel may now be said to be thoroughly acclimated to this State. The owners of the herd find it no more difficult to breed and rear them than would be experienced with the sam number of goats or donkeys. The ranche upon which they are kept is sandy and sterile in the extreme, yet the animals feast and keep fat on such prickly shrubs and other weeds as no other animal would touch. When left by themselves with the coarse herbage of the desert, is to lie and roll in the hot sand. They are used to pack salt to the mills on the river from the marshes lying in the desert, some sixty miles to the eastward. They have animals that pack 1,000 pounds.—Virginia City Enterprise.

THE Detroit Free Press exclaims: "What voice has our own CHANDLER—omnipotent in the councils of the Cabinet—what voice has he but for war?" In the council of the Cabinet, the Louisville Courier says, CHANDLER'S voice is unquestioanble for war. But everywhere else it is for whiskey.

THE Cincinnati Chronicle, the western Court Journal of the Administration, says that Miss Nellie Grant is soon to be married to a young man in Covington. What office the happy youth is to get, as the doner of the bride, the Chronicle fails to inform us.

PYROGRAPHY is a new art invented in England, and consists, as the name indicates, in printing by fire through a system of metallic cylinders, which burn into wood any design required, which is indestructible. From its nominal cost and great beauty, it seems likely to take the place of much of the expensive ornamentation and inlaid work now done by hand.

HELMBOLD'S PIRATES.

The Leader of the Chicago Gang Meets with Summary Justice—A Warning to Counterfeiters of Dr. Henry T. Helmbold's "Buchu."

Some six months since Dr. Henry T. Helmbold, of New York city, the proprietor of "Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu," of world-wide reputation, learned through the course of his numerous detectives throughout the United States, that the country was being flooded with spurious medicinal preparations bearing the name "Helmbold," and he at once took the most prompt and vigorous measures to ascertain the source of the supply, and the author of the fraud. The manufactory of the bogus article was finally traced to and found to be located in the rear of No. 100 Washington street, this city, the manufacturer being one Whittier, formerly a "specialist" doctor, and at present engaged in the manufacture of spring beds.

It appears that Whittier in his purpose of pirating the name and fair fame of Dr. Helmblod's medicines, discovered, by reference to the city's directory, that there were two persons by the name of Helmbold in Chicago. These are germans, one being a mere boy, and neither speaks the English language, their names being George F. and Fritz Helmbold, and being ignorant, both were simple and unsophisticated, and admirably fitted to be easily duped. They agreed, by a written contract with Whittier, for the sum of $1,00 per year, to engage in the construction of spring beds, and also for the additional sum of $10 per month to allow their name to be used in connection with any medicinal preparation which Whittier might wish to make.

The counterfeiter had but just commenced to issue this fraud upon the Doctor's preparation (which is universally known as the most efficacious medicinal remedy for the disease for which it is recommended the world has ever known); and to preserve the purity of his reputation, as well as to guard the public against deleterious drugs purporting to issue from him, is the secret of the unstinted exertions of the Doctor to bring these rouges to justice. Upon learning of the workings of the fraud, the Doctor acted with characteristic promptness, and, having possessed himself of all the facts, moved upon the counterfeiter. Whittier was at once served with an injunction from Judge Drummond, of the United States Circuit Court, restraining him from further proceedings—the Doctor's attorneys' sworn affidavits of the two men, George and Fritz Helmbold, disclosing fully the manner in which their names had been obtained; and Whittier found himself defendant in a suit for $20,000 damages.

Concluding, wisely but too late, that be made an unfortunate choice in selecting as a victim Dr. H. T. Helmbold, he at once sought peace in the surrender of the key to his laboratory, with all its contents—the lithograph stones, electro-plates, with plates, stamps, dies, and all the material and equipment of his "Buchu" business, with a list of all the parties who had purchased his spurious compounds, and all of his confederates in other parts of the country, which will be made public at convenient season. Whittier has entered into bonds to abstain from like trespass in the future.

This is a grave warning to all persons who may delude themselves and others with the idea that they can imitate Whittier's experiment and escape punishment. It can more safely be attempted to rob a bank than meddle with the trade mark of Dr. Henry T. Helmbold. The Doctor expends immense sums for advertising his medicines and bringing home to the people a knowledge of their merits; and being by this method brought to the eyes of all the world, his medicine could not retain their popularity upon any other than the solid ground deserving merit. This being the case, the Doctor cannot sit idly by and see foisted upon the public these bogus preparations of unprincipled men. The public is not to be duped, and if such villainous compounds are to be imposed upon them for the genuine manufacture of Doctor Helmbold, the hard-earned reputation of the Doctor is jeopardized thereby, and he is determined, by the aid of the strong arm of the law, to extinguish effectually both the traffic and the traffickers in these counterfeits, and vindicate the purity of his preparations in the eyes of the people.

The Happy Change.

The friends of free, good government have cause to congratulate themselves and feel encouraged at the splendid prospect for an early realization of their most cherished desires i. e. the disintegration and desolution of the Radical party; an ending of their narrow and proscriptive policy, followed by a complete triumph of the Democracy and in the inauguration of broad, liberal and conservative principles in the administration of the government. All the signs of the times point inmistakably in that direction, The Democracy, flushed by their successes at the late elections and believing their principles to be founded upon truth, and therefore eternal, are a unit; while the radical party, disheartened and demoralized by its late reverses, and having no motive or principle in common upon which all can unite, except the principle of plundering the people and the public treasurer, is falling to pieces from its own inherent corruption and resolving its self into belligerant factions, each of which is waging a war of extermination against the other, to the infinite relief and amusement of all honest men. These troubles first assumed definite shape and form in Missouri, at the November election and the result was the overwhelming defeat of the regular radical nominee for Governor, the election of a Democratic Legislature and a gain of Democratic Congressmen. Nor have the troubles yet ended.

The difference is great and it seems cannot be reconciled, as the contest has lately been renewed between Schurz and Drake, in the United States Senate, and has becomes, more than ever, vindictive and bitter. Schurz set the ball in motion on the 15th, inst., by a speech reviewing the Missouri campaign; in which he condemned the course of Grant, McClurg & Co., and justified his own action and that of his conferees. On the 16th Drake replied in a three hour speech accusing Schurz and others with treachery and attempting to break up and destroy the radical party. Schurz replied to Drake, and together they have succeeded in creating quite a breeze.

"When rogues fall out honest men get their dues," and for that reason we are content to look on and let them "fight it out on that line." We are entirely satisfied with the results of the squabble so far, and believe that if one or both the contending factions should be utterly annihilated in the contest, the people would be largely the gainers thereby.

So go ahead gentlemen, you are doing the country a real service by exposing, to view, each others rascalities. Keep the thing going until the people understand your true character and you will be entitled to the thanks of the whole country.

Have you got good
FANNING MILLS?
If not, get one of
J. B. TAYLOR'S CELEBRATED
Excelsior Mills.

These mills have been tried for 14 years past, and not found wanting, in any respect, for cleaning wheat, corn, barley, oats, beans, peas, grass seed, flax seed, and all kinds of grain. We challenge the world for competition. These mills have taken the first premium at the Michigan and Indiana State Fairs, in 1864-65-67-68. Come and get a good Mill, and don't bring dirty wheat to market and get 20c. less per bushel.

Orders left at O. T. Clark & Co.'s store will be promptly filled.

and filled for any part of the country. Over 300 in use, in DeKalb and adjoining counties.

Teachers, Attention!

Examination regularly on the 1st Saturday of each month, at Auburn, in the Seminary Building. Exception from any one or more of the eight branches limits a license to six months, and the particular district requiring such excuse. Satisfactory evidence of good moral character required. Teachers must not commence teaching without a license. Applicants are expected to show an improved grade on a second examination, when previous grade is low, or be subject to rejection.

Respectfully, W. H. McINTOSH.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Having sold my interest in the Air Line I respectfully request, all those indebted to me on subscription to call and settle immediately at this office or to me personally. A reasonable time will be given, for all to make their settlements, and as I intend removing from the county, those accounts which still remain unsettled will be left for collection. It is important that this should be attended to immediately.

J. A. BARNS.

Mrs. Ester Ewing, an old and respected citizen of Fort Wayne, died in that city last Saturday afternoon.

We were unable to attend the editorial Convention, at Goshen, last Tuesday, but hope to do so at the next session. We give the proceedings elsewhere.

M. E. Zimmerman, formerly editor of the Fort Wayne Democrat, is establishing a democratic paper at Valparaiso, this State.

Our thanks are due our worthy representative, Hon. L. D. Britton for a copy of the message of the Governor and Report of the Hospital of the insane. The two go very well together.

A GOOD JOB.—Workman have bean buisy laying down a substantial plank walk connecting the depot with seventh st. Pedestrians will appreciate this improvement, very much during the muddy season.

ELECTION.—In another colunn we publish notice of an election, to be held at Jackson, on the 14th day of February, for the election of officers for the ensuing year, of the Ft wayne Jackson & Saginaw R. R.

TRUNKS.—Those wishing to purchase a cheap and substantial trunk should go to A. J. Pickins, opposite the Aveline House, Fort wayne. Mr. Pickins manufacture them to order, and gives you a good trunk at reasonable rates.

RELIGIOUS.—A protracted meeting has been going forward at the M. E. Church in this place for some time. The attendance is usually large, and though no converts have been gained as yet, their seems to be a general awakening and an enthusiastic spirit manifested by all.

THE single ladies of Fort Wayne organized a literary club, and would not admit any gentlemen as members. The sterner sex had their revenge, however, for the gentlemen married so many of the ladies that the membership of the club got so small that the organization was broken up.

SINGING CLASS.—A large singing class has been organized in this place, and under the efficient instructions of Prof. J. D. Spakes is making good progress in the musical art. All that can avail themselves of his services should attend, as it is an accomplishment indispensible in this age of the world.

AUCTION.— H. R. Schwegman, well known as a prominent dry goods merchant of Fort Wayne, will open a large stock of Dry Goods &c., at the room opposite the Rainier House this afternoon, Thursday. Ladies' dress goods, muslins, Jeans, Furs, &c., will be sold regardless of cost. The ladies are especially invited. Sale to continue until Saturday.

PERSONAL.—Hon. W. H. Withers, and M. V. B. Spencer Esq. prominent members of the Fort Wayne Bar, have been in attendance at the present term of Court, for several days passed.

Bro. Kennedy, of the Waterloo Press, gave us a brief call on Tuesday evening last.

LIGHT.—Our friend, C. W. Welchin, the popular Chicago barber, is agent for Rose and Danforth's burning fluid, now regarded as the best and safest in use. It gives a clear brillant light, is said to be non-explosive, and consequently is less dangerous, as a light. For sale at the Barber Shop. Also a large stock of lamp fixtures on hand. Give him a call.

PUMPS.—A splendid force pump is now being exhibited in our place, that excells all others ever invented. With hose these pumps will throw water a hundred feet from the pump, and would be very effective in case of fire. They are made of good material and will out wear three wooden pumps. Every property holder should have one. Manufactured by J. C. Price & Co., Fort Wayne.

A FULL grown wild cat followed a funeral prosession from Jackson township to Monroeville, Allen county, one day last week. While the funeral rites were being enacted in the church near by, the cat hid behind a log. A small boy discovered it, and supposing it to be a fox, shot it. After the boy learned he had killed a veritable wild cat instead of a fox, he fully realized the boldness of the deed.

DAILIES.—The Fort Wayne morning dailies, Sentinel and Gazette, are received here about nine o'clock in the morning, several hours in advance of all others. They give the latest telegraphic news and contain a large amount of local matter that is interesting to many in neighboring towns. Terms 75cts. per month payable monthly. Apply to C. S. Hare's Store for the Sentinel and at the Post Office for the Gazette.

CHANGE.—The Ft. Wayne Sentinel has been changed to an evening paper. This is done in order to supply the late news at night. An evening an morning paper is indispensable in a city like Fort Wayne.

IT is the duty of those interested in building up cities and towns to patronize and support their local newspapers first. In almost every county in the country there is a newspaper published, and it is the duty of the farmers, mechanics, merchants, and property-holders there to support the paper, if it be live. Attention will be called to their town. People will be attracted there. The paper and its place of publication become known. When we see a live newspaper we at once think it is printed in a live town, by a live man, for live men do not long remain in dead places. If we see a sickly-looking half-edited, and badly-printed paper, we at once conclude that it is published by some ragged, lazy, shiftless, half-starved individual who corresponds exactly, in this respect, with the community surrounding him.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—Hon. Wm. Clapp, presiding. This court convened last Tuesday morning and, up to this date, has acted upon the following criminal cases:

State vs. George Metcalf, illegal voting Quashed.

State vs. Wm. Oiler, surety of the peace. Dismissed.

State vs. Henry Ford, assault and battery. Left off the docket.

State vs. Free, Ringle and Kline, disturbance. Non pross. as to Ringle and Kline.

State vs. Brown et. al., assault and battery. Fined $5 each.

A number of civil cases have been disposed of so far, and the attention of the court is still engaged in hearing others.

IMPROVEMENTS.—Building material is accumulating in various quarters of our place, preparatory to the erection of a large number of houses during the coming season. From what we can learn, a general movement in improving and beautifying our place, will take place all along the line, and our citizens will vie with each other in enterprises that will redound to the credit of the whole community. We trust that the spell of this "don't care-ative" spirit has been broken, and that a new life has sprung up in our midst to characterize the course of our future. Let all awake to the fact that if we do our share toward the advancement of our own interests, we shall soon realize a condition of affairs in the future that will astonish us when compared with our present standing. This old fogy spirit cannot hold out long against the gradual march of modern enterprise and indomitable energy that prevails throughout our country.

THE Goshen Democrat cautions the fraternity to look out for one Dr. G. G. Swan so-called, who is a base deceiver, and swindles every body. Let's go for him. We've been swindled, too, not in the publishing line yet, however, but in another. A smooth oily tongued villian by the name, of Gingher, not half as respectable as some niggers, we know by that name, silently stole away one night, leaving us behind about fifteen dollars worth. He could'nt steal anything else, so he left without paying his board bill. He's a nice man, an artist in the picture line, but shows more artistic skill in swindling than in his legitimate business. He's gone to Peru, so it is said, and we hope the Peruvians will give him a dose of their bark that will cure him of his swindling propensity.

To destroy the future of a town is an easy matter. To build it on a solid foundation from which no winds of adversity can stir it, is a labor of years, and the work of strong and liberal minds. A town or country divided against itself can no more stand than a house so situated. A union of hearts and hands is essential to perpetuity—union in enterprise, in public improvements, in maintaining contracts, in preserving its good name untarnished, and everything public and private, which in any degree may effect its weal or woe. If capitalists, business men, mechanics, professional men and laborers, unite on measures calculated to add to its material wealth, a town must grow. It is not the nature of things for a "pull altogether" to result in stagnation.

WE are in receipt of the Fort Wayne Journal a paper published by the champion cake eater of the northwest, Tom Tailor. Now, Tom would'nt be a bad fellow, if it was'nt for this one failing. At a general supper in that city recently Tom came off with the usual honors at "smougging" cake, and he is becoming quite popular in this line. Being a long lean lank, cadaverous looking fellow, one may well suppose he would look attractive when thoroughly stuffed with cake. Tom says we copy from him, mistake. We took from the same paper he did.

A NEW WORK OF ART.—Prof. J. S. Conover, of Coldwater, Mich., has published one of the most useful and beautiful works of art which has ever been presented to the public. It is a symbolical Family Record, beautifully engraved from a magnificent piece of Penmanship. The designs are emblematical of the different periods of human life; with appropriate blanks for the Record of the family, the whole forming one of the most beautiful ornaments for the home, and one which should be in every family.

An energetic agent is wanted in every township in this and adjoining counties, to whom good territory and large commissions will be given. Ladies and gentlemen can here secure a good paying business for the winter, or as long a time as desired. Those wishing employment will address, with stamp,

New Publications.

We have before us a copy of the Osceola Outline published by Messrs. Teal and Blodgett, at Hersy Mich. It is a neat well printed paper, and plainly indicates there is enterprise to back it. We wish it great success financially.

"THE ANNUAL."—We have received a copy of R. H. McDonalds & Co's illustrated Annual, for 1871. It contains many handsome engravings, besides origonal and selected articles of great merit. It is of large quarto size and can be obtained at news depot for ten cents.

LEDGER ALMANAC.—We are obliged to the publisher of the Philadelphia Public Ledger for a copy of the Ledger Almanac for 1871.

YEAR BOOK.—The New York Observer establishment has issued a very fine large Year Book, and Almanac, containing many things of general interest. It is furnished for one dollar, to everybody. Subscribers to the Observer will receive this work gratuitously upon paying their subscription for one year in advance.

WHITLEY COUNTY, says the Post, according to the returns of the late census, contains a population of 14,501; an increase since 1870, of 1771. The population of Columbia City is 1,607.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We clip the following notices, from among our best exchanges:

THE first number of the AUBURN COURIER published at Auburn, this State, by T. C. Mays, has come to hand. Its contents augers well for its future, and we hope its publisher will meet with success financially.—Elkhart Review.

NEWSPAPER CHANGE.—The Air Line, published at Waterloo DeKalb county Ind., has been purchased by T. C. Mays, formerly connected with the Fort Wayne Sentinel, the office removed to Auburn, in the same county, and the name of the paper changed to THE AUBURN COURIER.—Wauseon Rep.

OUR clever friend, Tom. C. Mays, ye local of the Sentinel for the past two years, has purchased the Waterloo City Air Line office and will remove it to Auburn, in the same county and engage in the publishing business on his own hook. We wish him success in his new enterprise.—Ft. Wayne Journal.

WE have received the Auburn COURIER, a neatly printed sheet edited by T. C. Mays, whilom ye local of Fort Wayne Sentinel. The COURIER is a good looking paper like its editor, and wish the exception of its politics is all right. We mark it x.—Bluffton Chronicle.

WE have received the Auburn COURIER, a new Democratic paper just started at Auburn DeKalb county, by Thomas C. Mays, late local editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel. It is neatly gotten up. We welcome Mr. Mays into the editorial association of this District and hope that pecuniarily, every success may attend him.—Whitley Co. Commercial.

THE second number of the Auburn COURIER lies on our table. We congratulate Tom. Mays on the appearance of his paper. It is very finely printed and contains a large amount of reading matter. The local department shows the hand of one used to the business. The COURIER starts out with the delinquent tax list. It is the official paper of DeKalb County.—Ft. Wayne Gazette.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.—We have received the first numbers of the Auburn COURIER and Osceola Out Line—the later published at Hersey, Mich., by Messrs. Teal & Blodgett and the former at Auburn by T. C. Mays who has recently purchased the Waterloo Air Line and removed the material to Auburn. Both papers are neat in appearance and ably edited, thus meriting a liberal support.—Ligonier Banner.

WE have received the initial number of the Auburn COURIER, just started at Auburn, the county-seat of DeKalb County, by T. C. Mays, formerly of the Fort Wayne Sentinel. The COURIER takes the place of the Air Line, recently published in Waterloo, in the same county. It is a large and neat appearing paper, and though it is Democratic in politics, we wish it pecuniary success.—Goshen Times.

WE have before us the initial number of a new paper—the Auburn COURIER—edited and published by T. C. Mays, Esq., which compares favorably with any county paper received at this office. Mr. Mays is a practical printer, a good writer and a clever gentleman, and will make for the democracy of DeKalb a live paper. Financially, we wish you a success, friend Mays.—Steuben Rep.

MR. T. C. MAYS, formerly local editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, has purchased the Waterloo Air Line printing office, and removed it to Auburn, where he will publish a democratic journal under the name of the COURIER. Thomas is a splendid practical printer, a fine writer, a staunch democrat and a perfect gentleman. We sincerely hope he will succeed beyond his most sanguine expectations.—Bluffton Banner.

THE new Democratic paper in DeKalb county—the Auburn COURIER—is received, and presents a fine appearance for a Democratic paper in that county. We can hardly form a conclusion as to its merits, as most of the home side is taken up with a huge tax-list. We incline to the opinion, however, that Mays will shake up a right lively paper, when he gets a chance to spread himself.—Kendallville Standard.

WE are in receipt of the first number of the Auburn COURIER, a presentable and entertaining eight column paper just started by T. C. Mays, late city editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel. Mr. Mays is a thorough Democrat, an accomplished newspaper man and a genial and honorable gentleman—such a man as the public rejoices in the success of. Our business men will find the COURIER a desirable medium for advertising in, as the locality of its circulation is naturally tributary to this city.—Toledo Democrat.

AUBURN COURIER.—We have received the inital number of a new paper, just started at Auburn, Ind., by our talented young friend, T. C. Mays, Esq., for a long time connected with this office. It wears a bright, handsome appearance, and is gotton up in the characteristic style for which our friend is noted. The COURIER is, as we expected, a live, spicy, crisp journal, already an honor to journalism. In its present able hands, it cannot fail to meet with success. Our intimate acquaintance with Mr Mays fully warrants us in saying this. It certainly should be a matter of congratulation on the part of the Democracy of DeKalb county that they have been so fortunate as to secure his services, for we certainly regard him as one of the best newspaper men in the State.—Sentinel.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—Redpath, of Boston, offers Gough $3,500 in gold, and all expenses paid, to lecture ten evenings in California.

—Augustus H. Sidell, a prominent attorney, fell from the second story of a building in Brooklyn, Friday, and broke his neck.

—The Fenians of Boston are making arrangements for a public ovation to their released brethren to arrive from England, and have chosen a testimonial to them.

—Chief Justice Chase has been in New York for the last fortnight. His health continues to improve, and there is now a very encouraging prospect of his restoration.

—The scarcity of water in Jersey City continues. Six hundred men have been thrown out of employment by a temporary suspension of manufactories caused by the water famine.

—The Rulloff murder trial at Binghampton, N. Y., was ended on Thursday, by denial of a motion to stay proceedings. The sentence of the Court was made, which was that Rulloff be hanged on the 3d day of March, in the Court-House yard. The accused made no speech in the Court, but heard the sentence in solemn silence.

—A non-bailable attachment was issued on Thursday by Judge McCunn, in the Supreme Court at New York, against General Neill, in command of the garrison at Governor's Island, in consequence of his refusal to produce, on habeas corpus, John Casey, a minor, who enlisted without the consent of his parents.

—Another raid was made on Thursday upon the illicit whisky stills in the Fifth Ward, Brooklyn, by Supervisor Dutcher and the revenue officers. The raid was successfully carried out, owing to the presence of 1,000 United States troops, under command of Gen. Vogdes. Nineteen stills, containing eighty-five hogsheads of mash, valued collectively at $150,000, were destroyed.

—An inquest was held on the 11th by the Coroner of New York, in the case of John Smith, the seaman who died at Bellevue Hospital, from the effects of wounds sustained on Dec. 8, on board the ship Shattemuc. The jury rendered a verdict to the effect that Smith was killed by a cutlass in the hands of John Wright, the second mate, and the latter was accordingly remanded to the Tombs to await the action of the Grand Jury.

—The New York Evening Post says: Concerning the Nathan murderer information has come into our possession of the highest importance, but it might embarrass the officers if it were made public. By the very highest authority we are informed that a complete chain has been woven around a certain individual, and of his guilt there is no question. The man is known, and skillful detectives are tracking him; and although his present whereabouts are not known, the greatest confidence is felt that he will be apprehended within a few days.

—The murderer of Mr. Rogers, in New York, on the morning of December 31, 1868, has just been discovered in the person of a convict in the Auburn State Prison, named Francis E. Pinton. The murderer's detection was brought about by the shrewdness and vigilance of Keeper W. B. Hoffman, whose attention was first attracted to the man by his peculiarly nervous appearance in the State shop, where he has been employed. The man is a transferred prisoner from Sing Sing, to which prison he was sentenced from New York on February 3, 1869, for five years' imprisonment, for grand larceny. He was transferred to Auburn last spring. After noticing his peculiarities, Mr. Hoffman was struck by some remark made by him to a fellow-convict in relation to the Rogers affair. Pinton was afterward drawn out by his comrade, at Mr. Hoffman's instance, and made a clean breast of the circumstances connected with the robbery and murder. Pinton's confession is not yet given in detail. He is now in solitary confinement in a dungeon, for misconduct. The officials of the prison say his disclosures are in every way conclusive of his guilt. He is refusing food at present, declaring he will yet cheat the gallows by starvation.

The West.

—Twenty bars of silver, from Utah, went east, on the 16th, for Swansea, Wales.

—Red Cloud wants the Great Father to send his tribe provisions. He will be found, he says, at Fort Laramie.

—In a recent Indian "dance in blood," seven Crows and one Cheyenne were killed. Ugh!

—Thomas Cox, the young man who was accidentally shot while hunting, on Tuesday, died at Des Moines, on the 12th.

—The rope of a hoisting machine at Gaylord's foundry, Newport, Ky., on the 12th, broke, and, in recoiling, struck Patrick Cain, killing him instantly.

—On Thursday night, five masked ruffians entered the store of Thomas Scott, the County Surveyor, at Sunot Valley, Alameda county, California, shot his clerk, Otto Ludwig, dead, robbed Scott of $25, all the funds he had, and escaped.

—William McGinnis died in Minneapolis, Minn., on the 12th, from the effects of bruises received in a drunken row between himself and James Bulgan and William Taylor, on New Year's day.

—J. W. Howard committed suicide by hanging himself, at Janesville, Wis., on the 13th inst. His brother died a few weeks since, leaving him some $14,000, which seemed to affect his mind.

—A white man named Fletcher was killed by an Indian at the Crow Creek agency last Monday. Fletcher had married a squaw, the sister of the Indian who killed him, the murder growing out of a family quarrel.

—Arthur Stillwell, a young man, committed suicide at Aurora, Ind., on the 11th, by cutting his throat. He was a very important witness in the trial of McDonald Cheek for the murder of Harrison.

—Dispatches from Washington Territory report the country between Monticello and Olympia flooded. Streams are all high, and many are overflowed. Several bridges and sections of railway have been carried away. Trade is suspended. The mails are carried on horseback. It is still raining heavily, and the streams are still rising.

—G. M. Ford, of Chicago, appointed Judge of Wyoming Territory by President Johnson, whom it was supposed committed suicide at Vancouver, by papers left to indicate that he intended to drown himself, was seen walking on the wharf at San Francisco, on the 12th. Later he could not be found. He had stated that his family were on the way from the East.

—A dispatch from Quincy, Ill., says: The web is gradually closing around Stephen Ballou. The evidence is hourly growing more positive, showing almost beyond any question of doubt that he is the murderer of James Golden. The Chief of Police is in possession of additional information this afternoon, showing that other parties are implicated in the cold-blooded murder.

—Capt. Gustavus Urban, Brevet Major of the Fifth United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort McPherson, committed suicide at that post, last Wednesday morning, by shooting himself through the throat. The ball came out at the back of his head. This is the third suicide at that post, by officers, in two years.

—The premium list made up by the Directors of the Iowa State Agricultural Society, recently in session at Des Moines, is as follows: For the best ten acres of artificial timber, $1,000, payable in 1861. For the best cultivated farm, $500, payable in 1876. For the best mile of hedge, $250, payable in five years. For the best five acres of orchard, the same, payable in eight years.

—Ballou, of Quincy, Ill., the murderer of Golden, is growing very despondent, and losing his appetite rapidly, eating comparatively nothing. He is now not only charged with the murder of Golden and Dougherty, but is also charged with swindling quite a number of parties in Missouri out of horses and mules, and, from what his own sister relates, it was his intention to murder the old man Golden and his wife so soon as he could get their property in such a shape that it would fall into his possession, he having secured notes by misrepresentation on the old gentleman to the amount of $9,000.

—An accident of a shocking nature occurred in Springfield, Ill., Sunday. While a procession of a religious body was passing by the St. Nicholas Hotel, a man named John Dolan, formerly a resident of Chicago, and employed by Field, Leiter & Co., came out on the balcony. When he reached the front he overbalanced himself, and fell headlong into the street. He was taken out of a pool of blood insensible. Medical attendance was immediately called in, but the doctors consider the case hopeless.

—Deputy Sheriff Fraine arrived at Cincinnati on Thursday, having in charge Tony Bateman and A. E. Mills, charged with participating in the double murder at Devil's Elbow, last Saturday, in which S. F. Kufer and William Ferguson were killed outright, and Tony Bateman wounded. The affair grew out of Bateman attempting to eject Ferguson, who was his tenant, from his house. While Bateman was quarrelling with Mrs. Ferguson, her husband fired, killing Kufer, who had fallen in with the party near there. Ferguson was then shot and killed by Bateman.

—The report of the Special Commission on Penal and Reformatory Institutions of Michigan is just published. It strongly condemns the management of the jails, poor-houses, and county insane asylums, and recommends their abolition, and the erection of district prisons, another insane asylum, a school for the feeble-minded and idiots, a home for pauper children, work-houses for vagrant and dissolute paupers, and a hospital for diseased and aged paupers, and various other important recommendations.

—A man named named Bernard Williams, of New Orleans, recently caused the arrest, at Detroit, Mich., of his two brothers, Samuel and Abraham, charged with robbing him of $2,600. The arrest brought to light the important fact that the latter were the authors of the famous robbery of George Betts' store, several years since, of some $3,000 worth of silks, which the alleged thieves had taken to Texas and sold. If this proves true, it will lead to the release of a man named Diamond, now serving a fifteen years' sentence in the State Prison for perjury.

Washington.

—The Cherokee delegates have arrived at Washington. Their business is to secure the ratification of the treaty sent to the Senate by the President during the latter part of the former session of Congress, providing for the payment of $3,250,000, the price agreed upon under the treaty of 1868, for some twenty million acres of land lying in the southern part of Kansas.

—Dr. W. H. Roberts, a dentist, formerly of Alexandria, was killed at Liberty, Bedford county, Thursday, by William Johnson, son of Hon. James Foote Johnson. Five shots were fired by the parties, in front of the hotel, one of which passed through Roberts' heart. Johnson was committed to prison.

—The farewell dinner given to Gen. Schenck, previous to his departure for England as Minister, was one of the liveliest and pleasantest entertainments known to Washington during the present season. There were bright speeches, complimentary toasts, and a lavish outlay of wit and good feeling.

—The reduction of the number of assistant assessors, by reason of the consolidation of the Internal Revenue Divisions to date, is 543, nearly twenty-four per cent. of the whole number in the service in October, 1870. This reduction will have the effect of saving to the Government over $800,000 per annum.

—A Washington special to the Evening Post says: "The Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads agreed at their meeting to report favorably upon the bill to establish a line of American steamships between San Francisco and Australia, stopping at Honolulu, and one or two other ports, and to grant the line an annual subsidy for twelve years, of $500,000, with the consideration that thirteen trips be made each year."

Foreign.

—The tenor of the latest news makes it probable that the Germans will cut off Bourbaki's tour, and make him and his army prisoners in the mountain passes.

—All fears with regard to the crops of Uruguay and the Argentine Republic, from the continuation of the long drought, are set at rest by abundant rains.

—Advices from Buenos Ayres confirm the defeat of all the National Government armies by swift and strategical movements by Gen. Lopez Jordan and his subordinates.

—A dispatch from Gen. Bourbaki reports that the French have carried the villages of Orecey and St. Marie; also, that his troops are gaining ground. Dijon, Gray, Lure and Vesoul have been reoccupied.

—Intelligence from Paris confirms the report of a bread riot having occurred in the city. A collision between the mob and the military had taken place. The Prussian shells on the 5th are said to have fired parts of the city. An early capitulation is predicted.

—A Versailles dispatch, dated Jan. 11, says: "The bombardment of the forts of Paris was vigorously kept up to-day. Batteries which had been pushed forward toward the city, opened fire this morning. The barracks in Fort d'Issy are in ruins."

—Manteuffel is at Versailles, but starts immediately to take command of the new Army of the East, consisting of the Second, Seventh and Fourteenth Corps, which are marching via Troyes to support Gen. von Werder, and occupy the Lyons district. Manteuffel leaves Goeben in command of the First and Eighth Corps of the Landwehr Division, which is to take care of Faidherbe.

—A Brussels dispatch of the 11th says: "The result of to-day's bombardment of the French forts is that no serious damage has been done, and not a single gun has been dismounted, while 300 Germans have been killed and wounded. Mont Avron was swept by the French fire, and the Germans have evacuated the position."

—A correspondent at Paris writes on the 9th: "The city has been bombarded for three days past. Shells are falling throughout the district of Anteuil and through the Hotel des Invalides. The danger is urgent. A few tradesmen were killed. Its moral effect is discouraging, and there is a universal demand for a more energetic policy. Another insurrection was plotted out, but has been suppressed. The weather has moderated, and there is less suffering."

—The schooner Wanderer, bound for Philadelphia, was totally wrecked on Colorado reef, on the north coast of Cuba, Dec. 29. The captain and crew were saved. The Wanderer was the slaver which brought a cargo of slaves to Havana in 1859, and who were returned to Africa by the man-of-war Niagara.

—A dispatch from Versailles, dated the evening of the 12th, says: "The bombardment was heavy up to this afternoon. Several fires are seen within the French lines. The Prussians are crowding in front of Clamart and Mendon. A picket surprised near Clamart says the French have erected new batteries."

—A Vienna dispatch of the 12th says that Austria will initiate peace, and that propositions for a conference are welcomed by Bernstorff. The preliminaries are, that France shall surrender a port, twenty war ships, one thousand million thalers, and a strip of land four miles broad on the left bank of the Rhine, and destroy all forts within twenty miles of the Rhine. Prussia is to guarantee two million rations to Paris daily.

—Latest dispatches show that Paris is in a desperate strait, and make it probable that it must capitulate before the middle of next week. The battery at Clamart is doing the Prussians' good service. The accuracy of its fire was telling with great effect. Shells undoubtedly reach the Place de la Concorde. The southwest suburban part of the city is in ruins, and seems hopelessly given up to the ravages of the Prussian fire. The damage to buildings in the neighborhood of St. Jacques is great.

—The conference of Great Powers on the Eastern question met in London on the 17th inst. France is not represented. The delay in convening the representatives of Powers at the treaty of 1859 has had its consequence not in the certain absence of France, but in the embarrassing position in which England is placed by the formal notification which has been given her by the Russian Government, to the effect that the clause of the treaty of 1856, which attempts to regulate the navigation of the Black Sea, has been already abrogated by the act of the Czar Alexander, and that it is not in the power of a congress to alter his decision in this respect.

—Dispatches from Paris, dated the 9th and 10th, confirm the destructive effect of the enemy's guns in the neighborhood of the Luxembourg Gardens, in the outskirts of Paris. The destruction of buildings in that vicinity is everywhere visible, and the suburbs are entirely destroyed by the enemy's fire. The southwest suburban part of the city is in ruins, and seems hopelessly given up to the range of the Prussian fire. The damage to the buildings in the vicinity of St. Jacques is great. Neither life nor property in this quarter was safe. The battery at Clamart is doing the Prussians good service, and the report already received, that the accuracy of its fire was telling with great effect, is confirmed. Shells undoubtedly reach the Place de la Concorde.

—Late advices received at London from Bordeaux state that a review of French troops took place Tuesday last. Marshal Vinoy was present, and reviewed the troops. The soldiers betrayed their dissatisfaction with the inactive military policy of Gen. Trochu. Becoming demonstrative, they loudly demanded a leader whose policy was of a more energetic character. Many of those present clamored for the adoption of pacific measures by the Government, in which demand they were loudly seconded by the majority of the vast assemblage of citizens present. Cries of "peace" were heard along the whole line. An official meeting of the Government was subsequently convened, at which it was resolved to aid the administration, and for this purpose the ablest Generals and Ministers were selected, and officially invested with powers pertaining to this new office.

The Siege of Paris.—Private information, dispatches, and correspondence make it evident that the siege of Paris is about to undergo a modification of character hitherto entirely unlooked for. The Germans to-day are no nearer the line of defenses than when they first completed the investment. The Gazette of War and Peace, a journal of the highest military authority in Prussia, admits that Paris is beyond the reach of bombardment, and impregnable to assault. The outlying forts are at a distance of about three thousand paces from the enceinte, and their guns command a range of four to five thousand paces. The Prussian batteries cannot, therefore, be placed nearer than six or seven thousand paces from the city. The bombardment of Paris from such a distance is impossible, and the Gazette expressly says that the Germans are not in a position to bombard the center of the capital, while a partial bombardment of a few faubourgs would not affect the resistance of the besieged. Foreseeing the certainty of famine, and knowing his ability to break through the German line, it is believed that Trochu contemplates the evacuation of the city, and the concentration of his army in an immense intrenched camp at Mont Valerian, and returning on Paris empty. The recent sorties made on the east side was a part of this plan, and intended to distract the attention of the enemy from the movement of guns and provisions to Mont Valerien. That the Germans have an idea of Trochu's intentions would appear from their violent bombardment of Forts d'Issy, d'Vanves, and Montrouge, which are in the neighborhood of Mont Valerien. It is from these forts that Trochu would naturally first move the guns which it is his object to carry to his entrenched camp. The Germans aim to prevent this by a continued and a heavy fire. The very silence of the forts is, however, probable evidence that the guns are already removed.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Jan. 11.—Senate.—Yates presented a petition from the citizens of Illinois, asking for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States recognizing the Supreme Being. He stated that this subject had been agitated for five or six sessions, and he had been notified that a large number of similar petitions had accumulated. Carpenter, from Committee on Judiciary, reported back the bill authorizing the President to accept the resignation of any United States Judge, whenever satisfactory proof shall be produced of physical or other infirmities, said Judge to receive his salary during his natural life, provided that if, after his retirement, he shall accept any other office of profit his salary shall cease. Ross offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the Senate copies of all the correspondence relative to the disposal of the Miami Indian Reservation or any part thereof, subsequent to 1865. The Senate resumed consideration of Trumbull's joint resolution prohibiting members of Congress from soliciting office from the President and heads of departments. He proposed an amendment, making a violation of this act a misdemeanor, and any person found guilty liable to a fine of $1,000. Morton moved to lay the matter aside, for the purpose of taking up the Senate Dominica joint resolutions as returned from the House, with the amendment providing that nothing contained in them shall be understood or construed as committing Congress to the policy of annexation of the said Republic of Dominica. Agreed to. After considerable discussion on the amendment, the Senate determined to decide the question by 4 o'clock to-morrow; and then, at 5 o'clock, adjourned.

House.—Garfield presented a remonstrance of 307 women of Ohio against woman suffrage. The House then resumed the consideration of the joint resolution for the appointment of commissioners to San Domingo. There was a long debate, when the vote was finally reached on Mr. Ambler's amendment declaring that nothing in the resolution was to be construed as committing Congress to the annexation of Dominica. The amendment was agreed to—yeas, 106. The joint resolution, as amended, was then passed—yeas, 123; nays, 63. The House then proceeded to consider the bill introduced by Morrell, of Pennsylvania, to provide for celebrating the Independence of America, by holding an international exhibition of arts and manufactures at Philadelphia in 1876. Sargent offered an amendment providing that no expense of the exhibition or its officers should be payable out of the Treasury. Agreed to. After debate, the bill was then passed. The House at 4:30 adjourned.

Jan. 11.—Senate.—The ocean cable resolution was debated upon, and finally laid over without action until the 12th. A bill for the construction of levees in Mississippi was referred. The Senate then resumed consideration of the resolution as amended in the House, for the appointment of a commission to San Domingo, the question being on Sumner's amendment to the House amendment. After a long debate, it was rejected. Numerous other amendments were then offered and rejected, when the House amendment providing that the appointment of a commission should not commit Congress for or against annexation, was concurred in unanimously—ayes, 57; nays, none. The resolution accordingly goes to the President. At 5 o'clock the Senate adjourned.

House.—The Diplomatic Consular Appropriation bill was made the special order for the 13th inst. The bill appropriates $1,438,344. A bill for the prevention of cruelty to animals was laid over by the non-appearance of a quorum. The Speaker laid before the House a telegram from Gov. Geary, announcing the death of Hon. John Covode. On motion of Kelley, of Pennsylvania, a committee of eight members was ordered to attend the funeral obsequies of Covode. The Speaker announced the following Committee: Messrs. Mercur, Van Horn, Phelps, Beatty, Gilfillan, Axtell, Gets, and Roots. The House passed the bill making appropriations for the Louisville and Portland canal and the Des Moines rapids. Reeves offered a resolution directing that, in view of the prevalence of an infectious and fatal disease among cattle in New York and Massachusetts, believed to have been introduced from Canada, the Committee on Agriculture inquire as to whether any legislation is necessary to more effectually prevent and restrict the introduction and distribution of cattle into and through the several States and Territories. The House then, at 4:30, adjourned.

Jan. 12.—Senate.—Ramsey, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported the bill authorizing the establishment of ocean mail steamships between the United States and Australia. Cole introduced a bill for the relief of the census marshals, directing the Secretary of the Interior to increase 100 per cent. the compensation of Assistant United States Marshals in the States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains. Edmunds presented and had read a remonstrance from Mrs. Gen. Sherman and one thousand other ladies against woman suffrage; the remonstrance including the names of a number of the wives of Senators and Representatives, and prominent men in professional life throughout the country. The House joint resolution appropriating $250,000 for continuing the work on the Louisville and Portland canal, and $34,000 for the completion of the Des Moines rapids, was received from the House and adoped. After an Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

House.—The House resumed consideration of the bill, reported yesterday from the Committee on Agriculture, for the better care of cattle in transit by railroad or other means of transportation. It was debated until the expiration of the morning hour, when it went over until to-morrow. Bills for the increase of the mail steamship service between San Francisco and China, and Mexico and the United States, were introduced and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The House then, at 1:40 o'clock, went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Scofield in the chair, and resumed consideration of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill. A discussion took place on the proviso reported in the bill, directing that hereafter no laws or treaties shall be published in newspapers, except those which are general, and which laws shall be selected by the Secretary of State. Benjamin, of Missouri, offered a substitute for the paragraph, as follows: "For publishing the laws in pamphlet form, $10,000, and all laws requiring the laws to be published in newspapers to be hereby repealed." After considerable opposition, the substitute was agreed to by a vote of 69 to 62. Proceeding in the bill as far as the thirty-seventh page, the committee rose, and the House, at 4:30, adjourned.

Jan. 13.—Senate.—Thurman submitted a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate whether an account of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for any fiscal year since that ending June, 1866, had been published, as required by the Constitution and laws, and if not, why not. Sherman objected to the present consideration of the resolution, and it was laid over. After an executive session on Porter's nomination, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

House.—Hooper, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the Senate bill authorizing an increase of the five per cent. funding bonds to $500,000,000, with interest payable quarterly, with amendments, leaving the payment of the interest quarterly or otherwise, to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and providing that the total amount of funding bonds shall not be increased. The amendments were agreed to, and the bill passed. Buffington introduced a bill providing for the commission and auditing of the claims for damages by the steamers Alabama, Shenandoah, Florida, and Georgia, with their tenders; and for the issuing of bonds by the United States for the payment thereof. Referred. Adjourned.

Jan. 14.—House.—The House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Schofield in the chair, and resumed consideration of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation bill. Armstrong moved that the salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States be $10,500, instead of $6,500; and that of each Associate Justice be $10,000, instead of $6,000. After a long debate, Armstrong, in conformity with a suggestion made to him, accepted an amendment offered by Hale instead of his own, which was adopted, fixing the salary of the Chief Justice at $8,500, and the salary of associated and relieved Justices at $8,000 each. The Committee then rose, leaving two pages of the bill unfinished, and the House, at 3:30, adjourned.

Jan. 16.—Senate.—The Vice-President laid before the Senate a communication from the supervising architect of the Capitol extension in regard to the best place for the statue of Lincoln, executed by Vinnie Ream. Edwards, from the Committee on Pensions, reported favorably the House bill increasing the pensions of soldiers, of widows of deceased soldiers, and the orphans of sailors. Sherman demanded the bill ceding certain jurisdiction to the State of Ohio. This bill was then taken up and debated by Sherman and Thurman, the Senators from Ohio, for several hours. The bill gives the State of Ohio jurisdiction and title over the property purchased by the United States for a national asylum for disabled soldiers. Without disposing of the bill, the Senate, at 4 o'clock, after an Executive session, adjourned.

House.—Starkweather introduced a bill, authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain the damage done by the Alabama and other rebel cruisers. The question of the Air Line Railroad bill between New York and Washington came up from last Monday, the question being, would the House grant leave for its introduction. The question was decided in the affirmative, and the bill went over until Monday. McCreary, from the Committee on Elections, made report on the contested election case from the Sixth District of North Carolina, that Shoeber, the sitting member, is entitled to his seat, and that the contestant, Nathaniel Boyden, receive $1,000 for expenses. J. F. Long, member elected from the Fourth District of Georgia, appeared and took the oath of office. After the transaction of other business of minor importance, the House adjourned.

Scientific Items.

A German telegraph operator has discovered a mode of sharpening, with mathematical accuracy, any number of steel or iron wires, by the agency of the magnetic current. The discovery may be applied to the manufacture of pins and needles, and do away with the present process of grinding the points, so injurious and extensively fatal to the workman.

Liebreich, to whom we owe chloral, has discovered a new anæsthetic of æthylide. This subject is said to be more rapid and equable in its effects than chloroform, and has the further merit that it does not interfere with the free and natural breathing of the patient. As the effect of the application is stated to be very transient, the dose must be repeated in a lengthened operation.

A German machinist has lately invented a simple turbine wheel, as a motor for a sewing machine. This is said to occupy a very small space, and to be very easily attached to any hydrant or water pipe. As constructed by him, it is one foot wide and six inches high, composed of brass and iron, protected against rusting, and inclosed in a case. The apparatus moves without noise, and scatters no water, so that it can be as weel placed in the parlor as in the workshop. The transfer is effected by means of belts. The cost of the article is only about $10.

At a recent meeting of the San Francisco Academy of Sciences, one of the members exhibited specimens of animals which had been preserved by the use of carbonic acid. The contents of the abdomen had been removed, and the cavity filled with cotton soaked in fluid carbolic acid, reduced with alcohol at ninety-five. It is stated that the liquor evaporates and permeates every particle of the tissues, and even preserves the brain. The body dries, becomes very light, and decomposition is arrested. It is believed that the principal preservative substance used in embalming the mummies of Egypt was carbonic acid in the crude state.

The Rev. J. C. Snow, principal of the Westbrook (Maine) Seminary, writes the following in relation to the recent drought: He says that the tin roof of the seminary building, owing to its greater condensing power than wood, had helped materially in keeping up a supply of water during the drought. Frequently, after a night during which not a drop of rain fell, it would be found that a considerable quantity of water had run into the cistern; and during the continuance of the dry time, probably hogsheads of water were caught in this way.

African Diamonds—Two Stories About Them.

The most marvellous stories concerning the richness of the South African mines are published in the Pall Mall Gazette. "The diggings now extend over a hundred miles of country, and the population has reached 15,000. The other day, an only couple living in great poverty, and earning a few occasional cents by carrying fire-wood to the tents of the diggers, picked up a large diamond worth about $20,000. Their anxieties for this life are consequently over. Three poor Capetown fishermen, who had fought with fortune and the ocean storms over thirty years, sold their boats and fishing tackle, and went to the diggings. After a few weeks' absence they returned, worth over $50,000. A farmer, who was among the first to go diamond hunting, hunted in vain for a long time, and had just sold his walking stick for a shilling, and was about starting for home, when he accidentally stumbled over two gems, which have realized over $600,000. A shoemaker, a carpenter, and a waiter came from Natal to the diamond tracts, and in a week or two had stones in their possession which have brought $750,000. One of the gems weighed 105 carats."

Another authority says that the diamond fields are not diamond fields at all, and that these gems (?) which have been picked up from time to time, have turned out to be only "lumps of translucent quartz." London lapidaries will have nothing to do with these worthless crystals. The mistake which it is averred has been made is not an uncommon one, and very large stones are always of doubtful value. We have seen it stated, that the great Brazilian diamond, once the pride of the imperial collection, is a quartz crystal, and that it is now kept out of sight and not exhibited with the other crown jewels.

Testing of Railway Axles.—In view of the results of a recent accident in England, caused by the breaking of a railway car axle from the unsoundness of the material, by which eighteen persons lost their lives, Sir Joseph Whitworth, the eminent English mechanician, urges the great importance of the use of every possible means for detecting the unsoundness of the iron used in axles of railway carriages. As the best method for this purpose, he advises the drilling of a hole through the centre of its axis for its entire length, thus opening to inspection and examination that part of the material which, in the case of ordinary manufacture, is most subject to flaws. The hole should be about one inch in diameter, and with suitable mechanical arrangements, might be drilled at an average cost of about thirty-seven cents per axle, which is only about four and a half inches in diameter, could hardly escape discovery. This plan will also diminish the tendency of the axle to get heated, by removing the material near the neutral axis, and, under the circumstances, would reduce the internal strain, and thus render the axle safe.

A Female Miser.—The Westchester (Pa.) Record says: Hannah Woodward, of West Bradford, whose death, at the advanced age of eighty-two years, was published some time since, was quite excenteric in her ways. She had a house and a few acres of land, and for years lived entirely alone. She was economical in her habits almost to parsimony, depriving herself almost of the necessaries of life. One cord of wood would last her an incredible long time, and in the cold weather the chance visitor would find her sitting by the stove containing hardly enough fire to make a show, while the appartment would be as out doors. Her wardrobe was of the most scanty description. Since her death various sums of money have been found hidden away in various parts of the house, amounting altogether to about $3000. One roll of money was found hidden away in a stove pipe in the garret. In an old stocking was found $80 in gold and silver coin. She was unmarried. She left about $2,000 in real estate and about $3,000 in money.

The State debt of Pennsylvania on November 35th last was $31,111,661.90.

For Dyspepsia,

Indigestion, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and as a tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

For Coughs, Colds, and Throat Disorders, use "Browns Bronchial Troches," having proved their efficacy by a test of many years. The Troches are highly recommended and prescribed by Physicians. Those exposed to sudden changes should always be supplied with "The Troches" as they give prompt relief.

Owing to the good reputation and popularity of the Troches, many worthless and cheap imitations are offered, which are good for nothing. Be sure to obtain the true "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere.

Unanswerable Arguments.

Established facts are silent arguments which neither pen nor tongue can shake, and it is upon established facts that the reputation of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, as a health-preserving elixir, and a wholesome and powerful remedy, is based. When witnesses come forward in crowds, year after year, and reiterate the same statement in relation to the beneficial effects of a medicine upon themselves, disbelief in its efficacy is literally impossible. The credentials of this unequalled tonic and alterative, extending over a period of nearly twenty years, include individuals of every class, and residents of every clime, and refer to the most prevalent among the complaints which afflict and harrass the human family. Either a multitude of people strangers to each other, have annually been seized with an insane and motiveless desire to deceive the public, or Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, for no less than the fifth of a century, have been affording such relief to sufferers from indigestion, fever and ague, biliousness, general debility and nervous disorders, as no other preparation has ever imparted. To-day, while the eyes of the reader are upon these lines, tens of thousands of persons of both sexes are relying upon the Bitters as a sure defence against the ailments which the present season engenders, and their confidence is not misplaced. The local potions which interested dealers sometimes endeavor to foist upon the sick in its stead are everywhere meeting the fate that is due to fraud and imposture, while the demand for the great vegetable specific is constantly increasing.

Allen's Lung Balsam

Is warranted to break up the most troublesome Cough in an incredibly short time. There is no remedy that can show more evidences of real merit than this BALSAM for curing Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Croup, &c.

It is only about seven years since the Balsam was first offered to the public, and in this short time it has become known and appreciated in nearly every town and village throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Hundreds of thousands of bottles are annually sold, and thousands of witnesses testify to its unequaled power in healing the diseases that it is recommended for.

Allen's Lung Balsam

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY.

Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosciusco Co., Ind., says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."

Isaac A. Doran, M. D., of Logan Co., O., says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

It is Harmless to the most Delicate Child.

It Contains No Opium in Any Form.

It is Sold by Medicine Dealers generally.

1871. Daily, Semi-Weekly and Weekly. 1871.

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE

The Paper of the People.

The Tribune aims to be pre-eminently a News-paper. Its correspondents traverse every State, are present on every important battle-field, are early advised of every notable Cabinet decision, observe the proceedings of Congress, of Legislatures, and of Conventions, and report to us by telegraph all that seems of general interest. We have paid for one day's momentous advices from Europe by Cable, far more than our entire receipts for the issue in which those advices reached our readers. If lavish outlay, unsleeping vigilance, and unbounded faith in the liberality and discernment of the reading public, will enable us to make a journal which has no superior in the accuracy, variety and freshness of its contents, The Tribune shall be such a journal.

To Agriculture and the subservient arts, we have devoted, and shall persistently devote, more means and space than any of our rivals. We aim to make The Weekly Tribune such a paper as no farmer can afford to do without, however widely his politics may differ from ours. Our reports of the Cattle, Horse, Produce and General Markets are so full and accurate, our essays in elucidation of the farmers calling, and our regular reports of the Farmers' Club and kindred gatherings, are so interesting, that the poorest farmer will find therein a mine of suggestion and counsel, of which he cannot remain ignorant without positive and serious loss. The Tribune has been, is, and must be a zealous advocate of Protection to Home Industry. Regarding habitual idleness as the greatest foe to human progress, the bane of human happiness, we seek to win our countrymen in masses from the ensnaring lures of Speculation, of Traffic, and of always overcrowded professions, to the tranquil paths of Productive Industry. We would gladly deplete our overcrowded cities, where thousands vainly jostle and crowd in misguided quest of "Something to Do," to cover prairies and plains with colonies absorbed in Agriculture, Mechanics and Manufactures, and constantly projecting into the blank, void wilderness the homes and the works of civilized man. Holding the Protection of Home Industry by discriminating duties on imported Wares and Fabrics essential to the rapid beneficent diffusion of Production in all its phases and departments, and so to the instruction of our people in all the gainful arts of Peace, we urge our countrymen to adhere to and uphold that policy in undoubting faith that the true interest, not of a class or a section, but of each section and every useful class is thereby subserved and promoted.

We sell The Weekly to Clubs for less than its value in dwellings for waste paper; and though its subscription is already very large, we believe that a Half Million more farmers will take it whenever it shall be commended to their attention. We ask our friends everywhere to aid us in so commending it.

AS A FAMILY NEWSPAPER,

THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE is pre-eminent. In addition to Reviews, Notices of New Books, Poetry, &c., we publish Short Stories, original and selected, which will generally be concluded in a single issue, or at most in two or three. We intend that THE TRIBUNE shall keep in advance in all that concerns the Agricultural, Manufacturing, Mining, and other interests of the country; and that, for variety and completeness, it shall remain altogether the most valuable, interesting, and instructive NEWSPAPER published in the world.

No newspaper so large and complete as THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE was ever before offered at so low a price.

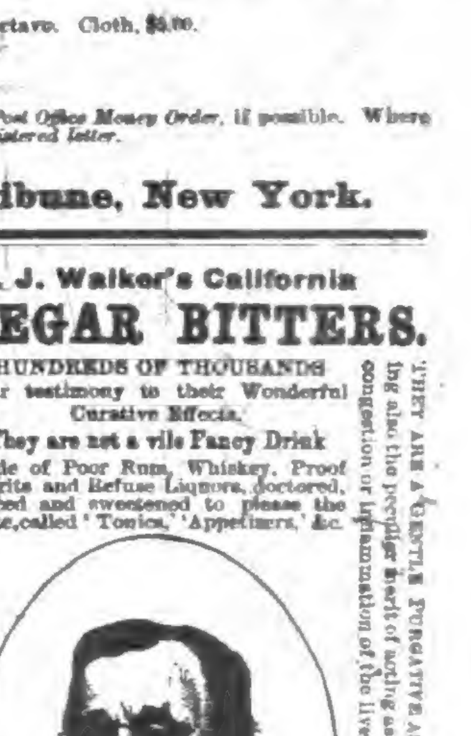
VINEGAR BITTERS.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS bear testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

They are not a vile Fancy Drink made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," &c.

For FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal. Read carefully circular around each bottle.

THEY ARE A GENTLE PURGATIVE AS WELL AS A TONIC, possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving congestion or inflammation of the liver, and all the visceral organs.



They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and a LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System. No person can take the Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell.

For INFLAMMATORY and CHRONIC RHEUMATISM and GOUT, DYSPEPSIA, or INDIGESTION, BILIOUS, REMITTENT and INTERMITTENT FEVERS, DISEASES of the BLOOD, LIVER, KIDNEYS, and BLADDER, these Bitters have been most successful.

DYSPEPSIA or INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

Jim Bludso,

(OF THE PRAIRIE BELLE.)

Wall, no! I can't tell whar he lives,
  Because he don't live, you see;
Leastways, he's got out of the habit
  Of livin' like you and me.
Whar have you been for the last three year
  That you have'n't heard folks tell
How Jimmy Bludso passed in his checks,
  The night of the Prairie Belle?

He were n't no saint—them engineers
  Is all pretty much alike—
One wife in Natchez-under-the-Hill
  And another one here, in Pike,
A keerless man in his talk was Jim
  And an awkward man in a row—
But he never flunked, and he never lied,
  I reckon he never knowed how.

And this is all the religion he had,
  To treat his engine well;
Never be passed on the river;
  To mind the pilot's bell;
And if ever the Prairie Belle took fire—
  A thousand times he swore,
He'd hold the nozzle agin the bank
  Till the last soul got ashore.

All boats has their day on the Mississip,
  And her day come at last—
The Movaster was a better boat,
  But the Belle she wouldn't be passed,
And so she came tearin' along that night—
  The oldest craft on the line,
With a nigger squat on her safety valve
  And her furnace crammed, rosin and pine.

The fire burst out as she cleared the bar,
  And burnt a hole in the night,
And quick as a flash she turned, and made
  For that willer-bank on the right.
There was running, and cursing, but Jim yelled out,
  Over all the infernal roar,
"I'll hold her nozzle agin the bank—
  Till the last galoot 's ashore."

Through the hot, black breath of the burnin' boat
  Jim Bludso's voice was heard,
And they all had trust in his cussedness,
  And knowed he would keep his word.
And, sure's your born, they all got off
  Afore the smokestacks fell—
And Bludso's ghost went up alone
  In the smoke of the Prairie Belle.

He were n't no saint—but at jedgment
  I'd run my chance with Jim,
'Longside of some pious gentlemen
  That wouldn't shook hands with him.
He seen his duty, a dead sure thing—
  And went for it thar and then:
And Christ ain't a goin' to be too hard
  On a man that died for men.

—New York Tribune.

AN ADVENTURE ON THE PLAINS.

It was a pleasant event in my life when I was thrown into the company of Grignon. I was on my way to California, and had taken the overland route in preference to any other. It was on my journey across the plains that I made his acquaintance. Our party overtook a single wagon. It contained a solitary man. The horses were dead, and the man nearly so. This man was Grignon. I paid the utmost attention to his wants. Being a medical man, I gave him all the benefit of my skill and care. As he recovered, he naturally entertained a strong friendship for me. His wagon had fallen behind the train to which he belonged, and they had been compelled by their own necessities to desert him.

The conjurer, however, was destined for a far more glorious fate than to die miserably in the desolate American desert. He was to become an astonisher to the natives (Indians), a savior to civilized lives, and a lion in California.

We resumed our journey. We had started however like many others in those days, with insufficient preparations. As soon as we found out our mistake we had to be very economical in our provisions. We killed buffaloes whenever we found them, and always replenished our water casks at every stream. At length, however, we came to a dry and parched waste, where there was scarcely a drop of water, scarcely a blade of grass, and not a single living animal of any description.

And now began the troubles of our journey. We had come into the country of the warlike Indians, and they were not slow to acquaint us of the fact. Every day they prowled around us in great numbers, threatening and insulting us. Occasionally they used to snatch up something and dart away on their horses. We did all that we could to be friendly, and determined to avoid an open rupture as far as possible, for there were only twelve on our side, and on their side apparently twelve hundred.

Every day, however, only made matters worse. In spite of our precautions, the Indians grew more and more abusive and insulting. We became watchful, and tried to be more forbearing, but our forbearance was taken for cowardice, and the savages began to think that they could do anything with us.

We held a council of war, and determined to bring matters to a crisis at once.

The crisis soon came.

One day a big Indian came riding along by us. He began talking in a contemptuous way, and gesticulating furiously. At last he asked one of our men for his gun. The man refused. The Indian repeated his question, and attempted to take the gun from his hand. The man drew back. The Indian sprang forward, flourishing his knife and threatening. At this the man calmly leveled his piece and shot the Indian through the heart.

As the wretch fell shrieking from his horse, the plain seemed to be alive with other Indians. From behind every clump of trees, every hillock, every rock, and every rising ground, they poured forth in countless numbers. We had never before seen so many assembled together as now.

And now our companion, the conjuror, came out conspicuously. He had been once in the French army, he said, and understood all its admirable discipline. A few words of warning and a short explanation sufficed to make us form a circle of the wagons, and draw up behind them, with baggage heaped up for breastworks. There we waited for the savages.

But they did not come just then. With loud whoops and screams they gathered upon the plain at a distance from us. The wretched cowards, as soon as they saw our slight preparations, were actually afraid to attack.

They waited till night.

Night came. Our defenses were made. Our wagons were arranged more closely, and the barricade of baggage was made higher, deep, and more effective. In the center were our cattle. Behind this little fortification we awaited our foes.

Shortly after dusk the tramp of thousands of hoofs shook the plain. Down upon us thundered the Indians. Shouts and yells burst around.

On they came, nearer and still nearer.

We waited for them in breathless suspense.

At last our volley burst in thunder upon them.

Shrieks arose from amidst the gloom. We saw not what the effect of our shots had been, but could only conjecture that it had been deadly.

There was a wild uproar—the confused sound of trampling horses, the noise of men calling to one another, intermingled with groans and cries of pain. Without giving them time to recover from their confusion we poured in another volley, and yet another, loading as rapidly as we could, and firing revolvers where we had them.

The effect was terrible. Many must have been wounded or killed, judging by the uproar that arose. For a time there was a confused hubub of sounds. Horses were trampling; men calling; groans were mingled with cries of rage. During all this time we fired at intervals whenever we heard a sound, husbanding our ammunition, and not willing to waste a shot.

At last there arose a wild tramp of horses, the sound moving from us, and seeming to show that our enemies had retired baffled from the assault.

Yet we were afraid of some plot. Grignon made us keep our watch, and all that night we lay on our arms, expecting every moment to hear the Indian yell, which announced the assault of the savages.

After a long night, which seemed interminable, morning dawned. As the light illumined the wide plain we looked around anxiously for our enemies, but saw none whatever. We took a hasty breakfast, and then deliberated on what we ought to do, whether to take advantage of this respite and move on, or wait a while. Most of us thought we had better hurry on; but Grignon gave it as his opinion that the Indians were not in the neighborhood and were waiting to attack us on the march. He thought that we had better wait at least another day. We all yielded to his opinion, and waited as best we could.

We did not have to wait long.

After a few hours, at about 10 o'clock, ten or a dozen horsemen appeared over a hillock in the distance, riding slowly toward us.

"They wish to have a parley," said Grignon. "Some of you step forward and see what they want. I wish to have a word to say, but will wait.

One of our men was selected, and went outside of our enclosure to meet them.

Meanwhile Grignon lifted a trunk out of the wagon which belonged to him, drew it outside, and busied himself coolly in arranging and turning over the things.

We all thought this was done for the purpose of assuming an air of indifference. So none of us noticed him particularly.

Our representative stood outside waiting for the Indians. Ten of them dismounted, and walked towards us in a friendly manner, while the rest held the horses.

The Indians, he said, did not want our lives. They wanted powder. If we would give them what we had, they would let us go in safety, and protect us from other tribes till we got beyond the plains.

Give them our powder! A pleasant request. It scarcely needed debate. We refused.

Well, then, would we give them our bullets? They were very much in want of bullets.

One of us said in a low voice that bullets were the only thing they would get from us, but the Indians did not hear him. Our representative refused very mildly.

The Indians now stood talking with one another. Grignon advanced toward them. He whispered something in a low voice to our representative, who immediately withdrew.

Grignon then stood facing the Indians.

"Are you captain?" said the spokesman of the Indians, suddenly, as he noticed Grignon.

"No, I'm the medicine man; you can't shoot these men or these horses, I save them."

Grignon advanced more closely. He was looking steadily at the Indian, and we noticed that the latter appeared to be uncomfortable under his gaze.

"See," said Grignon; "you can't shoot me. Here"—and he drew a pistol from his pocket, a revolver—"fire at me."

The Indian smiled.

"You don't want me to kill you?" said he scornfully.

"You can't."

The Indian's eyes flashed.

"Shoot!" cried Grignon, folding his arms.

The Indian hesitated a moment. He looked at us suspiciously. Then he looked at his companions, and said something in their language. They all responded vehemently.

The Indian took aim.

"You tell me to shoot," said he.

"Shoot!" said Grignon again.

The Indian fired.

Grignon smiled, and, walking forward to the Indian, he handed him a bullet.

The Indians looked paralyzed,

Grignon showed him how to fire it again.

The Indian fired the other five shots.

Grignon caught each bullet, sometimes seeming to catch it from his breast, sometimes from his face, and each time he handed it to the Indian. The other Indians were now in a state of wild excitement.

"They may all shoot if they choose," said Grignon, and, saying this, he went to his trunk, drew out nine pistols, and, coming up to them, proceeded to load each one. He took the powder and put it in, then the wadding and bullet, and the Indians saw him do it. He handed a pistol to each on loading it. Suddenly, one of those fellows took aim and fired. Grignon, without seeming to have noticed him, raised his hand and seemad to catch a bullet from his forehead. He tossed this toward the Indian, who picked it up with an air of stupefaction.

Then he stood, and told all the rest to fire.

Eight reports sounded in rapid succession.

Grignon took off his hat and walked up to the Indians. To their amazement eight bullets were in his hat. Each man took and looked at it in wonder.

"Do you want to fire again?" asked Grignon.

They all expressed a wish to do so.

"Well, hand me the pistols."

To their amazement the pistols were gone.

They looked at one another in wonder.

"You see," said Grignon, "they fired the pistols at me, too, and I swallowed them."

"Swallowed them!" faltered the Indian, and he told this to his astonished companions.

"Yes; do you want them?"

The Indian nodded.

Whereupon Grignon opened his mouth, and, rolling back his eyes, he inserted his fingers and drew a pistol apparently from his throat. Another followed. Then he drew forth a third, then a fourth, and so on until he had drawn forth the eight pistols from his throat, while the Indians stood looking on in utter bewilderment. And no wonder, for we ourselves felt no less astonishment. We could not account for it; we were as much stupefied as the Indians themselves.

After this Grignon calmly drew forth six or eight more pistols, then a number of cartridges, and finally a carbine.

"I'm the medicine man," said he solemnly.

The Indians said not a word.

"Do you want to fire again?" said he, and he offered pistols to the Indians.

They all shrunk back in horror.

Grignon tossed the pistols, cartridges, and carbine over to us, and smiled benignantly on the astonished savages.

He then shook his hand.

A knife fell out of the palm. Another followed, and another. He shook three more out of his hand, and drew a score or so out of his ears.

"Perhaps you would like something to drink?" said he, smilingly to the Indian who spoke English.

The savage looked at him suspiciously.

"What'll you have? Rum, brandy, gin, whisky, ale, porter, wine or cider?"

The Indian brightened up, and spoke to his fellows. They all preferred whisky.

Grignon asked the Indian to lend him a loose blanket which he wore. The Indian took it off doubtfully. Grignon shook it; a bottle rolled out. He shook it again; a glass rolled out. He shook it a third time; nine more tumblers fell out. He shook it up again; a corkscrew tumbled down.

"Will you take it raw or with water?" asked Grignon, as he proceeded to unscrew the cork.

The Indian said nothing.

"Isn't that good whisky?" asked Grignon, as he poured out a glass.

The Indian smelt it suspiciously. Then he tasted it. The taste was enough. He drank it all off, smacked his lips, looked around triumphantly on his companions, and then held out his glass for more. At this all the other Indians, encouraged by this experiment, clamored for some. Grignon poured away from his bottle. Each one drank and wanted more. Grignon was quite willing to pour. He was not forgetful, however, of the duties of hospitality. He walked off to the Indians who were holding the horses, who had been watching the scene in stupefaction, and offered some to them. The smell of the whisky was enough for them. They drank and wanted more.

"Not now," he said to the spokesman. "I'll give you a bottle apiece to carry home with you." And going up to the blanket, he shook out a dozen bottles of the same kind as the last.

By this time the Indians were in the jolliest mood conceivable.

"Before I give you any more," said he, "let me make you so that you will not get drunk."

He walked up to the first Indian, and took each of his hands in his, and looked at him steadfastly in the eyes for some time. Then he stroked his brows and left him; this he did to each. The Indians had all got over their suspicions, and merely expected that something good was coming. So they allowed him to do as he chose.

Grignon then stood off a little distance, and in a loud voice ordered them all to look at him. Whether they understood or not made no difference. They certainly all did look at him.

I had seen plenty of experiments before in mesmerism and electro-biology, so that the present scene did not surprise me so much as it did my companions and the other Indians.

Grignon simply stood at a distance, waving his arms at times, and giving words of command. Every word was obeyed.

First they all began to dance.

Then they all knelt down.

Then they touched hands, and could not sever themselves from one another's contact. One Indian suddenly rushed wildly around, with the others all joined to him, trying to free themselves, but utterly unable, yelling and howling like wild beasts.

At last, a shout from Grignon, and the charm was dispelled. They sprang back from one another, and stood motionless, like so many statues.

Suddenly they all began to shiver as though they were suffering from intense cold. They gathered their blankets closely around them, their teeth chattering and every limb trembling.

In an instant they were panting as though with extreme heat, drawing difficult breaths, gasping and flinging off those blankets which but a moment before they had wrapped so tightly about them.

This then passed.

They began to bark like dogs. They went down on all fours, and evidently imagined that they were of the canine species.

Then they tried to imitate the motion and croaking of frogs. After this they went through performances too numerous to mention. At one time they became rigid, and arranged themselves like the stakes of a tent—heads together, feet outward. Then four of them knelt down and tried to run about with four others on their backs; then they all jumped wildly up in the air, and began to flap their hands. At last they made a furious onset upon one another with fists, nails and teeth, and if they had not left their weapons behind, they certainly would have done some frightful injury.

The two Indians who held the horses looked on in horror, bewildered and stupefied; not knowing what to do. They would have fled in their fright, but dared not leave their companions behind. Grignon stood calm with frowning brows, watching the uproar, himself the presiding spirit of the scene. My companions were confounded. Even some of them, as they afterwards told me, thought that Grignon was the devil.

At last Grignon gave a loud shout.

The Indians fell flat on the ground.

They lay there for some time as if dead.

Then Grignon waved his arms, and they rose to their feet. All looked bewildered and frightened. With terrified glances they regarded first Grignon and then one another.

The Indian is superstitious, like all savages; in fact, like all human beings. These men saw in Grignon a terrible demon, who could exert over them any power which he chose.

He advanced toward them.

They recoiled.

He walked up nearer.

They turned and ran toward their horses.

Grignon ran after them.

Grignon followed them a short distance.

Then he turned back and came into our enclosure.

"Gather up these bottles," said he.

"Tackle up the cattle, and let us be marching."

Instantly our men rose and obeyed.

Grignon took a heavy glass of whisky, and then lay down in one of the wagons, utterly exhausted.

We traveled all that day, and the next night unmolested. Grignon slept long and soundly. After resting a long time, we pushed on our teams, so as to get as far beyond the hostile Indians as possible.

We saw nothing more of them.

"They won't dare to pursue us," said Grignon, confidently. "They'll go back and tell such a story as will be the wonder of the savages for many a long year."

Grignon was right. Not only did they not pursue us, but for all the remainder of the year, and for the next, no travelers on that route were molested.

"I don't see," said I, "how you managed to do those tricks on the open ground without any table."

Grignon smiled.

"Only clumsy performers use tables," said he. "I could have done far more wonderful things, but they would have been thrown away on those savages. I'll reserve my good tricks for San Francisco."

And so he did; for, of all the wizards, magicians, and conjurors that have visited the Golden State, none have won such fame, or excited such wonder, as my friend Grignon.

The Pleasures of Winter.

Hawthorne, after spending a winter in Rome, declared that thereafter he would, if possible, pass the inclement season in some part of the globe where it is recognized as a legitimate institution. Hawthorne has not been the only traveler who has descanted upon the discomforts of winter when experienced in a climate where frost is but an irregular and uncertain visitor. Olmsted, in his accounts of his winter travels in Texas, describes feelingly some of the sufferings he underwent from the cold "northers," against which the imperfectly constructed houses afforded a very inadequate protection. Winter, indeed, is only an affliction in places or with people where or with whom there is no suitable means for guarding against its rigors. To well fed, well housed, well clothed people, winter is as delightful as any other season of the year. Its pleasures, of course, are essentially different from those of summer, but they are no less vivid and no less genuine. Not to mention those of out-of-door sports, such as skating and sleighing, and are unexcelled by any of other seasons, it is within-doors that the winter supplies us with some of its best delights. In summer the hill-top, the brook-side, the garden, the porch, the open window—all places, in fact, that afforded us quiet and pleasant air, have equal charms upon our affection; but it is only in winter that we come to understand the full significance of the word home. When the storm is shaking our casements, and the night is black and dangerous, then, within the drawn curtains and around the blazing fire, we discover how secure, and glowing, and peaceful, and rich in affections are "hearth and home." Just as in spring the first blossoms give us delight, so in winter does the fire, when first lighted, give us singular pleasure. Perhaps of all our boyhood recollections those of the old winter's fireside are the keenest and most delightful. When the first snow fall comes this season, let the reader take down his copy of Whittier's "Snow-bound," and read the poem by the brisk blaze of crackling logs, with the sound of the outward blast reaching his ear in melancholy menace, and see what a relish the old-fashioned picture will have for him. By the brisk blaze of crackling logs! Alas! if he reads it all, in all probability it will be over the hot air of a register, or by the burnt iron of a stove. Firesides and hearthstones are things of the past, and with their departure have gone nearly all the best charms of a winter home. Modern life is surrounded with a good many conveniences, but every innovation in our households seems to signalize the death of some treasured pleasure. Your furnace, no doubt, diffuses an even warmth through the house, but, in shutting up the fireplace, it scatters the household and breaks up the old time family circle. It drives out of the home an artist who was wont to paint delicious pictures on your walls, and tint the cheeks of your dear ones with a rare glow. It excludes a friend whose bright, sparkling chatter once entertained you many a long evening, and whose blaze and glow rarely failed to fill your heart with cheerfulness and gratitude.

There are a few old fashioned people who cling to wood fires, but many of the younger generation remain ignorant of what was once the greatest charm of a winter home. "Coal," says Ike Marvel, "may have its uses" in the furnace, which takes off the sharp edge of winter from the whole interior of the house, and keeps up a day and night struggle with Boreas for the mastery, but a country home without some one open chimney around which, in time of winter twilight, when snows are beating against the panes, the family may gather and watch the fire flashing, and crackling, and flaming, and waving, until the girls clap their hands and the boys shout in a kink of exultant thankfulness, is not worthy the name."—Appleton's Journal.

RUSSIAN INTERESTS STILL EAST.—The Shanghae Courier reports that 15,000 Koreans made their way from their own country into Russian territory. The Russian Government fed as many as possible of the people thus being thrown on their hospitality; but the Korean Government is greatly enraged at the emigration, and through the medium of some Chinese officials demanded that the refugees should be returned. The Russians, on the other hand, being very willing to retain the Koreans, made a counter claim on the Korean Government for reimbursement of the cost of the food, &c., supplied to the poor people, and as this will probably be assessed at such a sum as will be beyond the power of the Korean Government to meet, the probability is that Russia has gained an accession of 15,000 good settlers to the maritime region of Eastern Siberia.

Air-Holes in Ice.

There are some cuirous facts connected with the air-holes which form themselves during winter. There are often particular spots where partial openings in the ice will be formed every winter. These I conceive to arise from warm springs, and to have no connection with air-holes properly so-called, which are not confined to any particular locality, but may appear anywhere. There is always a good deal of air under ice, and you may often see it scattered about in small bubbles when the ice is thin. It is probably air excluded in the process of crystalization, and when there is added to it sundry gases formed from decaying matter in the water, it amounts during the winter to a considerable quantity. Such collections of air, like the bubble in a spirit-level, are in a very uneasy condition, and are rapidly transferred from one place to another on any casual disturbance of the level, giving rise to one of the numerous noises which are always more or less heard on a lake covered with ice—at least, we used always to attribute to this cause a peculiar groaning sound which was very common. Now, if there should be any casual inequality in the lower surface of the ice, the air will naturally collect there, and if it is above 32 deg. F., which so far as it consists of evoled gas it probably will be, the receptacle will be increased by thawing. A dome-shaped cavity will thus be gradually formed, which will finally reach the surface; air will escape from below, and the surface-water, of which there is almost always more or less after the snow has fallen, will run down from above, wearing the little jagged channels which are characteristic of air-holes. The whole thing will then after a while freeze up again, leaving an indication of where the air-hole has been in the different color of the freshly-formed ice. I have tried several such air-holes with an axe when first formed, and have always found them to lead to such a dome-shaped cavity. I remember on one occasion an otter frequenting a large air-hole which remained open for some time, and which must have been a mile and a half to two miles distant from the nearest open water. How did he reach it? for no otter can travel that distance under water without access to air. The Indians say that they will go to greater distances still under the ice, and that they always find air there. It is likely enough that there may be many such dome-shaped cavities, which have not yet reached, and may never reach, the surface as air-holes, but one would imagine the air they contain to be not of the most wholesome character. However, this otter did frequent the air-hole for about a week, which it certainly did not reach by traveling on the ice, and though it had a few chances of breathing there in the daytime at any rate, it contrived during that period to elude the snares of a white man and of an Indian, who wasted a good deal of time in looking after it.

So far, the process of the formation of air-holes, if I am right in my explanation, is intelilgible enough; but sometimes they are formed in a manner which is difficult to account for. Upon one occasion I had crossed the lake to a friend's house, about four miles off, and we had determined to start together next morning to our nearest town, but I had to go home first. I first went over by daylight, when there certainly was nothing unusual in the appearance of the ice, which might be four or five inches thick at the time, with a slight sprinkling of wettish snow on it. I returned home about eleven at night, aud, as it was bright starlight, with only a few floating clouds, I should have noticed any change; but I came straight across, and saw nothing to attract attention. But when I crossed again at daylight in the morning, in one part of the lake the whole surface was covered with air-holes—there must have been hundreds of them. At first I gave them rather a wide berth, but, on approaching to one to examine it, I found it frozen up again, the clear ice in the hole, with very slight indications of the characteristic jagged edges, being the only sign that there had been an open air-hole there during the night. I had no axe with me to try whether they were connected with any cavity, but the appearance was as if holes of from two to five or six inches in diameter had been punched through the ice. Of course we attributed it to electricity, as people will do anything which they do not otherwise understand, and I have never been able to give any more intelligible explanation of the phenomenon. There certainly had been some faint sheet lightning that night, a very unusual thing in winter; but what connection, if any, there may have been between the two things, I cannot tell.—From Nature.

JOHN LANGTON.

A Race between a Horse and Locomotive.

The Pittsburgh Leader tells the following story:

The following are the particulars of an exciting chase of a trotting horse over the Wallkill Valley Railroad: Last Wednesday morning, as the train from Gardiner approached Lackey's Bridge, about two miles from Gardiner's Station, the engineer, in coming round the curve on the down grade toward the bridge, saw a horse ahead on the track, which, owing to the high embankment, he knew could not get out of the way. The animal, which was once a celebrated trotter, becoming frightened, started to run toward the bridge, and it was then the engineer saw the importance of the step which he was obliged to take. Knowing that he could not stop the train, it became a race for life which should reach the bridge first.

If the horse arrived before the engine it was almost sure to throw it from the track, perhaps into the abyss below, together with the whole train of passenger coaches, sacrificing every life on board. He threw the throttle-valve all the way open, and dashed down the grade at the rate of fifty miles an hour. On plunged the horse, and on came the ponderous thunder-machine with a deafening roar behind. Half the distance had been traversed, and the horse was within a few feet of the stone-work. Every pound of steam was forced into the cylinder, and the engine gave one mighty lunge, striking the animal upon the right hip, throwing him high into the air, clear from the stone below, where he fell, with his head turned partly under him, never once stirring after he was struck.

Mark Twain's Wonderful Potato.

Some of our readers, or their neighbors, may be in want of a form of certificate to append to a description of some vegetable novelty, real or imagined, and we offer the following as one of the best:

Mark Twain has been visiting Beecher's farm, Greeley's farm, and the farms of many of our leading city farmers, so that he has fallen completely in love with the business, and especially the part of it which raises the wonderful new seedling. He stated his agricultural line by the announcement of a new potato. He thus tells its origin: "I obtained it by crossing the yam of the tropics with the Canadian thistle, and by carefully selecting and cultivating the specimen for several seasons I have secured a product that permanently combines the earliness of the former and the endurance of the latter; in other words, my new potato is a rare combination of speed and bottom, and it will do to bet on. I christened it the Early Stunner—a name suggested by its extraordinary qualities and performances."

Mr. Twain, however, not having had much experience in farming, thought best to place it in the hands of some reliable man in which the public has confidence, and publishes heaps of testimonials. We give a specimen from Mr. John Smith, a respectable butcher, whose reputation for veracity is so well known. He says:

"I am perfectly satisfied with the Early Stunner. The pound that I purchased of you will do me. In fact it has already done me, so that I shall not want any more. The day after I planted them my swine made a raid on the patch, and I supposed I had lost my crop. You may imagine my disappointment, when the foremost hog, after briskly opening the first hill, suddenly dropped the slice of Stunners he had found there, and with an expression of disgust and mortification, walked off on his ear, a sadder and a wiser hog, followed by the remainder of the drove. My hogs usually range on my potato crop and a hog-proof potato has long been my hope. I hailed the Stunner with enthusiasm as being the thing for poorly fenced fields."

Dr. Jones, the celebrated physician, also gives the following testimony:

"Having no ground of my own, I planted a pound of the 'Early Stunners' in the macadamized road, opposite my residence. One of my neighbors recommended an application of plaster, as he thought the road had been 'summer followed' too much to raise crops without stimulant; as this was my first experience in agriculture, I acted upon his suggestion, and applied one of Alcock's porous plasters to each hill. The result was amazing. On the 1st day of July I had ten bushels of Buckeyes; July 2d one hundred bushels of Pinkeyes; July 4th, a pair of black eyes; July 6th, twins; July 7th, had to dig my potatoes or give bond to keep the peace.

"Accordingly I hired a couple of Irishmen, sunk a shaft in my front yard, tunneled under the road, and soon struck a magnificent vein of potatoes. I shall never know how many bushels there were, for a rumor got abroad that there was an irruption of predatory Fenians. Before the next morning's sun burst, the last potato had disappeared, and I was ruined."

Divorce Business in Chicago.

From the Chicago Republican.

Mina Landgraff petitioned the Circuit Court for a divorce from John Landgraff, to whom she was married in this city on the 18th of June, 1867. Mina had been John's housekeeper about a year before their marriage, and had been previously married in Germany to an individual of the name of Plumbhorn. Her parents having emigrated to this country, she obtained Plumbhorn's consent to come over and join them, and it was agreed that he should follow her, and that they should all live together in Wisconsin, where her parents had settled down. This was in 1860, and for five years Mina waited, and heard no tidings of the dilatory Plumbhorn. At last she got a letter from an intimate friend, stating that he was dead; and this letter she read confidentially to Landgraff, who was also satisfied that Plumbhorn was dead, and offered to take the vacant place. Mina blushingly consented, and became Mrs. Landgraff. Very soon, however, after their marriage, Landgraff came into possession of property worth $30,000, including three houses and two lots on State street, where they lived. Then he became tired of Mina, and began to treat her very cruelly, beating her when she was well, and refusing her medical aid when she was sick. At last, in March, 1868, she was obliged to flee for shelter to her friends and neighbors, in order to avoid his cruelty; and he took another housekeeper, with whom Mina alleges that he is living in a state of adultery. His persecution of her did not cease with her quitting his house. In July, 1868, he had her arrested and indicted on a charge of bigamy, alleging that her first husband was still alive in Germany; but she was honorably acquitted. His next move was to call in the assistance of a certain Justice of the Peace and some shyster lawyer, who so intimidated and coerced Mina that she was induced to put her name to a document which she now understands to be an agreement to release Landgraff from all claims to her maintenance, but the exact purport of which she did not then know. She asks the Court to inquire into these matters, and the Court has granted her leave to prosecute her suit in forma pauperis.

BURNING OF HENRY CLAY'S BIRTH PLACE.—We have just received information of the burning of the house where Henry Clay was born. It was situated on a small tract of ordinary land, near the old Slash Church, in the county of Hanover, about five miles distant from Ashland. A picture of it before us represents it as an old-fashioned, one-story frame-house, with sloping roof. It has a large chimney at either end, which, according to the fashion of the times in which they were built, have material enough in them for three modern chimneys. At one end is a shed room built over the chimney. This shed had from age settled and separated from the main building, thus leaving a gap into which dry leaves and combustible matter had from time to time fallen. A spark dropping upon them occasioned the fire, which resulted in the destruction of the humble birth place of the great American commoner. At the time of its destruction it was occupied.—Richmond Whig, Dec. 13.

A Horrible Scene.

A correspondent of the Detroit Tribune, writing from Allegan, December 26th, says: The residence of Emanuel Helpman, situated on section 14, in the township of Trowbridge, was entirely consumed by fire on the night of the 24th, with three of his children—one boy and two girls. Mr. and Mrs. Helpman barely escaped with their other two children.

Mr. Helpman had worked hard all day and retired early. His family soon followed, leaving the stove red hot and well filled. The fire must have caught in the roof from the pipe, as there was no chimney, and Mr. H. was awakened about midnight by the roof falling in. The fire had then blocked up the passage through the door, and he immediately aroused his wife, broke open a window and pulled her and two of the children out, none of them having anything on but their night clothes, and even those being nearly burned off. His other boy came to the window, and Mr. H. had nearly succeeded in pulling him out by the shirt, when the garment, which was badly burned, parted, and the boy fell back into the flames The cries of the little sufferers were heard for some time afterwards, but they could not be saved.

Mr. Helpman then covered his wife and rescued children up in the hay in the barn, and rode a horse one mile to his nearest neighbor for assistance. When he arrived he was nearly frozen, that being the coldest night of the season, and he wholly naked. He sank into a state of unconsciousness as soon as he told his story. The neighbors immediately rallied and furnished all the assistance within their power. Mr. H. is in a critical condition, being roasted and frozen in places. No calamity has ever before cast such a universal gloom over the community as this. Several hundred dollars have already been raised for the family.

SPEARING FOR DEAD MEN.—On the 15th of last month, a man named Husschmitt was seen by a potato peddler to go to the banks of the Passaic River, divest himself of most of his clothing and jump into the stream where the water was swiftest. Before night the family of the deceased called at the police station and said he was missing, and having been deranged for a few days, they believed him to be the missing man, and so it proved. Nothing was seen of the body, and it was supposed to have floated down with the tide. Recently, a man went to the river, cut a hole in the ice, and commenced spearing for eels. Hardly had he begun his eel fishing when his spear struck something in the mud, which he pulled to the surface, and the surprise of the fisherman was great when he discovered he had brought to the surface the corpse.

A BENNINGTON STORY.—During the Revolutionary war, Tories, Yorkers and Indians were about equally at discount in Bennington and neighboring towns. The late Judge Olin, then a great clumsy boy of seven years old, was sent to school to Shaftsbury. The schoolmistress, on dismissing her school, gave out that the boys going home from school, such as had hats on, should take them off and make a bow, on meeting people, the rest should nod their heads. Henry, wishing to comply with the order, but wishing to know how it was to be construed, said: "Schoolmarm, if I should meet a Tory, or a Yorker, or an Indian, must I make a bow to them?"—Troy Press.

IT is regarded in naval circles as a favorable indication of the peaceful and friendly relations of the United States with other nations that there have been no dispatches from any of our squadrons on foreign coasts for the past three months, other than those simply announcing changes of location of our naval vessels.

My Boots.

BY A. H. POE.

Now what's that you're lookin' at?
  These ain't no new breeches.
Mamma made 'em more'n a month;
  See! I broke the stitches
My! but we had fun out there,
  Where the rain-pipe's leakin'.
What you hear? I spect I knows—
  It's my boots a-creakin'.

Taddie, let my wagon 'lone,
  While my horse is eatin'!
That's my test'ment that I preach,
  When we has big meetin'.
Ain't there somein smells round here?
  —I can't say my spellin'—
Smells like leather; what you s'pose?
  It's my boots a-smellin'.

Jus' you see 'em,—don't they shine?
  Papa paid a dollar;
Four, free dollars; and a man
  Gave my dog a collar.
'Spect he wants some boots like these,
  Wouldn't he bark funny?
Guess I'll buy him whole two pair,
  When I get my money.

See that yellow man up here,
  On the painted leather!
"Clear the track," we holler out,
  Him and me together.
Mamma she looks jus' right up,
  Stops the tune she's hummin'.
'Spect she 'members by my boots
  That her Johnnie's comin'.

Nanny Norton.

"Never mind, Neddy, you will be there, and then you must c straight back as fast as you can, and will be home again before dark."

It was Nanny Norton speaking to young brother as he stood fastenin plaid round him, looking gloomily at the snowy weather.

Now Nanny and her brother liv very long time ago, when little chil ay, and big ones too, were kept strictly, and had not half the playth and pleasures that they expect now They lived in a lonely house at the of a narrow lane, and behind the h were several fields and a few outho and barns; in fact, a small farm. owner of this farm was their aunt, tress Norton, a prim, upright, sever lady, who had a great idea that all dren needed to be kept well in place. She never called the childre any name but "niece" and "neph and they never thought of her but the greatest awe.

Besides these three, there lived in house the farm-man, old Nathan had grown gray in the mistress' ser and his wife, who was still strong hearty, but as deaf as a post. You w have called it a dull home for a m boy of nine years old, if you could peeped through the lattice window one of the long winter nights.

There at the table of plain deal, clean as much as scrubbing could m it, sat the mistress, straight as pos with her high cap, white handkerc and tight sleeves, her lace-pillow b her, for she was never idle, and no the country could make such lac hers. At her side, buisy with knit from which she dared scarcely to loo sat Nanny, several years younger her brother. Behind them, hidden in the immense chimney-corner, w looked as if it were made to hold whole family, sat Nathan in large, r beaver hat, smoking his pipe, and and then kicking with his heel the in the fire on the ground at his feet all the work were done, his wife w probably be at his side, nodding head in a doze.

On this particular afternoon Ne had been told by his aunt to ca basket of new-laid eggs to a poor ne bor. Now, neighbor, in that part o world, meant any one living with few miles of one's house. So w Neddy set forth on his errand, he k that he had a long walk in the wind snow before him. He did not like job, and, like many a naughty boy before and since, he loitered and pl in the wood till twilight began to A blinding snow-storm came on, young Ned, who had not often that way before, stood still and bega wonder where he was. Then, get frightened, he began to run wi among the trees, beating off the s and rubbing his eyes. Heated and t with his run, he stood still at length his basket down, stretched himself, in the end, lay down on the snow- fell fast asleep.

All this time a kind sister at h was thinking of the little beedless Nanny watched the falling anxiously, and counted the minute Neddy's return. And when the came and passed, and the snow ce to fall, and the sky grew clear, and he did not come, she slipped out of kitchen, called Nero, his dog, to fo her and set out. Springing over stile, she was soon in the dark w calling gently his name. No an came, and Nanny stooped to the patted him, and whispered, "Good good dog, where's thy master?" A went Nero, sniffing and peering abo then, with a short bark, he set off fast trot. Nanny followed as well as could, till she saw him spring throu mass of broken branches close fallen tree, and knew by his whine he had found the boy. There lay child, sound asleep, the basket of at his side, his plaid lying loosely him. Nanny called him and shook before she could rouse him. It was late now to finish his errand; bes Nanny feared he would catch col his snowy clothes. So she made run quickly home at her side, while carried the basket.

Reaching the lane, the good s went forward to explain all to his a Mistress Norton was strict and pr indeed, but she was not unreason and she was never angry. So when boy came shyly up to her, she only hold of his two hands, looked grave him, and said very slowly: "Nep if thou hast not loitered, the poor ne bor had had her eggs this night; by fault she must now suffer." Then sent him to change his clothes, with her own hands, got him some elder-wine to warm him after his in the snow. And Neddy, sitting in Nathan's corner, swung his feet b wards and forwards, sipping the hot stuff, and thinking that he wou ever be such a silly boy again. I der whether he kept his good resol or not!

A MODEL surgical operation: To take cheek out of a young man, and the jaw out of a woman.

A LOUISVILLE merchant was surprised to discover what gave his last barrel of whiskey such a splendid bouquet. When he drew the last of it he found in the barrel two plugs of tobacco and six rats.

THE Cherokees—the bloodless Cherokees—are developing latent humor. They have appointed a day of fasting and prayer, for protection against the United States troops. The author of the joke ought to have an extra annuity.

WITH all the boasted superiority of English railroad management, more people were killed there in the last three months, by railroad accidents, than were killed in the United States, from similar causes, during the whole of the year 1870.

THE negroes of Ohio, at their late State Convention, adopted a resolution demanding of their white republican brethern, that all the schools of State should at once be thrown open and made equally free to black and white children. On with the dance. Sambo's coming—so is John Chinaman.

A BILL has been introduced in the House providing for the admission of Washington Territory as a State in the Union. The total vote of this Territory is 5,000, and the total population 30,000. Grant's uneasy itch for re-election is at the bottom of this state making buiness.

THE NEW YORK Herald is a sort of political indictator. It always shows which way the wind blows. Hear its last: "Let us have a hundred guns in honor of the election of Farnk Blair to the United States Senate from the flourishing State of Misouri; and let the Democracy in other States respond accordingly.

FLORIDA is the only State in which the Governor has a cabinet of heads of the various executive departments analogous to the Cabinet at Washington, and of this refinement, which was brought into the State at the framing of the reconstructed constitution, Governor REED has no high opinion... His cabinet ministers display the highest promptitude on pay-day, but are hard to assemble when his Excellency would bask in the effulgence of their united wisdom.

HERE is a new rule for computing interest. It is so simple and so true that every banker, merchant and clerk should post it for reference. By no other arithmetical process can the desired information be gained by so few figures:

Six per cent.—Multiply any given number of dollars by the number of days of interest desired, seperate the right hand figure and divide by six, the result is the true interest on such number of days at six per cent.

Eight per cent.—Multiply any given amount by the number of days upon which it is desired to ascertain the interest, and divide by 45, and the result will be the true interest for the time required.

Ten per cent.—Multiply the same as above and divide by 36, and the result will show the interest at 10 per cent.

THE BREATH.—We clip the following from an exchange: "The breath is the air which issues from the lungs during respiration, through the nose and mouth. This operation is performed without effort, but still it causes a motion in the external air, before the nose and mouth. The air respired is the vehicle of sound and speech. A smaller portion of oxygen, and a larger portion of carbonic acid, are contained in the air which is exhaled, than that which is inhaled. There are also aqueous particles in the breath, which are precipitated by the coldness of the external air, in the form of visible vapor; likewise other substances which owe their origin to secretions in the mouth, nose, windpipe and lungs. These cause the changes in the breath, which may be known by the smell, like the other qualities of the air. In youth the breath is insipid, and contains acid; it loses these qualities after the age of puberty, and becomes more agreeable. With advancing age it becomes again unpleasant. A bad breath is however, often caused by local affections in the nose, cancerous polypi, by discharges from the mouth, by sores on the lungs, or peculiar secretions in them. It is also caused by carious teeth, by impurities in the mouth, and by many kinds of food—such as horse-radish, onions, and also by flesh, if used to the exclusion of other food, and by fevers. In the last case it often varies with the character of the disease. The remedy for this complaint must depend upon the causes which produce it. Substances of an aromatic kind, which have a strong, rich smell, should be chewed to diminish its offensiveness. Parsley has been found of peculiar use, but it is often impossible to remove this unpleasant disorder. According to the Prussian cod, a bad breath furnishes grounds for a divorce.

BUY AT HOME.—If you do not support home enterprise, how do you expect your individual home business to be sustained?" The important fact that if you spend your money with the artizans, mechanics, merchants and manufacturers of your own community, you have good chances to get it back, seems frequently disregarded here and, although we hear of no dissenting voice when hopes and wishes are expressed for advancing the growth and prosperity of our town, the majority of our citizens seem by their action entirely forgetful of that fact. The quickest and surest way to build up and advance a town is for its citizens to foster and encourage all branches of home business, by buying at home every article they require that can be obtained.

J. B. TAYLOR'S CELEBRATED
Excelsior Mills.

These mills have been tried for 14 years past, and not found wanting, in any respect, for cleaning wheat, corn, barley, oats, beans, peas, grass seed, flax seed, and all kinds of grain. We challenge the world for competition. These mills have taken the first premium at the Michigan and Indiana State Fairs, in 1864-65-67-68. Come and get a good Mill, and don't bring dirty wheat to market and get 20c. less per bushel.

Orders left at O. T. Clark & Co.'s store will be promptly filled.

Teachers, Attention!

Examination regularly on the 1st Saturday of each month, at Auburn, in the Seminary Building. Exception from any one or more of the eight branches limits a license to six months, and the particular district requiring such excuse. Satisfactory evidence of good moral character required. Teachers must not commence teaching without a license. Applicants are expected to show an improved grade on a second examination, when previous grade is low, or be subject to rejection.

Respectfully, W. H. McINTOSH.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Having sold my interest in the Air Line I respectfully request, all those indebted to me on subscription to call and settle immediately at this office or to me personally. A reasonable time will be given for all to make their settlements, and as I intend removing from the county, those accounts which still remain unsettled will be left for collection. It is important that this should be attended to immediately.

THERE are two reasons why some people dont mind their own business. One is naven't any business, and the second that they have no mind.

OUR subscription is gradually increasing and every day adds several new names to our list. There are many in the county yet that do not take the COURIER, and we hope our friends will all come to time, and patronize their county paper.

TOM TAILOR, of the Fort Wayne Journal, regrets the removal of Dr. A. J. Erwin, from that place. The Doctor is famous for curing deformed limbs, and curved spines &c. We presume the regret is mutual, as the Doctor looses a sure case of the latter, in consequence of too much cake.

A YOUNG man itinerating in Indiana found in the kitchen of a house in Elkhart an object chained to a chair, having having a body, limbs, feet and hands like a human being, but with head and face of a monkey. The woman of the house owned that she was the monster's mother, but carried the idea that they kept it a secret from the public. How pleasant if all mothers of monkeys could keep their offspring as close as this!—Exchange.

OUT of aversight we failed to mention the change recently taken place in the Waterloo City Air Line. It has changed hands and been removed to Auburn, and is now published by Mr. Mays, formerly of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, as the Auburn COURIER. It is a neat thirty-two column sheet, and exhibits more than ordinary skill and energy. We wish our brother Mays much succes. He is deserving of i —Warsaw Union.

Temperance Alliance.

The next annual session of the Indiana State Temperance Alliance will be held at Indianapolis on Wednesday, the 1st of February The board of managers will meet the day before, An effort will be made to secure the enactment of a better temperance law. All organizations are requested to send two or more delegates and friends of the movement are invited to be present. Arrangements are being made with the roailroads to carry delegates and others at half fare

WE hear tell of a Justice's docket, in existence in one of our neighboring towns, in which are recorded the proceedings of a trail wherein the "Squire' was attorney for the defendant. Plaintiff had a preponderance of testimony on the first trial. The 'Squire rendered judgement accordingly, then entered a motion for a new trial, granted it, came in on the next beat with additional testimony, set aside the first judgment, and gave judgement to his client the defendent.

NICHOLS WEBBER, was killed in Elkhart county, last week, by his father-in-law, S. Proctor. Webber ill-treated his wife until she left him and went home. The marriage was in opposition to the fathers wishes, and after the return of the wife, he forbid the husband entering the house. He approached the house on Tuesday, of last week, to leave the oldest boy with his mother and declared he would enter, and threatened personal violence. Mr. Proctor fired upon him, with a charge of buckshot, killing him almost instantly. Mr. P. was arrested and held in bonds to the sum of $1,000.

GOOD temperance people of our place will be surprised to learn what a sot the mocking-bird makes of himself in Florida. His special weakness is the berry of the Pride-of-China tree, upon the juice of which he becomes as drunk as a boiled owl. A flock of tipsy mocking-birds is a very funny sight. They fly around in a most comical manner, hiccoughing and staggering just like real men, mixing up all sorts of bacchanalian songs and interrupting one another in the most imprudent manner, not at all like well-behaved birds

Large Auction Sale.

H. R. Schwegman, of Fort Wayne, is offering a large stock of Dry Goods at Auction, at the store rooms opposite the Rainier House Main Street. These goods are not the remnant of some old store, but were purchased in the east especially for the Western trade, by Mr. Schwegman, a few weeks ago. A careful examination will convince all they are first-class goods A full line of ladies' goods, such as silks, muslins, prints, &c., will be offered and sold regardless of cost. Also a large assortment of carpets, jeans, furs, and notions, The ladies are especially invited W. G. Alexander Auctioneer.

EVERY MAN IN HIS OWN HOUSE.—In this country there is no working man, be he ever so poor and humble, who may not, if he will, better his condition with each succeeding year. To do this he must correct the habit of spending every week the full week's earnings. He must begin by saving a little, instead of spending all. Half a dollar will amount to twenty-six dollars a year. In four years this sum will give the sum of over a hundred dollars. In ten years, adding interest to his savings, the poor man will be able to buy a little house. If he saves a dollar a week instead of a half a dollar, he can have a house twice as large; and larger still in proportion to the weekly amount of his savings. Who will not be a householder? It is what we waste, or spend in useless self-indulgence, that keeps us poor.

TAXES the veriest bit of slander ebullition. It may break out and it may not. It is an affair between two women, and "you all know" when two women get hold of anything, that it is the hardest thing in the world to learn its circumstances. They are so taciturn—like Grant—especially in regard to accepting presents. But to the point. One lady said to another lady, the following—whispered it—breathed it aloud—yes! that the other lady had collected money for soldier's orphans, and used it to buy a bonnet! And said lady, "said she," that orphans, after they got used to it, could get along without bread, but women must have bonnets or starve.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—There is considerable activity at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, preparing ships for sea. It is rumored that Admiral Rowan will be sent to the command of the European squadron.

—On Saturday last, one hundred and fifty conductors and others were discharged from the Lehigh and Susquehanna and the Morris and Essex railroads, in consequence of the strike of the coal miners.

—A Boston dispatch says Fechter has given the net proceeds of his benefit, amounting to $3,248, to charities, dividing $3,000 among the most deserving institutions, and requesting the balance to be given to the dramatic fund, if any such exists in the city.

—The New York Pastors' Association have adopted a resolution earnestly entreating and respectfully requesting all preachers and publishers to so represent to the people the Christian duty of temperance, in the fourth week in June and in the fourth week of December, to check the social usages which lead to the desecration of the Fourth of July and New Year's Day, and petition Congress in behalf of the District of Columbia and the Territories under its jurisdiction, and the general State Legislatures on behalf of their several States, to enact a suitable law to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays, election days, Fourth of July, and all other holidays.

The West.

—Col. C. B. Atchison, in the United States service, left Chicago for Cheyenne on the 18th.

—T. W. Ferry has been elected to the U. S. Senate, from Michigan, as successor to Howard.

—Shipments of gold from Central City, Cal., from three banking-houses to New York city, for 1870, amounted to $1,210,625. The estimated product of Gilpin county for the same period is $1,800,000.

Foreign.

—A French brig, with a cargo of provisions, was captured off Bordeaux, by the German frigate August.

—It is believed in London that Gen. Bourbaki has gained a victory, and raised the siege of Beaufort.

—The following is a special dispatch to the London Times: "VERSAILLES, Jan. 17.—Bismarck has been ill, but has partially recovered."

—Dispatches from Versailles state that Prince Frederick Charles announces Chanzy's army broken up, disorganized, and retreating in three directions. Twenty-five thousand prisoners have been taken.

—Gen. von Werder was seriously attacked on the 16th, by four French corps in a position south of Belfort. The battle lasted nine hours, and the enemy was victoriously repelled at all points. The German loss was 200.

—The World's special says: "The wounded in Paris are being slain. The shells reach the Hospital, and General Trochu has informed Gen. von Moltke that Germans have been placed there. Ducrot was seriously ill on the 12th."

—A Bordeaux dispatch says: The Prussians have occupied Alerien. Gen. Chanzey continues to retreat in good order. In the north the advance guard of Gen. Faidherbe's army re-entered Albert. The Army of the East, under Bourbaki, is rapidly approaching Belfort, and the news of the raising of the siege of Montmatre is expected.

—A London correspondent writes on the 17th: "I have most unquestionable authority for stating that Bismarck is very seriously, if not fatally, ill. Discredit all statements to the contrary, as energetic efforts are made to conceal the fact. I am able to state positively the exact words used by Odo Russell, English Envoy, who sailed last Saturday, which were: 'I have just left Bismarck, and I deeply regret to state my conviction that he has the mark of death upon his countenance.'"

—Count Bismarck, in a note just issued to the North German representatives abroad, defends the German mode of warfare, and appeals for witnesses to English and American reporters with the German armies. He cites thirty-one violations of the Geneva Convention. He also says the French use explosive missiles, burn ships, maltreat prisoners, and encourage a violation of their parole by French officers. Count Bismarck says the French rulers do not wish peace, but to gag the press, prevent a convention of the National Assembly, and force the people to continue the war.

—The Conference met to-day. The meeting was strictly formal. Earl Granville was called upon to preside. An adjournment will take place on the 24th inst. A communication relative to the French representative was read, but no action was taken in the matter. Although the proceedings are kept strictly secret, it may be confidentially stated that Russia formally declares in advance that the action of the Conference must be without prejudice by the abrogation of the neutrality of the Black Sea, which has already been accomplished by the act of the Russian Government. In regard to peace propositions being made at the Conference, Count Bernstoff is under strict orders from the Prussian Government to oppose any introduction of the subject, and to withdraw from the Convention unless the overtures proceed directly from France.

—A Versailles dispatch of the 18th says: Several seventy-two pounders have been brought to the Seine, but cannot cross on account of the floating ice. They were intended for Mount Avon, and carry 226 pound shells. A whole siege train from Mesieres, with seventy-five heavy guns, arrived. The mounted batteries at Mt. Morench are ready to receive them, and probably open fire to-day directly on St. Denis, which it is intended destroying—as a warning to Paris—probably by next Sunday. The sepulchre of the kings of France will be demolished. Four hundred and fifty shells were thrown into Paris yesterday. Prince Hohenhohe, Dictator of the Army, declares his determination to destroy all the principal defenses.

—A Paris dispatch of the 13th says: "Gambetta's last dispatch to the authorities here, which was suppressed by them, called upon Gen. Trochu to take the initiatory, and make vigorous sorties upon the Germans, so that they might be prevented from detaching men from Paris to reinforce their armies in the provinces. The inaction here injures the cause. Violent Republicans in the city insist on the adoption of Greek fire for military purposes. Three men in Paris declare they possess the secret of its manufacture. Gen. Trochu opposes the atrocity. The ultra Reds declare their determination to use the invention against the Germans should the enemy enter Paris. On the other hand, some of the shopkeepers fold their hands complacently, and congratulate themselves on having articles that may tempt German Princes when they enter the capital. They believe, nevertheless, that the resistance will be unequaled in the annals of war. The bombardment has enraged the population, and all are eager to go out and fight. Peace is only looked upon as a means for recruiting the army and the country, previous to invading Germany at a future day."

—The World's correspondent at Brevettiers telegraphed: "Bourbaki attacked the Germans before Belfort on the 15th, and was repulsed along the whole line. The combat was obstinate, and lasted till dark. The French renewed the fight on the 16th, and were again repulsed with heavy loss in killed."

Washington.

—Dr. H. T. Buel, of Buffalo, Chairman of the Committee on Legislation appointed by the American Homœpathy Association, at Chicago, in June last, had an interview with Dr. Vancraw, the Commissioner of Pensions, relative to the removal of the homœopathic surgeons. The Commissioner acknowledged that the removals were made only for the reason that the surgeons in question were homœopathic practitioners.

—The Secretary of the Navy has ordered the ship of war Chene to Magdalena Bay, Lower California, to make a survey of the bay, and also ascertain the best harbor for a coaling station. The most available place is supposed to be the harbor of the new city of Cortese, now being settled under the auspices of the Lower California Company.

—The Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has reported back with amendments the bill to revise, consolidate and amend the statutes relating to the Post Office Department. No obscene book, pamphlet, picture, print, or other publication of a vulgar or indecent character, or any letter on the envelope of which scurrilous epithets may be written or printed, or disloyal devices printed or engraved, shall be admitted or carried in the mail, under penalty. The postal clerks are authorized under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department. The Committee retain the section abolishing the franking privilege.

Obituary.

—The veteran actor, Peter Richings, died on Thursday, at his residence in Media, Pa., from the effect of injuries received a fortnight ago, by being thrown from his carriage.

—Henry Burden, the famous inventor and iron manufacturer, dropped dead from heart disease, at his residence in Troy, N. Y., Thursday. He was nearly 80 years of age.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JAN. 17.—SENATE.—The Senate concurred in the amendments by the House to the bill authorizing the issue of an additional $300,000,000 of five per cent. bonds. Yates' joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, making eligible to the office of President all persons who have attained the age of thirty-five years, and been fourteen years a resident of the United States, was referred. The Vice President laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a mass of papers relating to the alleged traffic of Senator Sprague with the rebels in Texas during the war, being the papers referred to in the report of Judge Advocate General Holt upon the case, and upon which the same was based. Referred to a special committe for investigation. The Senate then resumed consideration of Sherman's bill ceding to the State of Ohio jurisdiction over the ground occupied by the Dayton Soldiers' Home. The bill was discussed at length, and, at 3 o'clock, passed by a vote of 25 yeas to 12 nays. Adjourned.

HOUSE.—Washburn, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the regular Naval Appropriation bill, and it was made the special order for Thursday. Butler, of Massachusetts, offered a resolution authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners to examine and report as to the distribution of aid granted by the Government to the Pacific and other railroad companies, what persons have divided the benefits therefrom, and to what extent and in what manner. Referred. The House then resumed consideration of the bill which was under discussion last week, to secure the proper treatment of cattle in transit by railroad. Then, at 1:30, the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Scofield in the chair, and resumed consideration of the Legislative and Naval Appropriation bill. After considerable discussion, it was determined to continue the salaries of the Circuit Judges at $5,000. The House then proceeded to vote on the amendment to the Legislative Appropriation bill repealing the law authorizing the publication in newspapers of the statutes. The amendment was rejected—yeas, 80; nays, 96. The House then, at 4:20, adjourned.

JAN. 18.—SENATE.—Sherman, from the Finance Committee, reported back, and asked to be discharged from further consideration of, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the tax on $450,000 scrip dividends on the New York Central Railroad. Discharged. Fenton, from the Committee on Finance, reported, without amendment, the bill to provide for the reduction of copper and other token coins. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem in lawful money all copper, nickel and other base coinage, when presented in sums of not less than $20. Passed. Nye offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Judiciary to examine and report how far Congress is authorized to regulate the fare and transportation on railroads between States under the constitutional provisions authorizing Congress to regulate commerce between States. After a long debate on affairs in the South, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The amendment for paying J. W. Douglas, the late Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the salary of Commissioner for November and December, was agreed to. The amendment increasing the salaries of the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court to $8,500 and $8,000, respectively, was agreed to. Sargent introduced a bill to enable the people of Washington Territory to form a Constitution and State Government as a State of the Union. Referred. Armstrong reported back, with amendments, the Senate bill authorizing the sale of certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin. Beck offered an amendment prohibiting the making of any contract with Indians for commission or compensation for services in regard to the sale of their lands, or obtaining their annuities. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill passed. Armstrong also reported back the Senate bill for the relief of the Flockbridge and Munroe tribes of Indians in Wisconsin. Passed. The Post Office Appropriation bill was then passed. Brooks was exonerated, by the House, from the charges made against him by Hastings. Adjourned.

JAN. 19.—SENATE.—The Army bill was considered, and after some discussion passed. The Secretary read a letter forwarded to him by Mr. Brownlow, on the private claim of Mrs. Melinda Harmon, of East Tennessee. A bill was passed authorizing the payment of the claim. The motion of Morton for the appoinment of a special committee of five to investigate the charges of violence and resistance of laws in the South, was agreed to, Casserly's motion to refer the matter to the Judiciary Committee having been lost. Hamlin introduced a bill to secure cheap transportation of breadstuffs and provisions from the West to the seaboard, and uniform rates throughout the year. Referred. The bill provides that the Government shall aid in the construction of the Portland, Rutland, Oswego and Chicago Railroad, by a loan of six per cent. thirty year bonds, to the amount of $50,000 per mile for its whole extent from Portland to Chicago. The road is to be double track, and furnished with steel rails and iron bridges; the Postmaster General to furnish rates for the transportation of freight and passengers. Adjourned.

HOUSE.—Dawes introduced a bill to aid in the construction of twenty or more first-class steamships. Paine introduced a bill to allow imported railroad iron to be transported in bond from the port of entry to the place was to be used. Referred. Van Horn reported a bill for the consolidation of Indian tribes. The bill defining swamp and overflowed lands came up as the special order of the day, but on motion of Julian it was postponed until Feb. 1. The House then, at 3:30 p. m., went into Committee of the Whole on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, which appropriates $1,438,000. Cox moved to increase the salary of the Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg from $1,800 to $2,500. Rejected. Wood moved for a provision that no part of the contingent fund of the State Department be used in the effort to annex the Republic of Dominica. Considerable opposition was shown, and without disposing of the question the Committee rose, and the House, at 4:45, adjourned.

The Foot-And-Mouth Disease.

This malady, at present doing such fearful havoc amongst the cattle in New York and neighboring States, is new to this country. It appears that we are indebted to the Canadians for this "onpleasantness." According to the Country Gentleman, it is almost certain that the contagion was conveyed to Duchess county by a drover, who finding, on his arrival at Albany with a lot of Canadian cattle, that they were sick and unsalable, and being afraid to go to any large market, shipped the animals to Poughkeepsie, and drove them thence across (by way of Paulding and Dover) to New Milford and Kent, in Connecticut, where the disease is spreading quite extensively. In Massachusetts, it has appeared in the neighborhood of Farmingham, and there also the introduction of the disease is attributed to the Canadian cattle.

Of the causes of this distressing disease no good account can be given. Soil, situation and food seem to have little or no influence on it; and like its congener, pleuropneumonia, it prevails alike in the badly ventilated and badly drained cowsheds, as in the clean, dry and carefully tended establishment. Although the spontaneous appearance of exzema cannot be explained by any of those laws which govern epidemics in general, such as impure air, &c., yet it is an established fact that contagion is a great and widely spread cause of the disease. The most careful investigation into the history of all outbreaks in Europe indicates that the malady is invariably introduced, and spreads exclusively by contagion, not infection—that is to say that only actual contact with a diseased animal or with the matter discharged from the sores will convey the disease. The contagious matter is discharged in great aboundance with the saliva, and from the vesicles which form in the mouth, on the teats and feet. The milk of animals affected with the disease is charged with the virus, especially when vesicles on the teats discharge lymph as the milk is drawn.

The communication of the disease to man admits of no doubt. The history of the various outbreaks of the disease demonstrates this. At this writing we learn that it has appeared in the human subject, in several cases, in New York State. Where the disease has prevailed in Europe, the symptoms have repeatedly been noticed in men drinking the milk of diseased cows, for instance in 1841, at the time the foot-and-mouth disease first appeared in England.

The effects of contagion developed in a very short space of time; generally within thirty hours. Hence the necessity of legislative interference in preventing the introduction of diseased animals. It appears that the Connecticut Legislature of 1869, though urged to do so, refused to make any provision to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among cattle. Every State without such a statute should certainly enact one without delay, as Massachusetts has done.

We are glad to notice that the attention of the United States Government is being called to the matter.—Prairie Farmer.

A Paint for Farmers.

Prof. J. B. Turner, Jacksonville, Ill., a man of great practical knowledge and experience, writes to the Prairie Farmer:

"Some two years ago I sent and got from a barrel to a barrel and a half of Averill's Chemical Paint, of a light dun color, which I thought would suit me well enough for all work; houses, doors, blinds, fences, bee-hives, wagons, tools and all. I put two good coats upon my residence here, and run over some three or four of my smaller farm houses on my farms. With what was left I painted my bee-hives, wagons, wheelbarrows, rollers, harrows, fences, &c., and on all these buildings, implements, tools, gates, &c., that paint is as hard and glossy to-day, as far as I can see, as it was a month after it was put on, and bids fair at least to hold its own for five years to come, if not ten of them, better than ordinary white lead and oil does for even two years.

"I know nothing how this paint is made or who the man is that makes it, nor do I care. I know he has got something that will, in fact, stand our climate, if well put on, and at a moderate cost, and this is all I care to know about it. I have heard it said, however, that the principal ingredients in it were the best boiled, pure linseed oil and zinc, chemically combined by some flux, which gives this paint its unequalled polish, finish and durability.

"I have watched it now for about two years with interest and care, and I have never found a single spot in it where it either peeled, cracked or chalked off, as our other paints do, not even on the wheelbarrow used to wheel wood in, except where the throwing in of the wood has jammed paint, wood and all off, by extreme violence. Others who have used this paint like it equally well. But the point is: I can take one and the same keg and brush, and go over all my buildings, wagons and tools, with no needless waste of brushes, paint or time, as the darker trimmings of the house can be put on with the same brush just as well. The paint comes to hand all ready for use, and any man who can spread his own bread and butter, can spread it, or if he cannot his wife can. For this reason the professional painters seldom like it; they think if it comes into general use, 'Othello's occupation' will be, in a great measure, gone, and so it will. It is quite as good for inside finish, and even better than for the outside, as it leaves a coat that shines and washes like glass.

"It was so hard and smooth that at first when I carelessly painted my bee-lighting boards with it, standing at an angle of forty-five degrees, the bees tripped up and slid down so on its smooth face, that I had to roughen it with a file. There may be many better paints than this, but I am not acquainted with them, and all who try it in this month of October, will find it a great saving over the old order of things. Any color of this paint desired, from a pure white to a brown, dun, red, blue or black, can be had, as I understand, to suit the taste of the purchaser, and I presume it can be got in any of our larger towns and cities."

WHAT IS A PILE GAME FOWL?—They are game fowls whose plumage has a proportion of white for one of its compound colors. The cocks of all the various strains of Piles, are red and white, yellow and white, in one or other of the shades of those colors. The best piles are bred by crossing red and white game, but may also be bred from a pile cock and pile hen. Some of the best and purest may be bred from a spangled cock and white hen. The object of the breeder of show birds, is to get the colors of the cock as distinct and as brilliant as possible. We do not know where to procure the plates, but can refer our inquirer to a gentleman from New York city, who has in his yards the specimens he desires to see.—Rural New Yorker.

WASHING BUTTER.—Our best buttermakers hereabout do not agree with the idea advanced by one of your prominent correspondents, viz.: that butter should never be washed in water. On the contrary, they contend that it should be washed in pure cold water, and every particle of buttermilk washed out, if such a thing is possible. They say the buttermilk cannot be worked out without water, but the butter will be injured in texture, or be left soft and "flabby." Cold water is also indispensable in very warm weather, where the cream is apt to be a little above above 55 degrees. We believe in water yet.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

How Weeds Migrate and Multiply.

It is stated that there are now no less than two hundred and fourteen weeds, which have been introduced into the United States from foreign countries, and principally from England. As a proof of the rapidity with which useless plants are accidentally brought over the seas, it is said that in 1837 there were only one hundred and thirty-seven foreign weeds known in this country As far back as 1672, a curious little volume called "New England's Rarities," gave a list of twenty-two plants, which the author considered had sprung up since the English had kept cattle in New England. The author mentions the "plantain," which he says the Indians call the "Englishman's foot," as though produced by the tread of the white settlers.

The common "yellow toad flax," it is stated, was originally introduced into the province of Pennsylvania, as a garden flower, by a Mr. Ranstead, a Welshman, residing in Philadelphia, from whom it has derived the name of "Ranstead weed." In 1758 this weed had overrun the pastures in the inhabited part of Pennsylvania, and was the cause of bitter complaints from the agriculturists of that day. Chicken-weed, it is stated, was introduced in South Carolina as a food for canary birds, and in ten years spread for upwards of fifty miles, and now occupies the outposts of civilization. The "Scotch thistle" is said to have been brought to America by a clergyman, who carried with him a bed stuffed with thistle down, in which some seed remained. Feathers, being cheap in the new country, were substituted for the down, which was soon emptied out, and the seed springing up filled the country with thistles. Another account says some enthusiastic Scot introduced the thistle as emblem of his country, which soon made itself at home and became a nuisance.

Household Economy.

HOW TO COOK OLD FOWLS.—For the possible benefit of some of our young housekeepers, I wish to tell them how to cook an old chicken. Prepare as for roasting, then boil three hours in a covered pot, with one quart of water, to which add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar; after which put in a pan in a hot oven for about one hour, to brown. The liquor in the pot to be prepared for gravy; should the water boil away too much, more should be added. The result is meat as tender as young chicken, and some think richer and better.

TO SEASON SAUSAGE.—To fifty pounds of meat, add one pound of salt and two ounces each of black and red pepper, one tablespoonful of cloves and one of saltpetre.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—Few dislike this pancake, if properly made. My experience teaches that not many understand this inexpensive delicacy, for delicacy it is. The friend who taught me how to make them commenced her lesson with—

"Not any yeast-made pancakes for me. They are good enough, perhaps, but can't compare with a golden-hued, buttermilk buckwheat pancake. See! I take a quart of buttermilk without a drop of water in it. Didn't I rinse down my churn? No, I scraped the butter down with a spoon, to keep it rich, you know. Now I put in a teaspoonful of soda and one of salt; then I dip five handfuls of flour, so big, and then stir till mixed, and no longer. If you keep stirring and adding now a little flour and then a little more milk, you will find your dough stringy and your cakes tough. All kinds of pastry that are required to be tender and delicate, must be manipulated as little as possible.

"Don't think of setting the table during the operation of frying. Have that all done first, and merely get a good start before you ring the bell. You need not have a disagreeable smell of burnt fat accompanying the operation, unless you wish to waste it. A large square of fat pork is best, I think, with the rind on; skim it lightly over the griddle though; and when through, trim off the soiled-looking part, and it will do many times. I never turn a cake over twice, and I don't let it get cooked through before I turn it. Pop the cakes under cover quickly; steaming a minute is the cap of perfection, but see that the dil, does not bear on them heavily."

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

The Snow Storm—The Wheat Market—Pork Packing—Business Failures—Trade—Business Prospects—Religious Enterprise—The Advance—Lectures—Concerts—Latest Novelty—Amusements.

CHICAGO, Jan. 21, 1871.—The late snow storm—the most severe that has occurred here for years—has proved a serious interruption to business. The delays of freight trains—much more protracted than the stoppage of passenger trains—have been quite embarrassing to the public. But mild weather, the opening of the usual thoroughfares, and the resumption of travel and trade have restored our wonted activity, and Chicago looks like herself again, at this season, save that there is an unusual quantity of snow and slush. The freezing sleet did some damage to the trees, and farther south was quite destructive. The storm extended over a larger region of country than usual, and the amount of snow-fall was almost unprecedented.

THE WHEAT MARKET

Has been quite active the past week, No. 2 selling for $1.22½—an advance of about 20 cents in a month. The receipts are small, but next week will probably show a large increase.

PORK PACKING

Has been very active through the season, up to the time of the January thaw, when it almost entirely ceased. But it is being resumed again, with a large supply of live hogs. Thus far there has been a large increase on last season in the number of hogs packed, and about twelve per cent. increase in weight. But prices have ruled much lower than last year.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

The number of failures here has been larger than was anticipated six weeks ago. But they have been chiefly of that class of houses that have been weak, or embarrassed, for some time, though their condition was not known to the general public. Some of them were expected, but a few were a general surprise. One cause of failures—aside from the stringency of the money market and the partial failure of crops the past season—is the exorbitant prices of rents, in some cases absorbing all the profits and part of the capital of the merchants. We shall get down to hard pan and ante-war prices, by and by, and have fewer fluctuations in the prices of everything. But not until we have a return to specie payments.

TRADE.

The volume of trade, despite the complaints of hard times, has been greater than ever before, but business men represent that their sales have been made at small profits, one house assuring me that on sales of $900,000, since July, they had not made a cent. This, however, may be an exceptional case. But the general margin of profits has undoubtedly been quite low, though the larger houses have done a very satisfactory trade.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

There have been large preparations for an increased trade the coming season, many new and capacious stores having been erected for that purpose the past year, or will be completed in season for the spring trade. There is a marvellous energy and elasticity in the Chicago business man. He may be disappointed in this direction, or in that. But hope springs eternal in his breast, and if he fails in one enterprise he tries another, and another, till he succeeds. A well known firm here, not worth a dollar in 1865, though doing a large business, are now worth a million and a quarter.

RELIGIOUS ENTERPRISE.

The energy manifested by Chicago, in business pursuits, is equalled by her activity in religious enterprises. In this respect, she obeys the command, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Not only are large sums raised to build churches, endow religious seminaries, sustain Christian associations and support public charities, but her religious newspapers are conducted in the same liberal and enterprising spirit, and no material or intellectual resources are spared to make them represent the genius, and supply the mental, moral and spiritual wants of the great Northwest. They are more truly national organs of religious sentiment than any published at the East, are managed with equal, if not superior, ability, in a broader and more catholic spirit, and better comprehend the spiritual needs of the West than Eastern journals can.

published by the Advance Company, at $2.50 a year. Its editorials are able, dealing frankly with the live questions of the day, and are supplemented by articles from a large corps of the best thinkers and writers of the time. Its commercial department is reliable, its miscellany and family reading is of the highest order; it has able and well-informed correspondents at the great business and government centres, and sustains the great religious and humanitarian enterprises of our times, and truly represents the Christian progress of the age. Within three years it has attained a wide circulation. It offers, as a premium, a splendid chromo picture of Henry Ward Beecher—the best I have ever seen—11 by 14 inches—worth $6, to any who will send three new subscriptions, one new subscription for three years, or for two years and $2 additional, or for one year and $3 additional.

LECTURES.

We have had a surfeit of lectures, from persons eminent, and some not so eminent. A few, like Sumner and Phillips, have drawn large audiences, but most of them have had a moderate attendance. Even Miss Edgarton, "the Pearl of the Platform,"—as her friends designate her—and the delight of the anti-Women-Suffrage folks, had but few hearers. Mrs. Stanton is to lecture on Marriage and Divorce, next week, Wednesday evening.

CONCERTS

of various kinds, and for various purposes, have been numerous, and have gratified the music-loving, at a moderate cost. But the Nilsson concerts have eclipsed all others.

THE LATEST NOVELTY,

which will interest the ladies, is an electric sewing machine, in which the motive power is electricity, superseding the treadle. It is easily managed, can be applied to all kinds of sewing machines, be made for half the usual price, and be run for three cents a day for lighting.

AMUSEMENTS.

We have the usual attractions, for the lovers of the drama, at the various theatres, the particular star being Mrs. Bowers, in Mary Stuart and Queen Elizabeth, at McVicker's. B.

The Largest Edition Ever Issued.

Doubtless many publishers and others will be surprised to learn that the largest edition ever printed of any paper was issued at Augusta, Maine, by Messrs. E. C. Allen & Co. The fortunate paper is The People's Literary Companion, the marvelous success of which is quite unparalleled. The paper was started but little over a year since, and for November, 1870, issued an edition of over seven hundred thousand copies. It is a large quarto, handsomely printed, and second to no paper of its class in quality of contents. Its name defines its character. It is published monthly. The crowing success of this great enterprise has been attained through liberal advertising. Every paper in the United States and British Provinces was made use of, and besides all this, the paper was scattered all over the country free. Of the first edition there were printed over three hundred thousand copies. Mr. Allen said at the start: "Not only are we going to publish the handsomest and best paper of its class in the world, but we are going to let the people know what we are doing." And surely it has been done. The People's Literary Companion is at present being advertised in all parts of the country, which shows that it does not forget the means by which it rose.

Messrs. Allen & Co. have a peculiar system of agencies through which they obtain their subscribers. We understand that at present they are receiving about twenty-five thousand per week, with a prospect of no fall off during the week.

Don't Tamper With a Cough.

Perhaps in the whole category of diseases to which humanity is susceptible, the cough is most neglected in its early stage. A simple cough is generally regarded as a temporary affliction—unpleasant and nothing more—but to those who have paid dearly for experience, it is the signal of attack for the most fearful of all diseases—Consumption. A cough will lead to Consumption—if not checked—so sure as the rivulet leads to the river, yet it is an easy enemy to thwart, if met by the proper remedy. Allen's Lung Balsam is the great cough remedy of the age, and it has earned its reputation by merit alone.

A NEGLECTED Cough, Cold, or Sore Throat, which might be checked by a simple remedy, like "Brown's Bronchial Troches," if allowed to progress may terminate seriously. For Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, and Consumptive Coughs, "The Troches" are used with advantage, giving sometimes immediate relief. Singers and public speakers will find them also excellent to clear the voice and render articulation wonderfully easy.

CHAPPED HANDS, face, rough skin, pimples, ringworm, salt-rheum, and other cutaneous affections, cured, and the skin made soft and smooth, by using the JUNIPER TAR SOAP, Made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York. It is more convenient and easily applied than other remedies, avoiding the trouble of the greasy compounds now in use.

THE original estimate of the East River bridge at New York was $4,000,000. It is now asserted the work will cost the cities of New York and Brooklyn at least $20,000,000.

Allen's Lung Balsam

Is warranted to break up the most troublesome Cough in an incredibly short time. There is no remedy that can show more evidence of real merit than this BALSAM for curing Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Croup, &c.

It is only about seven years since the Balsam was first offered to the public, and in this short time it has become known and appreciated in nearly every town and village throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

The Lesson of Nature.

Torpor is the characteristic of winter. Vegetation dies or falls into a state of trance. The whole aspect of inanimate nature teaches us that there is a paralyzing influence in the air, and ought to teach us that our bodies require an increase of vital power to contend with it. Some of even the warm-blooded animals bury themselves in the earth and remain in a state of partial stupefaction until the season is over, and the elixir of the spring sunshine stimulates their stagnant blood, and restores their vigor. But man, although he feels the influence of the season, can protect himself against its inclemency. He has fuel to warm himself externally, and can tone and strengthen his internal organization and endow it with the extra amount of vitality which the circumstances require. Of all invigorants that has ever been recommended for this purpose, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the purest and best. Fortified by the daily use of this wholesome vegetable tonic, the human system may defy the chills and damps of winter in any latitude. Its effect is to promote a brisk and regular circulation of the blood, and activity in all the secretive organs. Without the slightest tendency to produce fever, it imparts a healthful glow to the surface, and stimulates the exterior vessels to discharge, in the form of gentle perspiration, the useless matter eliminating from the blood. Thus the system is kept unclogged. Fever and ague, biliousness, indigestion and colic, all of which are the common consequences of the searching damps and low temperature of winter, may be avoided (as well as cured) by a course of this genial tonic and alterative.

TO PHYSICIANS.

NEW YORK, August 15, 1868.

Allow me to call your attention to my PREPARATION OF COMPOUND EXTRACT BUCHU. The component parts are BUCHU, LONG LEAF, CUBEBS, JUNIPER BERRIES.

MODE OF PREPARATION.—Buchu, in vacuo Juniper Berries, by distillation, to form a fine gin. Cubebs extracted by displacement with spirits obtained from Juniper Berries; very little sugar is used, and a small proportion of spirit. It is more palatable than any now in use.

Buchu as prepared by druggists is of a dark color. It is a plant that emits its fragrance; the action of a flame destroys this (its active principle), leaving a dark and glutinous decoction. Mine is the color of ingredients. The Buchu in my preparation predominates; the smallest quantity of the other ingredients are added to prevent fermentation; upon inspection it will be found not to be a Tincture as made in Pharmacopœa, nor is it a Syrup—and therefore can be used in cases where fever or inflammation exists. In this you have the knowledge of the ingredients and the mode of preparation.

Hoping that you will favor it with a trial and that upon inspection it will meet with your approbation,

With a feeling of profound confidence,

I am, very respectfully,

"What the Engines Said on the Completion of the Pacific Railroad."

What was it the engines said,
Pilots touching—head to head
Facing on the single track,
Half a world behind each back?
This is what the engines said,
Unreported and unread!

With a prefatory screech,
In a florid Western speech,
Said the engine from the West:
"I am from Sierra's crest;
And, if altitude's a test,
Why, I reckon it's confessed
That I've done my level best."

Said the engine from the East:
"They who work best talk the least.
S'pose you whistle down your brakes;
What you've done is no great shakes—
Pretty fair—but let our meeting
Be a different kind of greeting.
Let those folks with champagne stuffing,
Not the engines, do the puffing.

"Listen! Where Atlantic beats
Shores of snow and summer heats;
Where the Indian autumn skies
Paint the woods with wampum dyes,
I have chased the flying sun,
Seeing all he looked upon,
Blessing all that he has blest,
Nursing in my iron breast
All his vivifying heat,
All his clouds about my crest;
And before my flying feet
Every shadow must retreat."

Said the Western engine, "Phew!"
And a long, low whistle blew:
"Come now, really, that's the oddest
Talk for one so modest.
You brag of your East! You do?
Why, I bring the East to you!
All the Orient, all Cathay,
Find through me the shortest way,
And the sun you follow here
Rises in my hemisphere.
Really—if one must be rude—
Length, my friend, ain't longitude."

Said the Union: "Don't reflect, or I'll run over some Director."
Said the Central: "I'm Pacific,
But, when riled, I'm quite terrific.
Yet to-day we will not quarrel,
Just to show these folks this moral,—
How two engines—in their vision—
Once have met without collision."

That is what the engines said,
Unreported and unread;
Spoken slightly through the nose,
With a whistle at the close.

A FREAK OF FORTUNE.

Samuel Duhobret was a disciple of the famous engraver, Albert Durer, admitted into the art school out of charity. He was employed in painting signs and the coarse tapestry then used in Germany. As he was about forty years of age, small, ugly and hump-backed, he was the butt of ill jokes among his fellow pupils, and selected as a special object of dislike by Madame Durer, who tormented the scholars and domestics, as well as the master, by her Xantippical temper. Poor Duhobret had not a spice of malice in his heart, and not only bore all his trials with patience, but eating without complaint the scanty crusts given him for dinner, while his companions fared better, always showed himself ready to assist and serve those who scoff at him. His industry was indefatigable. He came to his studies each morning at daybreak, and worked till sunset. During three years, he plodded thus, and said nothing of the paintings he produced in his lonely chamber by the light of his lamp. His bodily energies wasted under incessant toil. No one cared enough for him to notice the feverish color in his wrinkled cheek, or the increasing meagreness of his mis-shapen frame. No one observed that the poor pittance set aside for his midday meal remained untouched for several days. The poor artist made his appearance as usual, and as meekly bore the gibes af the students or the taunts of the lady; working with the same untiring assiduity, though his hands trembled and his eyes were often suffused with tears.

One morning he was missing from the scene of his labors, and, though jokes were passed about his disappearance, no one thought of going to his lodgings to see if he were ill or dead. He was indeed prostrated by the low fever that had been lurking in his veins and slowly sapping his strength. He was half delirious and muttered wild and incoherent words, fancying his bed surrounded by mocking demons, taunting him with his inability to call a priest to administer the words of comfort that might soothe his passage to another world.

From exhausted slumbers he awoke faint and with parched lips; it was the fifth day he had lain in his cell neglected. Feebly he stretched out his hands toward the earthern pitcher, and found that it contained not a drop of water. Slowly and with difficulty he arose; for he knew that he must procure sustenance or die of want. He had not a kreutzer. He went to the other end of the room, took up the picture he had painted last, and resolved to carry it to a dealer, who might give him for it enough to furnish him necessaries for a week longer.

On his way he passed a house before which there was a great crowd. There was to be a sale, he learned, of many specimens of art collected during thirty years by an amateur. The wearied Duhobret thought he might here find a market for his picture. He worked his way through the crowd, dragged himself up the steps, and found the auctioneer, a busy man, holding a handful of papers and inclined to be rough with the lean, sallow hunchback who so eagerly implored his attention.

"What do you call this picture?" he asked.

"It is a view of the Abbey of Newbourg, with the village and landscape," replied the trembling artist.

The auctioneer looked at him, hummed contemptuously, and asked the price.

"Whatever you please; whatever it will bring," was the anxious reply.

"Hem!"—with an unfavorable criticism—"I can promise you no more than three thalers."

Poor Duhobret had spent the nights of many months on that piece. But he was starving, and the pittance offered would buy him bread. He nodded to the auctioneer and retired to a corner.

After many paintings and engravings had been sold, Duhobret's was exhibited. "Who bids? Three thalers? Who bids?" was the cry. The poor artist held his breath; no response was heard. Suppose it should not find a purchaser? He dared not look up; he thought everybody was laughing at the folly of offering so worthless a piece at public sale. "It is certainly my best work!" he murmured piteously to himself. He ventured to glance at the picture as the auctioneer held it in a favorable light. There was certainly a beautiful freshness in the rich foliage, a transparency in the water, a freedom and life in the animals. The steeple, the trees, the whole landscape, showing the genius of an artist. Alas! He felt the last throb of an artist's vanity. The dead silence continued, and, turning away, he buried his face in his hands.

"Twenty-one thalers!" a faint voice called out. The stupefied painter gave a start of joy, and looked to see who had uttered those blessed words. It was the picture dealer to whom he was first to go.

"Fifty thalers!" cried the sonorous voice of a tall man in black.

There was a moment's silence. "One hundred thalers!" at length cried the picture dealer, evidently piqued and anxious.

"Two hundred!"

"Three hundred!"

"Four hundred!"

"One thousand thalers!"

Another profound silence; and the crowd pressed around the two opponents, who stood opposite to each other with flushed and angry faces.

The tall stranger bid fifteen hundred thalers.

The dealer grew pale, his frame shook with agitation. His voice was suffocated; but after two or three efforts he cried out:

"Twenty thousand!"

His tall opponent bid forty thousand. The dealer hesitated. His adversary laughed a low laugh of insolent triumph, and the crowd gave a murmur of admiration. The picture dealer felt his reputation at stake, and called out in sheer desperation—

"Fifty thousand!"

The tall man hesitated; the crowd was breathless. At length, tossing his arms in defiance, he shouted:

"One hundred thousand!" adding an impatient execration against his adversary. The crestfallen picture dealer withdrew. The tall visitor bore away the prize. He passed through the wondering people, went out, and was going along the street, when a decrepit, lame, humpbacked wretch, tottering along by the aid of a stick, presented himself before him. The stranger threw him a piece of money, and waved his hand as if dispensing with thanks.

"May it please your honor," persisted the supposed beggar, "I am the painter of that picture." He rubbed his eyes, for he had hardly yet been able to persuade himself that he had not been dreaming.

The tall man was Count Dunkelsbach, one of the richest noblemen in Germany. He stopped and questioned the bystanders. Being convinced of the truth of the statement, he took out his pocket-book, tore out a leaf, and wrote on it a few lines.

"Take it, friend," he said. "It's the check for your money. Good morning."

Duhobret invested his money, and resolved to live luxuriantly for the rest of his life, cultivating painting as a pastime. But though he had borne privation and toil, prosperity was too much for him. Indigestion carried him off. His picture had an honored place in the cabinet of Duke Dunkelsbach, and the curious incident of its purchase was often related. It afterward passed into the possession of the King of Bavaria.—Catholic World.

GERMAN EXPLORATIONS IN GREENLAND.—Our readers will remember that the German exploring expedition which went out in 1860 for the purpose of Arctic discovery has lately returned home, the sailing vessel of the expedition having been wrecked on the coast of Greenland, her entire crew, however, being saved. The steamer returned in good condition. Enough of the results of the expedition have been published to furnish the means of judging, to some extent, of the advantages secured, which are thought to be of great interest; not the least being the acquisition of a foothold of property in the north, possession having been taken of a previously unoccupied portion of the coast of Greenland; extending for about thirty German miles, or from latitude 75° to latitude 77°. An apology is made for the absence of any considerable amount of actual discovery, on account of the excessive rigor of the winds, this being very much greater than that experienced in the neighboring regions during the previous explorations on the part of English vessels. The portion of Greenland explored by this expedition is characterized by a very deep fiord, the head of which was not reached in a distance of over eighty miles; and it is thought to be not impossible that it extended all the way across to the water on the opposite side.

The most interesting feature of the land, however, was the occurrence of extensive meadows, starred with flowers, with butterflies and bees playing about them, and having large herds grazing near by of reindeer and musk-oxen. The lowest temperature experienced was about 58° Fahr., this occurring on the 21st of February, 1870. The wind was found to be of extraordinary severity, Robinson's anemometer indicating a rate of velocity of sixty-seven miles in the hour, which, it was believed, would render sledging parties entirely impracticable. The auroral light, to the surprise of the beholders, who expected to see it in the west or southwest, was actually in the southeast.

Among the geological discoveries were beds of brown coal, and numerous fossil remains. Deep-sea soundings were made, and collections taken from a depth of 1,500 fathoms. One important conclusion arrived at by the expedition was that small vessels were suited for polar exploration, and that it would be madness to attempt, as is proposed by the French, the use of a thousand-ton ship. Steamers, too, were believed to be the only form of vessels suited for research on the eastern coast of Greenland, any thing like reaching the coast in a sailing vessel being entirely out of the question.—Editor's Scientific Record in Harper's Magazine for February.

PROTECTION OF STONE BY SALTS OF COPPER.—Dr. Robert, of Paris, recommends earnestly the use of salts of copper, as the best preservative against the weathering of stone in a moist climate; and endeavors to prove that the wasting away of sand-stone and granite is due to various causes, one of the most important of which is the development of a lichen (Lepra antiquitatis). This plant is so destructive that the beautiful marble sculptures in the park, at Versailles, would be completely destroyed by it, in the space of fifty years, unless precautions were taken to arrest its ravages. Dr. Robert states that the amount of weathering away of rocks of all kinds, granite not excepted, is much greater than the public generally are aware of, especially when subjected to the influence of a moist atmosphere. Thus, the obelisk of Luxor, which was brought to Paris, from Egypt, forty years ago, has become completely bleached out, and full of small cracks, while for the previous forty centuries during which it stood in Egypt no change had been produced.

Sponges were very numerous, though we were told that a large portion were not worth gathering. The sponger could readily distinguish the best as he pushed his boat over them. Some of the coarser kinds, not marketable, are four feet in diameter. They are all more or less concave at the apex. A black membraneous tunic covers them, and soft jelly-like portions project into the pores and cavities, constituting the slight claim they have to a place in the animal kingdom. Animal mucus and fat oil have been found in their analysis; so the vexed question is settled by chemistry, and they are unquestionably admitted to the ranks of animated nature, though far from active members. A slight current is observable over the openings, and nourishment is probably absorbed as it circulates through them. The frame-work is made up of silica, a wonderful proportion, in the form of spiculæ or splinters. Unlike most other marine objects, sponge is less attractive in its living state; only after the soft parts are removed is it pleasing to the eye. The pretty urn and other shaped sponges found on the beaches are merely the skeletons.

A large trade is now carried on at Key West in this article. Small schooners, from ten to twenty tons burden, are employed. They are much the shape of half an egg, and as flat as is consistent with due regard to sailing qualities; approaching, probably, as near as is possible the mythic craft that is said to "float in a heavy dew." These vessels lie at anchor in the channels, while the spongers push their small boats over the flats to gather the sponge. In some places they dive for it, and in shoal water grapple them. The specimens are very heavy, being loaded with water and the jelly like animal matter. They are buried in the sand of the beaches until the matter is decomposed, when they are washed and carried to Key West, collected upon strings of convenient length, and bleached in the sun. That portion of Key West called Conchtown is the principal depository, where the yards and fences are loaded with them. For many years nearly all the sponge collected on the Florida reef was sold at Key West to an Israelite of New York, one Isaacs; latterly others have entered the trade, and a very respectable income is derived from it.—Harper's Magazine for February.

RHETORICAL VITUPERATION.—Here are two gentlemen sitting quietly at table, and discussing the route of a railroad to the North Pole. Shall the ocean be tunneled, or shall the track be laid on ice? It is a fair question. There are good arguments, drawn from great natural laws, and from the actual situation. What is abstractly better, and what is actually expedient, are points that may be carefully and intelligently discussed. And so they are. And the two gentlemen take different sides, and urge the proper arguments. The advocate of the tunnel shows why that is the better plan, and the friend of the surface route offers what seem to him conclusive reasons. The tunneler does not declare that his opponent is a bloated mass of corruption; nor does his adversary insist contemptuously that the tunneler has been bribed to support an immeasurable swindle. If they did so, each would probably put the other out of the house, and certainly they would not be likely to be very cordial friends thereafter.

What, then, is the reason that the tunneler, parting from his friend, proceeds to a public meeting called to consider the subject of a railroad to the North Pole, and, ascending the platform, vehemently declares that the project of laying a track over the ice is not only repugnant to reason and common sense—not only are babies of eighteen months competent to detect its shrieking folly—but it is a vast swindle, and and its advocates are knavish rascals! Meanwhile the friend of the ice track goes to his meeting, and sneers at the inexpressible absurdity of tunneling the ocean. They'd better tunnel their wits who advocate it, exclaims he. They are a horde of grasping gormandizers of other people's money. They are a herd of antediluvian asses, who try to pass off thistles as clover. And so he perorates as passionately as his friend, each calling the other swindler and fool. And what effect is produced upon the public mind? First, disgust and indifference, and then a consciousness that the advocates have each so covered the cause with vituperation that it will be a weary work to dig down to the pith of the matter. Everybody would like to understand the reasons upon both sides if they could; but calling people fools and knaves is not argument, and the whole subject is demoralized.—Harper's Magazine for February.

THE JEWS IN ROME.—Among the consequences of the annexation of the Papal territory to the kingdom of Italy is the elevation of the Jews to the rank of citizens. By a decree of Victor Emanuel, all the inhabitants of this territory are now placed on an equality with his other subjects, and this has liberated the Jews from the oppressions to which they have always been subjected in the Papal capital. They were brought there in great numbers after the destruction of Jerusalem, in the days of the ancient Roman empire, and when the ascendency of the church begun, they were subjected to the most stringent regulations and the severest privations. They have still, however, remained in the city, and in many instances have become rich and prosperous, though they have generally presented the outward appearance only of poverty and wretchedness. They were compelled to live in a quarter of the city specially designated for them, and were locked up by the police in their inclosure every night. They were long deprived of nearly every civil right, and were for the most part left to be visited with every sort of cruelty which Christians might choose to practice upon them. Their only security for centuries consisted in avoiding the notice alike of the authorities and of the people of the city.

DEATH OF AN IRISH NOBLEMAN.—The Marquis of Headfort, who died lately in Ireland, was step-father of Lady Lisgar, wife of the Governor General of Canada. He twice married widows; his second wife being widow of Sir William Macnaughten, who was murdered in India some twenty-five years ago. Lord Headfort's eldest son, the Earl of Bective, married the only child of Alderman Thompson, of London. This lady had a fortune of $4,500,000 in money, besides large real estate. At her death all went to her son, who, reversing the usual order of things, made his father an allowance.

How the Women Voted in Utah.

From the Salt Lake Herald.

Gen. Maxwell is anxious to be delegate to Congress for Utah. No, we take it back; for a few citizens, a number of transients, some immigrants to the West passing through on election day, a car load or two of Chinamen and such like. As they voted for him they would be his constituents and he their delegate. "Dash ish all right!" If he likes the position we have no disposition to quarrel with him. Tastes differ; that's all. He is going to contest the election, and one of the strong grounds has been imparted to us by a friend of the General's—in strict confidence, you know; and we wouldn't make it public for the world. He avers—but keep the matter strictly secret for the present—that only 15,000 ladies voted for W. H. Hooper, and therefore the Captain is not duly elected. We'll strengthen the General's position by informing him that we are certain there weren't 1,500 who voted for Capt. Hooper, and presume it was because he isn't a polygamist; and the reason why so few voted for the General must have been because he is not married, and isn't a marrying man at that. Somebody has been fooling with the General on figures, and it's a shame to fool with a brave man even if he have lob-sided crotchets about election matters. In fact we have serious doubts whether Capt. Hooper got five hundred lady votes; and if he is entitled to lose his seat because it is said only fifteen thousand ladies voted for him, what should be done with him if less than five hundred handed in their ballots to his credit? We are decidedly of the opinion that the gallant General has permitted himself to be humbugged in this matter of the ladies voting—most egregiously humbugged.

Rochefort—His Renewal of the "Lanterne."

M. Henri Rochefort, in a preface to his new edition of the Lanterne, says that on re-perusing the lines written in a foreign land before publishing them in his own country, he has to beg pardon of the public for the moderation with which he spoke of the Imperial regime. "I have just re-read the proofs of my pamphlet; I compare it with the horrors through which the empire has compelled us to pass, with the end to which it has led us, and I know not how to excuse myself for being so mild." Further on he says: "I trust no one will suppose that I am seeking by their re-issue an easy opportunity of proving myself to be right in spite of the years of prison and the thousands of francs in fines which so often proved me to be wrong. I make no merit of my second-sight. There are but three ways in which fallen empires can sink: a military revolution, an insurrection of the people, a foreign invasion. To prophesy all three was enough to secure the certainty of not being far wrong. Napoleon, with his usual foresight, chose the third. The worst for us, but decidedly the best for him."

DEATH FROM LOVE.—The city of Hamilton Ohio, was recently thrown into quite a commotion over the suicide of a young man named A. Hagerman, a brother-in-law of John B. Cornell, Cashier of the First National Bank of that city. Being engaged in no active business, he has spent much of his time in the bank. At about 10 o'clock he went into the bank-room in apparently the best of spirits, and, walking behind the counter, picked up a revolver that lay in one of the drawers and seated himself in a chair immediately behind the bookkeeper, who was at his desk. Unbottoning his vest, he placed the muzzle of the revolver to his bosom, fired, and fell a corpse into the arms of Peter Murphy, who rushed to his assistance. We have been unable to learn the cause, although it is said that a lady is concerned in the case, and that it is another case of death from love. Hagerman was engaged to be married to a young lady of Hamilton in a couple of weeks. She fainted away almost as lifeless as her dead lover on hearing of his tragic end. Financial matters, and his inability to keep up with the styles of the day at so important a period of his life, are said to have so preyed upon his mind as to bring on the insane disease which caused him to put an end to his existence.

CLERICAL INAPTITUDE.—Unworthy men occasionally find their way into the ministry of every denomination. As a rule, however, their misdeeds are generally discovered. The following instance of impertinent clerical officiousness, promptly rebuked, comes to us from a Kansas correspondent:

Old Dr. —— is a Kentuckian, fond of a cigar and a little game of cards. In his employ was a young man who, though professedly a Methodist, had so far backslidden as to play a little sometimes. The two were sitting in the house one rainy day having a game of euchre. The Rev. Mr. ——, the resident Methodist minister dropped in, and after glancing at the doctor's hand passed around the young man, took a seat, and quietly watched the game. The young man was about to play a certain card, when the minister whispered to him:

"Don't play that; if you do you'll be euchred sure."

Whereupon the doctor, waxing irate, said:

"See here, Mr. ——, I ain't playing this game against the whole Methodist Conference. If the Conference wants to put up a V, I'll play them a rub."

This reverend brother was soon discovered to be a "mistake," and was deposed from the ministry.—Harper's Magazine.

BYRON'S GRAVE.—In Germany the fact is being commented upon that Byron's grave, at Hucknall Forkard—a small, mean town some sixty miles from Nottingham, England—is now more than half forgotten by the world, though the works of the poet seem to increase in popularity as time goes on.

It will be remembered that all that remains to mark the place where the author of "Childe Harold" was laid in a simple white marble slab, erected by Augusta Leigh. Some months since a writer in the London Times proposed that Byron's remains should be removed to the Poet's Corner in Westminster Abby. Surely, if genius only is considered, not one of the poets of England had, or has, a better right to lie in that precious little nook than Byron—Shakespeare excepted.

A LITTLE GIRL about three years old, after being corrected for something she had done, said, "Ma, I wish whipping cost something." "Why?" replied the mother. "Because," said little pert, "you never give me anything that costs something."

The Bank of St. George, Genoa.

The Bank of St. George was a political anomaly—a monetary phenomenon—that for four hundred years was the marvel of European finance. A body corporate, distinct from and independent of the civil authorities, having its own separate laws, officers, and administration, it affords the rare spectacle of a sovereignty within a sovereignty—a strange and ingenious politico-financial contrivance, which excited at once the wonder and admiration of European capitalists and political economists.

Founded upon an abstraction, with a national debt for its capital, and a bankrupt treasury as a sinking fund, with no other security than the faith of the republic and the integrity of its directors, its shares, nevertheless, commanded a premium, and its bills were preferred to coin. Gradually absorbing first the revenues, and then the colonial possessions of the state, it had the custom-house for an auxiliary, extensive colonies as collaterals, with the wealth of the Levant and the Indies as a reserve fund. Foreign capitalists became its depositors, sovereign princes its creditors, moribund millionaires remembered it munificently in their legacies, while fire, plague, and pestilence, by diminishing its liabilities, augmented its resources.

It was not, then, simply a banking-house, exercising the ordinary functions of a bank of deposit, exchange, and circulation. It coined money, constructed dock-yards, improved harbors, built bonded warehouses, monasteries, churches, public bake-shops, and ducal places. It erected fortifications and manned them, it constructed galleys and equipped them, it acquired provinces and governed them. It was a savings-bank, a sinking fund, a revenue office, and, as the prototype of the East India Company, a politico-commercial oligarchy, that "made war like merchants, and engaged in commerce like sultans."

At a time when the magnificent financial schemes of John Law and the bursting of the great "Mississippi Bubble" were involving France in beggary, and threatening the financial world in bankruptcy, St. George could boast the most solid and substancial credit in Europe, and became the model upon which were subsequently organized the celebrated banks of England and Amsterdam. With an unlimited credit, at a moment's notice it could draw all the gold of Genoa into its vaults, and that, too when the "rival sea-queens" controlled the rich commerce of the Indies; when Genoa alone could dictate terms to the Emperor of Constantinople, it maintained a navy comparable to that of England or the United States, and fought naval battles to which few modern sea-fights, except those of Nelson or Farragut, afford a parallel.—Harper's Magazine for February.

GLASS-BLOWING.—The juvenile mineralogist, constructing his first cabinet, brings home, as a rare curiosity, a crystaline stone, which shines like glass. It is glass—the glass of nature, the foundation of much of modern civilization and science, without which neither astronomy, chemistry, nor physiology could ever have emerged from their crude condition, since without it neither the telescope, the microscope, nor the chemist's vessels would have been possible. Subjected to an intense heat, and mixed with other substances, such as soda, lime, oxide of iron, oxide of lead, oxide of tin, according to the fabric to be wrought, it becomes ductile, is drawn out into the most tenuous threads, is rolled, beaten, moulded, cut at will, yields to even the slightest breath of the workman, and, patterned by him, takes any form he chooses to impart to it. Cooling, it loses its curiously ductile character, and becomes again the hardest and most brittle of substances. This quartz rock the boy fancies to be a precious stone. He is laughed at for his wild conjecture. It is a chance if he be not nearer right than those who ridicule him. Colored in nature's marvelous dye-house, it becomes precious only because it is more rare. Violet, it is an amethyst; uncrystalized and waxy in its structure, it is a chalcedony; red, it is a carnelian; of variegated colors, it is an agate; opaque, and yet colored, red, yellow, brown, it is a jasper. In a word, the same substance which is the chief component of glass is the base of most precious stones, yet in its commonest form most precious of all; for we might relinquish jasper, agate, chalcedony, and amethyst for glass, if we could obtain the latter only by such an exchange.—Harper's Magazine.

AN INCIDENT OF LOUIS NAPOLEON'S BOYHOOD.—Max Ring, the German author, has published a new book, entitled "Louis Napoleon Bonaparte," in which he gives the following anecdote of the early years of the ex-Emperor: When a very little fellow, he used to pass, on his way to school, a blacksmith shop, around which he sometimes loitered. One day he made the discovery that the blacksmith was in the habit of lighting his pipe with a long rod of iron, and, watching for a favorable opportunity, he drew the rod out of the fire and replaced it with the hot end left sticking out, so that when the smith returned in a few seconds after a temporary absence, and, unconscious of the change, took hold of the rod to draw it out of the fire, to light his pipe as usual, he burned his hand badly. His exclamation of pain and surprise was responded to by a burst of uncontrollable laughter from the irrepressible Louis, who had hidden himself away somewhere to enjoy the success of his nice little practical joke, and who thus, despite of himself, had revealed his secret and his hiding-place. The consequence was that he received the best beating that he probably ever got in his life (Sedan excepted) from the old smith, whose name was Mayer, and who is still living and well to do near Elbing.

SUPPOSED NATURAL ORIGIN OF SOME FOREST FIRES.—The great frequency of fires during summer in the pine forests of Germany and France, under circumstances where there was no suspicion of accidental or willful incendiarism, has suggested to Mr. Schrader the idea that they may possibly be in a measure spontaneous. In most of these forests the resin is collected in large quantity from punctures made in the bark, and an exudation of the same substance may take place whenever the bark is accidentally cracked. Mr. Schrader suggests that the tear-shaped drops of resin, in running from the tree, may form lenses, through which the rays of the sun may be concentrated, and act upon the inflammable surroundings, and thereby set fire to them. In many cases, possibly, a vapor of escaping turpentine may also, by its combustibility, cause the fire to spread with greater rapidity.—Harper's Magazine.

From the Cincinnati Chronicle.

Coroner Underhill this morning held an inquest on the body of a woman named Catherine H. Voight, residing at No. 88 Twelfth street, who committed suicide by opening the large veins of her arms with a pair of scissors.

The evidence goes to show that her husband, a machinist in this city, had paid his addresses to the young girl in New York. She was of good family, and he representing himself in easy circumstances, with a comfortable home to take her to, induced her to marry him. They came to this city some three months since, and took up their residence on Twelfth street. It was not until the girl arrived here that she discovered the true character of her husband. The man was a machinist, but it was difficult to get work, and he had absolutely nothing to support her with. Not being used to want, this circumstance gave her great trouble, and she soon became melancholy, and finally so sick as to require the attention of a physician. On Thursday last, in an unusual fit of melancholy, she seized a pair of scissors lying upon a table near her, and succeeded in cutting her arms so severely as to open the largest veins. She bled profusely, and when found by her husband was so exhausted as to be scarcely able to speak. The services of a physician were called in, but all attempts to restore her were futile, and after lingering in great pain she expired at a few minutes past 11 o'clock last night.

Flood in Rome.

Rome Correspondence London Echo.

No such inundation of the Tiber has taken place in this century as that which we are witnessing this morning. The incessant torrents of rain were gradually swelling the river the last few days, and yesterday the water had risen as high as the Rotunda, which, however, has been almost a yearly occurrence, and people began to apprehend, from the threatening appearance of the sky, that it would advance still further toward the higher portion of the city. At 10 o'clock this morning the Piazza del Popolo was completely flooded, and the water pouring into the Corso down the side streets, from the Ripetta. At noon the Via Condetti was flooded half way up, and the people who stood in crowds watching the progress of the water, were obliged to retreat back every minute. Since that hour the flood seems stationary, and, if the cessation of rain (which a bright morning promised us) is only lasting, we may hope not to see the Piazza di Spagna assume the appearance of a lake, as is already the case with Piazza Colonna and Piazza del Popolo. Boats are rowed in the streets, carrying provisions and assistance to the inhabitants thus forcibly shut up in their houses. Great destruction of the wine and oil stored up in cellars has taken place, and the poor shop-keepers have enough to do to remove their wares from the ground floor to the higher rooms. In the country around, great are the losses. Bodies of oxen, sheep, pigs, dogs, etc., are coming down the river, along with boards and planks, and other portions of the huts folds of the Compagna, where the herdsmen and shepherds have taken refuge in the trees. Boats are going backwards and forwards, bearing food to the inhabitants of the farms on the low ground, and bringing those into Rome who have no refuge. The soldiers and police are busy affording all possible assistance to the sufferers from this deluge. It is reported that a large boat, with twelve men, which started up the river this morning, with bread for the Osteria at Ponte. Molle, has been upset in the violent current, and all on board drowned.

Formation of the Florida Reef.

Two prominent features seem superimposed on the Atlantic face of our coast: the peninsulas of Cape Cod and Florida. The latter is still growing, and it is well ascertained that nearly all the peninsula has been built up from the sea bottom by species of corals and other marine animals now living and operating there. Centuries have passed while this vast tract has been built up. But erroneous notions have been formed regarding their rate of growth.

A brick, having a specimen of meandrina upon it one inch in diameter, was placed under water in the year 1860 by the writer, at Tortugas, with the view of determining the rate of growth of corals. When taken up in 1861, just one year after, it had increased to two inches in diameter, and was over half an inch in thickness. The large aquarium, which was built at the water-side for observation of marine objects, contained many other specimens, and it was observed that the branch corals grew even more rapidly, some attaining five to six inches in one year.

The various forms of branch corals, brain and star coral, and the sea feathers and fans are familiar to most. Our museums are well stocked with fine specimens. The Free Academy at New York has a fine collection of every species known to the waters of our shores. A large fragment of the Reef, as it appears, with many of its various inhabitants, and two fine head of brain coral, each two feet in diameter, are among them.

One species of astrea, unlike most of the corals that have a circumscribed growth, spreads out ledge-like, and knows no boundary, no definite form. This particular species seems to be the principal element in reef-building; its individual polyp is small, but the congregation is vast, and tier after tier rises until the surface is reached, when acres, miles of this one variety lie dead and decaying, and furnishing a strong foothold for another element of land-making, not less sure and irresistible.

The mangrove now performs its part. A long cigar-shaped fruit is formed, the seed of which germinates within the small inconspicuous flower before it drops, and presents the strange spectacle of a young tree, already rooted and ready to put forth its leaves as soon as it drops and finds foothold. These young trees are like the young magnolia; designed to live and thrive in the salt soil, they float over the shallow water, and take root wherever they touch the bottom. The rootlets then make fast to the reef mud, throw out side shoots, like so many flying buttresses, and put forth from the top a green and a tuft of rich glossy green leaves. The trunk does not reach below the water. Here is a net-work of rootlets wherein the debris of the ocean is entangled, and within which dead leaves and fragments of shells collect to ferm the meagre soil. Miles of reef become planted in this way.—Harper's Magazine for February.

THE CAPITULATION OF PARIS.

Cessation of Hostilities for Three Weeks—Text of the Terms and Stipulations.

We give below the dispatches in regard to the capitulation of Prris and the terms of the armistice, which were received Sunday night:

VERSAILLES, Jan. 29.—The German troops occupied all the forts around Paris at 10 o'clock this morning. The entire garrison of Paris, except the National Guard, surrender their arms. The armistice expires on the 18th of February.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 25.—On the morning of Monday, Jan. 23, a flag of truce left the French lines, and was met by the Germans. The bearer delivered a letter from Jules Favre addressed to Count Bismarck. At noon the missive reached Versailles, and was placed in the hands of Bismarck. It requested permission for Favre to come to Versailles. The reply was that he might. At 10 o'clock the same night the Prussian Premier applied to the Emperor of Germany for permission to hold an interview with him. Favre spent the night at the quarters of the Lieutenant of Police. The next day, before noon, a council of war was held to consider Favre's mission. Gen. von Roon, Count Bismarck, Gen. von Moltke, and the Crown Prince of Prussia were present, in addition to the Emperor William, who presided. The council lasted two hours, and the result of the deliberations were communicated to Favre, who returned to Paris at 4:30 o'clock.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Observer supposes that the Conference will be adjourned on account of the capitulation of Paris.

LONDON, Jan. 29, 4:30 p. m.—Emperor William has sent the following dispatch to the Empress Augusta:

"VERSAILLES, Jan. 29, 2 p. m.—Last night an armistice for three weeks was signed. The regulars and Mobiles are to be detained in Paris as prisoners of war. The National Guard will undertake the maintenance of order. We occupy all the forts of Paris. The city remains invested, but will be allowed to revictual as soon as the arms are surrendered. The National Assembly is to be assembled to meet at Bordeaux in a fortnight. All the armies in the field will retain their respective positions, the ground between the opposing lines to be neutral. This is the reward of patriotism, heroism, and great sacrifices. Thank God for this fresh mercy. May peace soon follow.

(Signed,) "WILHELM."

The Emperor will not enter Paris, but will return to Berlin on Tuesday, leaving the Crown Prince in command of the Prussians.

Provisions are being forwarded by way of Dieppe.

The capitulation and armistice settle nothing politically, nor do they insure an end of the war. All depends upon the Assembly.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—The city is in a perfect frenzy of excitement, now that the certainty of the capitulation of Paris is known. A telegram to the Federal Chancellor gives official confirmation of the news, which was received at a late hour last night. To-day the church bells were rung since daybreak, and there were several services in the churches, attended by crowds of worshippers. Sermons on peace were delivered, and prayers and thanksgiving for it offered. Before and after the morning service in the churches an immense crowd gathered in front of the palace, and the ladies of the house had appeared at the windows and waved their acknowledgments to the people. The scenes in the street are beyond description. Every person on his way to church as he met his neighbor stopped and embraced, and the women congratulated each other with tears in their eyes. The news of the capitulation to a certainty creates in the public mind here a charitable feeling, and there is a strong desire to act generously toward the fallen foe.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—To-night there is intense excitement among the French in London.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 29.—Mont Valerien was entered last night by the Prussian engineers, to draw the mines. The heavy guns will be immediately moved into forts. As the enceinte is strongly armed, and no confidence can be placed in the fierce population until after a general disarming, strong forces of infantry and artillery have been moved forward to cover the working parties. The object is to spare further bloodshed, and to give an opportunity to the French people, through the assembly of representatives at Bordeaux, to decide for war or peace. Elections will be permitted in all the departments, together with the free circulation of Deputies through the country. The army of Paris, regiments of the line, marines and Mobiles, are to be prisoners of war, with the exception of 12,000 men, who are required to maintain order. All corps and Francs-tireurs are to be dissolved, but the National Guard will remain armed. The French troops will deliver arms, flags and field artillery within fourteen days. French troops may retire into Paris armed. The banners of the forts are to be delivered, but the enceinte guns are to be dismantled, the carriages to be delivered to the Prussians, but the guns themselves to be left. The line of demarcation is drawn between the enceinte and the forts. The French portion extends to the enceinte only, and the Prussian portion to within five hundred paces of the enceinte, with certain topographical modifications. Fort Vincennes will remain in the hands of the French. Paris remains completely invested from a military point of view, but thirty-three miles of railroad will be repaired and permitted to convey sufficient supplies for the daily nourishment of the population. Bourbaki's army and the fortress of Belfort are not comprised in the armistice. The Prussian line of demarcation for southern armies is to be the line of the Loire.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 29.—The terms of lasting peace offered by Bismarck are as follows:

1. The cession of the province of Alsace and that part of the province of Lorraine known as the German Lorraine.
2. A monied indemnity of $1,000,000,000 francs.
3. Forty war ships from the French fleet.
4. One of the colonies now held by France which cannot learn that money indemnity must be guaranteed by municipalities. If this guarantee be refused, the property of each individual will be held until acquiescence is obtained.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—Bismarck, alluding to the reported negotiations between Napoleon and the Prussian Government, says the Emperor refers everything to the Regency. Bismarck denies that he has ever negotiated for the restoration of the Bonapartes, or that he intends to interfere in the domestic concerns of France.

"By the Sea."

Last night I watched the old year die—
A wind swept once across the sky
That seemed to me his parting sigh—

The tolling ceased. Then weirdly gay,
The bells rang forth across the bay—
Stealing a sea-charm on their way.

An echo from the hollow caves—
A thrill of music from the waves,
Where some that hear shall find their graves.

These changeful bells I whispered, sure
Most like some cunning overture,
Give foretaste what we must endure!

O young babe year, that yet shall grow
To work us either weal or woe—
'Tis strange that man should hail thee so!

O dread, mysterious volume sealed—
What fateful words lie there concealed,
Not till the end to be revealed—

O ship that sails the unknown sea!
We guess not what thy freight may be—
What storms—what shipwreck—none foresee!

THE extravagant tendency of the present generation suggests to a clergyman the inquiry whether it would not be better to devote half of one's energies to learning to live on a very small income, than to devote all of one's energies in struggling and waiting for a large income?

A UNIQUE recommendation given by a clergyman for a friend who desired a situation is as follows: "He is perfectly human, and has made some of the ablest mistakes that ever were made, showing in their happening and in their correcting a hopeful, conscious and growing manhood."

A JUDGE of the Indiana Supreme Court was accosted by the hotel bootblack, the other day, with a demand for "a quarter, sir." He turned upon the sable-hued American and indignantly asked him, "What do you take me for, sir?" "Oh I know you; you're one of them can-can fellers," pointing to the Variety Theatre.

THE latest attempt to hurt the feelings editorial is in this current story: "Are you connected with a paper here?" asked a countryman of an inmate of the Indiana Insane Asylum. "Oh, no," was the reply; "I have been to the insane asylum and been cured; a man never runs a newspaer after he is cured."

THERE is a story extant of an absent minded man who had the toothache. He was a quarry-man by profession, and he concluded that the best way to rid himself of the afflicted tooth would be to blast it out. So he filled his mouth with powder, fired a slow match, and ran around the corner to get out of the way of the result. When the explosion occurred he was surprised to find how close it seemed. It was very successful so far as the tooth was concerned; but when the Mont Cenis tunnel chap went home the general aspect of his mouth resembled that of the Delaware gap. The dentist says he would not undertake to fit him with a set of teeth, of the necessary size, for less than a thousand dollars.

AN amusing story is told by a sailor who, in a recent combat, had the luck to capture a Prussian subaltern. On the road to Paris the latter asked his captor, who had been chafing him unmercifully on the length of time the Prussians took to reduce the city, "How do you fare in your capital?" "How do we fare?—why, first rate," was the reply. "Then your oxen are not yet exhausted, as we imagined they were?" "Oxen! oh, they have been eaten long since." "You have large flocks of sheep, then?" "No, indeed, they disappeared simultaneously with the bullocks." "Ah! I understand; you have still horses to fall back on? I wish we had; we devoured them long since." "What the devil do you eat, then?" was the astonished inquiry. "What do we eat?" replied the sailor, with the greatest gravity in the world; "have you not heard in your camp?" "No." "Why, we eat our prisoners, of course, and find them delicious." The young Prussian turned pale at the thought, and did not venture another remark till his arrival at his destination.

RATE OF NERVOUS EXCITATION.—Prof. Helmholtz announces, as the result of some recent experiments made by M. Baxt, that the rate at which excitation is propagated along the motor nerves in man varies between thirty and ninety yards per second, and that the rapidity is greater in summer than in winter. By the artificial cooling or warming of the arm the accelerating influence of temperature has been fully ascertained, and it has consequently been determined that the interval of time between an impulse of the voluntary power and the corresponding movement of the muscle is greater in winter than in summer.—Harper's Magazine.

Mistake. He is editor of the Staats Zeitung, at Fort Wayne. We never see old John abused in that way, if he did threaten to "polish" us off one day. Mr. Sarnighousen, is a German of temperance habits, and don't guzzle any more beer than some Radical editors we know of. He was elected by a Republican dodge called a people's ticket, but now votes with the Democracy. And thus is why it is said he is a saloon keeper.

The franking privilege in this country under Radical regime, has become in immense affair. To such an extent has it been carried, in passing through the mails various articles, that Dan Rice is anxious to go to Congress so that he may be enabled to frank his menagerie over the country on another farewell tour. At a fair estimate for the nearly twenty thousand non-reporting postoffices, the Postmaster General says the following grand result is shown: Total number of franked letters for six months, 10,874,497; postage, $933,070. Printed matter, &c., 2,655,196 pounds; postage $338,593.85. Total postage for six months, $1,271,773 83. Total for one year, $2,543,372 75.—Ft. Wayne Sentinel.

Mose Skinner's Silver Wedding.

It being just twenty-five years since my first wife died, I thought I couldn't better celebrate the event than by having a grand silver wedding. Alas! twenty-five brief summers, and it seems but day before yesterday since I returned from her funeral an altered man, and told the undertaker to call round for his pay in the fall.

The great trouble in silver weddings is that you are apt to get two or three presents alike; but I flatter myself that I fixed 'em there. In the first place, Mrs. Skinner and I looked over our stock of silver-ware to see what we were out of, and found that we could take about twenty-five square presents without becoming billious; and then we invite a few children, in reference to nut crackers, butter-knives, and other small fry. I issued my invitations two weeks beforehand, to give everybody a chance to buy a present and in addition hinted in a very delicate manner what I should like each one to bring.

So the invitations read very much like this:

MRS. CHAIRITY PHLEABOTTOM AND HUSBAND,

You are both asked,

To Mr. and Mrs. Mose Skinner's Silver Wedding,

January 17th.

Please bring silver castor; with extra mustard judge.

MRS. JOANN BEEZUM AND HER HUSBAND,

You are both asked

To Mr. and Mrs. Mose Skinner's Silver Wedding.

January 17th,

On the back of each invitation was a neat gold scroll, inclosng the words: "Please avoid dollar stores."

To say the affair was a success would be defrauding the dictionary. I have looked that venerable pamphlet thro', but fail to find a word that meets the case. Nothing short of seven syllables and a French roof will do, so I give it up.

On the arrival of the guests, I took charge of the presents with as much emotion as the value of the present called for. A silver penknife I received with a husky tremor in my voice, while an elegant silver teapot caused me to entirely break down with emotion; but I recovered, and went thro' the trying ordeal with unflinching bravery. Those that didn't bring presents were told that we were not at home, which, of course made the gathering more select. We received some very fine presents, including a deed for a silver mine, a lock of fine hair streaked with silver, some silver chord from a maidens voice, a silver beam from the moon, and some nice oil made from a silver castor.

Then my wife and I stood up and receive the the silver-tongued congratulations of our guests on our happy married life. But I didn't need 'em. No, I should say not. When I see a man utterly crushed in spirit and baldheaded at the premature age of 50, with a black eye constantly on hand, and a wife who is ready to furnish him with more black eyes at the lowest market price, I pause ere I congratulate him on matrimonial bliss. Not that I would insinuate that Mrs. Skinner is not as gentle as a dove in the olive branch business. Not at all. I simply say that in a case like this, I should probably pause to the extent of of two semi-colons and a comma, ere I congratulated him.

A REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENT

The New York sun, Radical, makes a most startling development relative to the conduct of Governor Scott, of South Carolina, and Senator Crews, of the same State. The statement amounts to no more nor no less than a change, sworn to by one Samuel Haggett, that Scott and Crews came to New York in November last and hired number of roughs, as they supposed, as pretended deputy constables. It was alledged that they were wanted to protect the colored miners at the Union gold mines near Columbia, South Carolina from the KuKlux. When they arrived at Columbus, it seems new duties were sought to be imposed upon them, and they were expected to murder a number of leading men in certain portions of State. For the performance of this work the twenty-four men who went out from New York, as deputy constables, were promised $30,000 and State protection, besides $10,000, which one of the men singled out to be murdered had in the bank. The names of the persons selected as victims of this diabolical conspiracy are all given by this man Haggett, as well as their place of residence, and also the names of the men who went with him to South Carolina. Five of these men come forward and sustain by affidavit Haggett's statements. The men, after being taken to the gold mines, and finding no one there to protect, became impatient, and were finally taken back to Columbia, when they were paid $2 a day for their services, instead of $3, as promised before leaving New York, discharged, and ordered to leave the State at once under penalty of being arrested. They did not "stand upon the order of their going." They had declined to become a band of murderers in the interest of Scott and his friends, and the law-loving Governor, as well as United States Marshal Wilson, was very indignant over the fact. Among these "deputy constables" was Colonel Kerrigan, well known in New York as an active Fenian, and he recently met Scott and Crews in that city, when a quarrel ensued, Kerrigan denouncing them in unmeasured terms. They immediately left the city for the South, begging however, of Kerrigan to name his price for settling the matter up and not letting it become public. The Sun avers that it is capable of substantiating all the statements made by Haggett, by ample evidence already in its possession. The development comes from a Radical source, and affects Radical officials. We shall certainly be anxious to see what response will come to such grave charges from the parties accused.

GREAT FORTUNES.

Great Fortunes and how they were made [illegible] is a very interesting work and is splendidly illustrated. Any one who purchases this work will find it a fine addition to his library.

Great Fortunes is a book that appeals to all classes, describing the career, not only of commercial princes and heavy capitalists, but also of leading inventors publishers, authors, actors, physicians, etc. It abounds in history, anecdote, sketches of life in various parts of the country, reminiscence of distinguished and excentric men, accounts of curious and celebrated inventions, and narratives of intense and determined struggles crowded by the most brillant triumphs. It commends itself, likewise, as a work possesing great practical value, as a means of instruction and self-help to all its readers. How great fortunes were won, largely make up our author's interesting narative.

We are not surprised to learn that "Great Fortunes" is having a very large and rapid sale. It is sold by subscription only, and for the benefit of our readers who may wish to take a local or traveling agency for this most entertaining work, we give the address of the publishers in full, E. Hannaford & Co., 177 West Fourth street, Cincinnati.

A small boy, only nine years old passed through this city yesterday over the P. Ft. W. & C. R. W., on his way from Yankee Jim's, California, to an inland town in Vermont. Three years ago, using his own language, he, in company with his father and mother, went to California. In a few months his mother was taken sick and died. His father becoming dissipated soon forgot and neglected him. A few friends took an interest in him, procured a through ticket and started him on his way to his former home. He spoke in the highest praise of the conductors over the whole route, and, ere this, is probably once more among his friends.—Ft Wayne Sentinel.

JOHN L. DAVIS, our clever and enterprising hardware merchant, is out in a call to his numerous patrons, this week. Read for yourselves in another column.

A NICE new plank walk all the way to the depot, is a great improvement to our place. This will be more fully appreciated when the season of mud sets in.

WHAT manufactories we have here are quite busy, in their several lines of business, & have an unusual demand for their products. We hope to see a number of others of various kinds in operation, during the coming year.

A GRAND ball will be given at the Butler Hotel, on the Evening of the 21st inst. in honor of Washington's Birthday. From the well known reputation of the managers of the affair, we have no doubt of its complete success.

A FROSTY old bachelor of our acquaintance, with more brains than love for the fair sex, says, "that the word high-menial is admirably suggestive of the relation in which two people serve each other for life.

THANKS.—Our good humored friend Harvey Nichols, Esq., has our thanks for a great large rabbit—something less than a ton—and we begin to smack our lip over the prospects of a glorious stew. Come again—we won't say anything more about snow-birds.

WHEN a steady, well-behaved young man is seen shaking hands with a pump and bidding it an affectionate good-night, or saying, "Poor old Corkinson Robscrew," there may be a faint apprehension he has been taking something.

WE look for at least one hundred new buildings to go up in this place during the year. The erection of several large brick business houses, are already settled upon, and we may look for great changes.

THE weather continues mild, and, in consequence, the snow don't continue quite so much. The present month was ushered in by a most lovely day o'erhead. Though the last month of winter is still to pass, the weather gives us a foretaste of Spring.

THERE is some talk of exhibiting the Dorean Tableaux, in this place. It consists of fifty six scenes of the bible, painted on canvass from the gifted Dore. We have been present at its exhibition, and regard it as splendid, and well worth the patronage of the public.

So easy to be original. Some one said: "The nicest thing in bonnets—a pretty face." Now a Southern chap says: Nicest thing in boots—a pretty foot.' Next we'll have "Nicest thing in gloves—' a prety hand," and then, "nicest thing in hose—a pretty—" That'll do.

THERE was a collision on the Railway at Peru, which resulted in the killing and maiming of seven cattle in a stock car.

A man named Culbertson, was putting up a telegraph wire, at Goshen, the other day, across a railroad track. A train came along while Culbertson was on the poll, the smoke stack being just high enough to hit the wire. After the train passed, the man was still at the end of the poll. But the poll was'nt up. Not much.

After consultation with the friends of Temperance, in various portions of DeKalb County, it is determined to hold a Convention, of all the friends of Temperance, in said county, on the 22d day of February 1871, at Auburn, to confer together as to the best means to adopt for the suppression of intemperance. Friends of humanity turn out, and give one day to the advancement of the noble cause.

MANY CITIZENS.

The Fort Wayne Rink.

Fort Wayne is generally a gay place in winter. The amusements are numerous of a character so select that all attend with great pleasure to themselves. One of the most pleasant resorts, not only for the healthy, but also for the weary invalid, is the Rink. A stranger visiting there goes around of and evening, and there whiles an hour or so away, either by watching the quaint, little figures dashing over the smooth and slippery surface, or participating in the skating, and thereby enjoying winter to his hearts delight, imagining themselves

" In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice

This winter, by the enterprise of the present managers, the rink has become almost the sole place of amusement; sleighing has even been, to a great extent, abandoned in order that an evening at the Rink was not missed.

How to Treat Horses.

Having had a great deal of experience, in various ways, with horses, every since childhood, we feel justified in laying down a few rules for the benefit of those who are lacking in what livery-stable men call "horse sense."

In the first place, while hitching up a horse, if he don't do precisely as you say, kick him three or four times sharply in the ribs and flank, with your big boot. This don't do the horse any good, but then it shows your authority, and tends to make things lively.

In the second place, improve every opportunity to whack the horse over the nose, and jerk him savagely by the bit. This will encourage him to throw up his head out of your reach whenever you come near him, and give you plenty of exercise whenever you wish to bridle him. Besides it shows that a horse has some pluck.

In the third place, when you get started on the road, if your horse goes a little too fast, or a little to far to the right or left, or fails to do precisely what you think he ought to do, be sure to hit him about five sharp cuts with the whip. Of course, he will not know what it is for, and will jump forward vigorously, probably jerking off your hat. Then you will have a chance to jerk the reins lively and give him five or six more cuts. Be sure while playing the whip to grit your teeth and say for the edification of the horse; "I'll teach you to jerk my hat off." All the people on the street will set you down for a fool, who don't known half so much as the horse. But then it isn't their horse.

THE ADVANTAGES OF BEING POOR.—There is some advantage in being poor. You are never asked to run for Alderman, for instance, nor to loan money, nor to stand with anybody who is going to get married. No one bores you with invitations to wooden weedings, and you are not asked to attend political meetings and sit on the stage near the speaker. You are not worried with sewerage taxes, and the collector don't hunt you up and make you swear as to your income; all of these things pass unheeded. You are not likely to get fat and dyspeptic through want of exercise. Nor do your relations hunt you up to visit you. We can always tell the latter sign when a poor devil is getting along in the world. The wagon containing his relations from the country is frequently at his door, and he is regularly called to the train to welcome some aunt, or send a cousin on his parting way. All these these things the poor man escapes. He eats the bread of cheerfulness, and when he can't get that he goes hungry. He is apt to be cynically conscious that the world esteems him as a man of small merits. So in time he grows careless of what it thinks of him, and plods along in a state of forlorn sadness.

A NEW DANGER.—A gentleman of this place, who is traveling extensively, makes us acquainted with an occurence which presents a new danger. Believing it our duty to unfold all snares, so the reader may be prepared for emergencies, we give our friend's story as it was related to him, by a gentleman who was the intended victim of a vlilain.

In traveling from New York to Philadelphia, our friend's informant says he fell into a chance conversation with a stranger, having all the appearances of respectability. After some quarter or half hour's talk, the stranger politely asked the gentleman if he would take a cigar, at the same time holding out two cigars—one looking like a regalia, the other smaller, such as is usually called London size. The gentleman happening to take the larger one, being the nearest to him as prrsented, the stranger reccommended him to take the smaller one, remarking he thought it was of better flavor. After smoking about a quarter to a third of the cigar, the gentleman discovered that he was certainly becoming very dizzy. A suspicion flashed through his mind that the cigar was not all right. He immediately threw it away, but his giddiness increased so much that it was with the greatest difficulty that he preserved his self-posession. In a few moments a most copious perspiratton started from every pore in his body and the water fairly ran off his person. The stranger meanwhile was apparently sound asleep on the other side of the seat. On his arrival at New York, the gentleman with great difficulty got out of the car and took a carriage for his hotel, where he was soon after voilently attacked with vomiting, and passed a very sick night. He has been for several years a resident of Cuba, a great smoker, and is fully convinced that the cigar was drugged, and that this is a new dodge to entrap the unweary for the purpose of robbery. He attributes his escape to the fact of his smoking but little of the cigar and to his very robust constitution. What next, in the line of man-traps?

SUPPOSED INFANTICIDE.—The boy of an infanty was found in a well, at Monroville Ind, last week.

A NEW elastic toy represents Bismarck holding Napoleon by the ears. A vigorous shaking of the ex-emperor gives great delight to Young America.

one of the most reliable and extensive dry goods establishments in Fort Wayne. The enterprising managers, Messrs. Root & Co., are gentlemen of ability and experience, and will always be found square and honorable in their dealings with the public. Any of our citizens desiring to make purchases in Fort Wayne, should certainly give them a call. See advertisement in another column.

A LADY wishes some one would invent a "legometer," to attach to men's pedals, so that wives may determine the distance traveled by their husbands when they want to just step down to the "post-office" of an evening.

WHAT A DAY MAY BRING FORTH.—A Mr. Lorenzo Day, of Chickasaw county, Miss., having married Miss Martha Week, a local poet comments:

" A Day is made, a Week is lost,
But time should not complain—
There'll soon be little Days enough
To make the Week again."

THE following remedy for croup is going the rounds of the papers, which we publish for the benefit of young married people. It is said to give almost instant relief, even in cases where other remedies have failed. It is nothing more than alspice tea. Make the tea of whole grains of alspice. It seems at once to cut the phlegm loose and relieve the child.

THE Elkhart Review, will adopt prepay system in the future. That is the only proper system upon which to run a paper. We shall follow in its adoption in a short time. We have the unspeakable pleasure of publishing a paper where people have been fooled, by paying in advance, but we hope soon to regain their confidence to the extent of two dollars per year, in advance.

THE Waterloo Press of last week says:

REPAIRING.—A large force of men are engaged in repairing the damage to Lent's Hotel, by the recent fire. It will soon be ready for occupation.

PROMOTION.—We learn that Mr. T. Y. Dickinson has, recently, been assigned to an advanced position in the Pension Office at Washington.

LAW PARTNERSHIP.—Hon. J. H. Baker, of Goshen, and Gen. L. J. Blair, of this place, have formed a co-partnership for the practice of the law, in this and adjoining counties.

THE following lines are supposed to have been written by an editor who was insane, for certainly no sane man could dream anything so improbable:

I had a dream the other night,
When every thing was still:
I dreamed that each subscriber
Came up and pay his bill;
Each wore a look of honesty,
And smiles were round each eye,
As they handed over the stamps
They yelled, "How's that for high?"

INDIANAPOLIS is getting sensational. Recently there was a story of an organized gang of resurrectionists, who robbed all the cemeteries within a radius of ten miles and shipped the stiffs to neighboring cities. Now we are told of still another gang of mercenary scoundrels who rob aristocratic corpses of the costly burial cases in which they are inclosed, leaving them to repose uneasily in the wooden box, used to protect the silver-mounted and beautiful rosewood coffins from contact with the earth. This robbery of the dead is justly denounced by the press.

Why do Boys Swear?

Young man often contract a fearful habit of using profane language, and find it impossible to speak a word without prefixing it with half a dozen oaths, the very lightest of which would shock any of their feminine associates. Now why is it done? Can not a word be emphasized without this profanity? Are these spurious adjectives necessary to express a sentiment, or do they add sense, or meaning or wit to the expression of a thought? No! they do not.

The effect is completely the reverse of this. Now, no young man can adopt and cast off this habit at will, and, when once formed, it will manifest itself in the manner and place that will make all its beholders blush. No respectable young man will think of this without resolving, if he be guilty, to completely break him of the abominable habit.

THE following lines are respectfully dedicated to all whom it may concern.

"Standing on the sidewalk,
Smoking my cigar,
Nothing under heaven,
My delight can mar,
Staring at the ladies,
Surely what a treat,
Bless me! this is pleasant,
Loafing on the street."

INTERESTING.—A married woman left her husband at Ft. Wayne, the other day, and loped with a "lawyer" called Tom. She left the following affecting letter.

"because i leave you i cant live with you and live the life i led. Tom and i have gone together. i have taken all the money i could get and i want you to take the children to your fathers and forget me. i have left you mine and toms picture. you had better break up the house and live at home. i love tom better than i do you and that is why i have gone. forget me just as soon as you can. Your wife that was HELLEN.

It was certainly kind in Helen to leave Tom's picture. But if the husband overtakes the runaways, and his shot gun justifies the faith he places it it, the probabilities are that there won't be enough of Tom's countenance left to take a second negative from.

WHAT is it that mooves the world, as Archimedes' lever could not? Why, steam, lightning and printer's ink. And the chief of these is printer's ink. It builds up a new business, sustains a well established one, repairs a dilapidated one extends any kind of one; builds States, railroads, towns, cities, parties politicians shools, churches, doctors, lawers, mechances, manufactories; makes the fortunes of patent medicine men and sells the prize. candy man's packages! Only th—" ink' of it! And it costs the printer money and toil.

THERE is a gentleman in town, not noted for his religious inclinations or devotional practices, who was recently attacked with a severe cholic. Becoming somewhat alarmed for his safety in the flesh, and his peace in the future he bethought himself of prayer. Kneeling down by a chair, he undertook to give expression to his troubled spirit in a supplicating petition to his Maker for relief from pain, or a safe pilgrimage to that "undiscovered country" should his earthly existence so soon be terminated; but as he was unaccustomed to addressing the Divine Being, the only thought to which he could give utterance was "Good bye, John."

absolute necessity to the county and community where it is published. All the city papers cannot supply the place of the home paper. That should be the first love of every man and woman, for with the paper is the locality identified. The paper gives the county and town where printed much of their importance in the world, and gives in detail the local news, which cannot be gained by any other scource. Every day's issue of the paper is so much local history, and the rise, growth and development of the town and county can be measured and recorded only by the local newspaper that constantly is gathering its items. People do not properly appreciate their home newspaper. They measure the value of a paper too much by the number of colums it contains The home paper at any price is the cheapest paper one can take, for in it is found the information to be obtained from no other source.

Another thing to be taken into consideration. Every county has one or more newspapers. Hence, circulation of each paper must be limited. There is therefore the greatest need of activity and interest on the part of the people to give their own good paper, vigorous, and substantial support.

"A FELLOW feeling makes us wonderous kind," says some one. But that depends altogether upon circumstances. A fellow feeling in your pocket for the little cash you may chance to have would'nt have the tendency to cause you to boil over with kindness. Not much.

If home interests are promoted all is safe. Let home mechanics work for you, and home manufactures and merchants supply you so far as possible, and, although you may occasionally miss a little "better bargain" on hand elsewhere, in the end you will be the gainer be finding your town daily growing in prosperity and importance, thus increasing the value of your real estate, and stimulating your own individual business.

MODERN Philanthropy governs every body's appetite and passions but your own Report to the family and friends of your erring neighbor every step you see him take amiss.

—"Village Girl," the trotter, was accidentally killed recently, at New York. She was valued at $7,000.

—Hon. David Lyman, whose death occurred recently at Middletown, Conn., was insured in different life insurance companies to the amount of $80,000.

—The New York Democrat, official organ of the city government, has been changed from an evening to a two-cent morning paper. It is now edited by J. H. Lambert.

—The deaths of nine persons were recorded in New York on the 25th, whose average age was 84. Seven were over 80, and two nearly 100.

—James F. Randolph, father of Gov. Randolph, of New Jersey, died on the 25th. He was 80 years of age, and was for many years the leading editor of New Jersey.

—Early on Wednesday, three men, evidently laborers, were found frozen to death on Hampstead Plain, Long Island. They had been together on a spree, and were overtaken by the snow-storm.

—Two children were poisoned in Boston by tasting the contents of a vial they picked up among the ruins of a drug store destroyed by fire. Death ensued in a few hours.

—A locomotive exploded its boiler near Hinsdale, on the Boston and Albany railroad, Tuesday, scalding five men, two of whom were engineers named Hustard and Jas. H. Eustace, who have since died.

—Ole Bull, the famous violinist, has bought Mr. George H. Shapleigh's residence and farm, situated in Lebanon, Me. He has a gang of workmen remodeling the house, and as soon as arrangements are completed will occupy the premises.

—John Irving, the notorious burglar who was supposed to have been mortally wounded on New Year's night by a policeman while attempting, with five companions, to rob a safe in a Brooklyn store, cut his way out of his cell in the Raymond street jail, in that city, and escaped.

—As County Auditor Watson was driving down Harlem Lane, New York, Wednesday evening, with a friend, in a sleigh, he was run into by another sleigh, driven by an intoxicated man. Watson's horse, valued at $10,000, was killed, and Watson's skull was fractured. He was taken to a club house, where he now lies in a precarious condition.

—Asa T. Downe, a young man late in the employ of Dr. Turner, in Trenton, New Jersey, was found in a dying condition in a barn in the suburbs of the city, with his head badly cut and marks of violence on his throat. His pocket-book and watch were taken from him. He was seen in company with another man in several saloons on Saturday. He was insensible up to 4 o'clock, when he died. No clue has been found as to who committed the deed.

—In the N. Y. Court of General Sessions, before Judge Bedford, James Hughes, arraigned on a charge of grand larceny, pleaded not guilty. Hughes is the man charged by Count Johannes, whom he had formerly engaged as his counsel, with the murder of Mr. Nathan. Hughes requested the Court to assign counsel for defense, and begged the Count should have nothing to do with him. Judge Bedford assigned counsel and granted an adjournment. As Count Johannes has asserted that Hughes was the murderer of Mr. Nathan, Judge Bedford directed him to go before the grand jury and offer proof under oath.

—A terrible accident occurred at the east end of Bergen tunnel, in New York, on the 23d inst. A car was being drawn down to the bridge which spans the mouth of the tunnel, when, owing to the slippery condition of the track, it jumped it, and dashing through the fence which guards the bridge, leaped the precipice to the other side. The car fell twenty feet, and was dashed to pieces. The conductor, who stood at the brake, went down with the car and was injured, it is supposed, fatally. Four or five passengers who were in the car also sustained severe and probably fatal injuries.

—On Monday, near Sharon, in the Western Pennsylvania coal region, at a coal bank of J. M. Ormbys & Co., four men were instantly killed. The shaft that leads to the pit is 110 feet deep, and has the usual machinery for lowering and raising weights. William Crawford, John Sheddon, Frank Watkins, M. McDonald, and William Moltisher, got within the cage, preparatory to descending to work. Before they had gone a great distance, the wire rope which suspended them parted, and the unfortunate men were precipitated a distance of 110 feet to the pit below. Four of the party were killed almost instantly, and the survivor, a German miner named Moltisher, received serious injuries.

The West.

—The Germans of St. Paul protest against the sale of arms to France.

—Double the usual amount of wheat is being sowed in California this season.

—The police of Terre Haute, Ind., discovered the headquarters and place of storage for the plunder of the gang of burglars that has been operating there lately. Three of the gang and a considerable quantity of stolen goods were captured.

—A horrible affair occurred on the 22d inst., at Peosta, a place about ten miles west of Dubuque, Iowa. A man named Chas. Hayes was killed by poison administered by his wife, who put it into his food which she brought to him in the woods where he was engaged chopping.

—After giving the matter a thorough test, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company are now placing upon all their passenger trains the Westinghouse Air Brake, which is so constructed that the engineer can brake the entire train in one second of time and stop in one train's length when running at a rapid rate. Each car is provided with a cylinder and brakes, applied by means of atmospheric pressure.

—The statement which has been going the rounds of the papers, that a petition against woman suffrage has been received at Washington, bearing the signatures of 426 lady students of the Illinois Normal University, is unfounded.

—A telegram from San Francisco states that Deery won the game in the Deery-Dion match of billiards, scoring 500, actual count, in the one hundred and thirty-fourth inning, against Dion's 479. "The former grew cool, the latter excited, to the surprise of everybody." Tremendous excitement followed the result. Deery's largest run was 57; Dion's, 42.

—Jennie McIntosh, whose parents live at Oskaloosa, Iowa, was up before Recorder Wilson for preliminary examination on a charge of murdering her illegitimate child on the 26th of December. It will be remembered that the dead infant was found on a car seat of the Des Moines Valley railroad, wrapped in two newspapers. The woman's condition at the time of her arrest proved her recently to have been delivered of a child, and during a conversation with Dr. Carpenter, of Keokuk, she admitted the fact, stating that the child was born in a privy in Keokuk—that it was alive and breathed several times.

—A terrible calamity occurred at Braidwood, Ill., the coal-mining town south of Wilmington, on the night of the 18th instant. The house of William Crowen took fire, and before the discovery was made, the flames had gained great headway. There were in the house Mr. Crowen, his wife and three children, and eleven miners who boarded with them. All of the inmates escaped except two of the children and a young Englishman named William Reynolds, who perished. Reynolds lost his life in his efforts to rescue the children. Ten of the rest of the inmates were badly burned, and all lost their clothes and valuables.

—A San Francisco dispatch says: The volunteers from San Diego, who went out to find the Indian depredators in Jameuet Valley, returned, reporting the finding of two, whom they disposed of. It is feared that serious trouble may arise from this action, as about 5,000 Indians are in the vicinity of the line between Upper and Lower California. Last evening a party of Indians attempted to stop the Los Angelos stage, near old San Diego. Lieut. Cradelbough and twenty soldiers were surprised at the Sixty Forty-nines, east of Prescott, Arizona, by a hundred and fifty Indians. They lost twenty-four horses. Dr. Steigers was shot in the shoulder, and his arm had to be amputated. T. Meyers was severely wounded. It is supposed that several Apaches were killed. Subsequently Capts. Hawley and Monahan overtook the Indians and defeated them, killing several.

Foreign.

—The Empress denies that she had signed the agreement which Bismarck claims to have. The Empress is depressed and distressed at the news from Paris.

—There was a terrible collision in the tunnel, Thursday, between two trains, one carrying German recruits for guards and the other French prisoners. Many prisoners were killed and a large number injured. The collision was accidental.

—A London dispatch of the 24th says the Conference has again adjourned for one week. A resolution to confine the discussion to the consideration of the question of the treaty of Paris was adopted. The Conference is regarded as a farce.

—The defeat of the Prussians on Sunday, at Dijon, was complete. Ricciotti Garibaldi destroyed the Sixty-first Prussian Regiment. The French behaved heroically. After the battle the Prussians retreated toward Mesigny and Savigny-le-Sur.

—It is stated from London that Napoleon feels confident of the restoration of his dynasty, if not of reascending the throne himself. At any rate, it is stated that Germany will give to France a government, and demand that the French shall abide by it.

—Letters from Paris, by balloon, state that the Council of Defense, on the afternoon of the 21st, after the sortie, accepted the resignation of Trochu, and replaced Admirals Soisset and Laroniriere. Trochu remains Civil Governor. Lefloe is succeeded by Lorain.

—The Liberals condemn Bismarck, and not Favre, for delaying peace. A Democratic organ says: "There is no necessity to prick the vanquished with pins. The Chancellor's last note may encourage another sortie, and if it costs a dozen German lives it will be a too expensive fee for another classical dispatch."

—Dispatches have been received at headquarters from Gen. Von Werder, commanding the Army of the East, announcing his continued pursuit of the French under Bourbaki. A large number of prisoners have been captured. Several severe skirmishes have taken place with the French rear guard, without serious loss to the Germans.

—A dispatch from Lille of the 23d says that M. Gambetta has received a telegram to the effect that the Garibaldians gained a victory near Dijon, and that the enemy abandoned a strong position previously held, with large stores of material of war. Many prisoners fell into the hands of the Garibaldians, who are pursuing the enemy.

—Advices from Paris, under date of the 22d, state the loss of the French in the sortie of the 19th to have been officially ascertained, and proves to have been less than 3,000 killed, wounded and missing. Gen. Trochu has issued an order which speaks in terms of the highest praise of the officers and soldiers who participated in the engagement of the 24th.

The Herald's Paris special says: "A decree of the Government has just been issued, which will startle those who sought their safety out of Paris. The privacy of their houses, left behind, is about to be violated by authorized plunderers, their cellars sacked of wine, wood and coal, and their store-rooms invaded, and their contents delivered over to fill the empty public stomach, and replenish the public coal-scuttle. A small grain of comfort remains for absent householders."

—M. Jules Favre will attend the London Conference. Count Bismarck having, in his capacity as Chancellor and Political Chief of the German Empire, refused safe conduct to M. Favre through the German lines of investment surrounding Paris, the latter has renewed his application to the military authorities, who have granted a pass so carefully worded as to divest it of all inferences of a political nature. M. Favre has probably already left Paris.

—Under cover of the dense fog, on the 21st, the French troops again massed near Fort Valerein. The Prussian position at Mont Retoul was taken by surprise by the French, but the works were subsequently retaken by the German Ninth division. The total German loss in both affairs was 20 officers and 200 men. The prisoners taken by the Germans say there are to be other attacks upon the investing lines, but assert positively that the National Guards will not fight.

—The London Times has the following special dispatch, dated Versailles, Jan. 24: "Jules Favre is here. He proposes the capitulation of the soldiers and garrison with the honors of war. The terms are not deemed admissible. The attack on St. Denis and the disaster of the 19th mainly led to the resolution to ask for terms. The arrangement of the terms of surrender will take time. The French demands are by far too large." The Times, in a leader, says that if Favre refuses unconditional surrender, and will not end the whole war on Germany, Bismarck, who has in his possession the full acceptance of those terms by the French Emperor and Empress, will threaten to restore Napoleon.

—The warmest friends of France in America and Europe admit her cause to be hopeless; that further resistance is a crime against humanity; that she has done all a great and brave nation can do, and secured by her gallant resistance the sympathy and admiration even of her enemies. Laboulaye, the eminent author, writes here that there is no ill will against Germany, but that she hates and opposes Prussian despotism. When France has fallen, England will feel that she is nothing on the continent. Italy and Austria will be slaves, and European civilization will suffer a greater eclipse than under the First Napoleon.

—A special to the N. Y. Herald, dated Jan. 21st, says: "Last night at 11 o'clock a general summons to arms was sounded in turbulent quarters, but so depressed was the miserable population that not more than 500 men responded to the call. It was useless for such a gathering to make a descent on the Hotel de Ville, so they gave up the job in despair and betook themselves to their cold and cheerless beds. To-day, the Prefect of the Police, with a strong body of the National Guard, was at the Hotel de Ville, and caused the adjacent streets to bristle with bayonets. The unhappy citizens of Paris are too much wasted by misery to be able to incite revolution, although it is probable that some trouble will occur in the streets."

—Favre is reported to be discussing the terms of peace with Bismarck. The German demands are said to be as follows: The forts to be garrisoned by Germans; the regulars and Gardes Mobile to be sent to Germany; the province of Champaign to be held as a pledge for the payment of war expenses; Alsace and Loraine to be yielded to Germany; Paris to receive no garrison for protection, the city to be confined to the National Guards, who will not be disarmed. France will then be left to reconstruct the Government. These propositions are combatted on the side of the French as too severe. Bismarck insisted that the surrender should be signed by the whole Provisional Government. M. Favre replied that it would be impossible to bind the Bordeaux Government. Bismarck then said if the Republic rejects the terms and the Empire accepts, you must choose between the acceptance and the restoration of the Empire. M. Favre has departed for London.

Washington.

—It is stated on apparently good authority that the President on Monday ordered the immediate discontinunace of the sale of surplus arms and munitions of every kind.

—The unveiling of Miss Ream's statue of Lincoln took place on Wednesday night, in the rotunda of the Capitol, which was brilliantly illuminated and decorated with flags, one made of California silk being suspended over the statue. President Grant, Vice-President Colfax, Gen. Sherman, Judge Davis, the Commissioners of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the orators of occasion occupied seats on the platform.

The South.

—A German named H. Gertsenberg was found dead on Thursday, at Fort Smith, Ark.

—By directions of the President, the headquarters of the Department of the South is transferred from Atlanta, Ga., to Louisville, Ky., the latter being the headquarters of Gen. Halleck.

—H. B. Mullett, Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury Department, is at St. Louis, to consult with the Mayor and City Council in reference to the new custom house for that city.

—A Courier-Journal special says: "Last night three negroes, armed with pistols, broke into a house on the Harrodsburg pike, a mile from Lexington, and demanded the money or the life of Mr. Murphy, the gatekeeper. Murphy drew a pistol, when one of the negroes fired at him and fled, making good their escape. The same party that burned Jesse Talbot's barn and haystacks, a short time since, tried last night to fire his premises. There is a bright light in that direction to-night, and it is supposed they are again at work. A meeting of the farmers has been called at the Court House for Saturday, to take action for the preservation of property.

Obituary.

—Thomas Garrett, well known as a prominent Abolitionist and an especial friend of escaped slaves, died at Wilmington, Del., recently, aged 82 years.

—Judge Noah D. English, a prominent lawyer and Mason of Arkansas, died at Little Rock, on Saturday, of congestive chills.

GAMBETTA INTERVIEWED.—A correspondent had a personal interview with Gambetta on the 17th. I asked whether the war would be continued if Paris fell.

He replied with great earnestness that "the fall of Paris would have no effect whatever in stopping the war if the Prussians' conditions of peace were maintained; but I cannot bring myself to believe that Paris will capitulate. I believe that the people themselves would burn her like a second Moscow before they would allow the enemy to take possession."

"But supposing she does capitulate," I asked, "what then?"

"In that case," said Gambetta, "we must fight in the Provinces. We have now, without the Army of Paris, half a million of men in the field, and a quarter of a million ready to join them, without touching the levy of 1871 or the enrolled married men. The former will give three hundred thousand recruits, and the latter two million able men. We have arms pouring in from all quarters."

In regard to England, Gambetta spoke with some bitterness. He said "that country had made a fatal mistake when she allowed fear and selfishness to prevent her interference in allowing France to be dismembered and destroyed. England has lost her only ally on the Continent; has virtually handed over the balance of power to Prussia, whose close and secret alliance with Russia is unquestionable. No one with sense can doubt that in ten years we shall see Russia at Constantinople, Prussia in Holland, Belgium in Trieste, and the whole control of the world handed over to those Powers. The Czar looks further westward toward English possessions."

"I believe myself," said Gambetta, "the English people now see their error, and will hold the Ministers responsible when Parliament meets."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JAN. 20.—SENATE.—Sumner presented an Equal Rights bill, which was referred. Fenton introduced, by request, a bill directing the Postmaster General to contract with the North American Steamship Company, of New York, for the transportation of mails between New York and Antwerp, or Bremen, touching at Plymouth and Cherbourg, for a term of fifteen years, at the rate of $15,000 a trip. A large number of bills of minor importance were introduced and referred, and, after an Executive session, the Senate adjourned until Monday, Jan. 23.

HOUSE.—The House, at 1:10 p. m., went into Committee of the Whole, and resumed consideration of the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill—the question being on Mr. Wood's motion to limit the expenditures of the secret service fund of the State Department, and that none of it shall be used in connection with the annexation of San Domingo. There was some debate, and, without finishing the bill, the House proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill to provide for the government of the District of Columbia, which, after a few amendments, was passed. Dickey, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the Army Appropriation bill, and it was made the special order for Thursday next. The bill appropriates $27,475,000. Adjourned till the 23d.

JAN. 23.—SENATE.—Ramsay presented the credentials of Mr. O. P. Stearns, elected by the Legislature of Minnesota for the unexpired term of Hon. D. S. Norton, deceased. After the reading of the credentials, Mr. Stearns presented himself and took the oath of office. Sumner presented and had read the joint resolution of the Indiana Legislature instructing the Senators from that State to vote against the annexation of Domingo. Ordered printed and laid on the table. On motion of Edmunds, Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, the Senate took up and passed the bill increasing the pensions of disabled soldiers and sailors, and the widows and children of deceased soldiers and sailors. It increases all pensions twenty per cent. for five years from March 4, 1871. Unfinished business being Trumbull's bill to relieve Congressmen from importunity and preserve the independence of the departments of the Government, it was considered. At 4 o'clock the Senate went into Executive session, and half an hour later adjourned.

HOUSE.—Resolutions introduced and referred: A resolution for a commission to determine the claims for damages on American commerce by Confederate privateers; for the improvement of the navigation of the Wabash river; to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at Booneville; to reduce the rates of correspondence by telegraph, and to connect the telegraph with the postal service; granting lands for the Montana and Wyoming railroad; granting 1,800,000 acres of public lands for common schools in Virginia; granting public lands to North Carolina for common schools. Also, for the erection of a postoffice at Raleigh, North Carolina. Cox offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into the expediency of giving each State all the public lands therein that have been subject to sale or entry more than twenty years. Wm. M. Paine, member elect from Georgia, appeared and took the oath of office. Stevens, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill to regulate rank in the navy. It fixes the relative rank of surgeons, engineers, paymasters and chaplains. Stevens explained and advocated the bill, claiming that by the reduction made under it, there would be a saving to the Government of from $75,000 to $100,000 per year. After a lengthy debate, the bill was passed. Dawes introduced a joint resolution for the appointment of a Committee on Fish and Fisheries. Passed. The House, at 4:15 p. m., adjourned.

JAN. 24.—SENATE.—Sherman, from the Finance Committee, reported, with sundry amendments of a minor character, the House joint resolution declaring the meaning of the twenty-sixth section of the act to reduce internal taxes, etc., approved July 14, 1870. Its effect is to allow merchandise in port and not entered on Dec. 31, 1870, to be admitted under the old tariff. The bill was passed. Sumner presented a bill against consolidating ocean cable companies. The Vice President presented the credentials of F. P. Blair, Senator elect from Missouri for the term ending March 4, 1873. Scott introduced a joint resolution appropriating $1,000, or so much as is necessary, to defray the expenses of the select committee to investigate the alleged Southern outrages. Passed. On Morton's suggestion, the motion of Bayard to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution allowing the Committee on Southern Outrages to sit during the sessions of the Senate was agreed to. The resolution was then tabled for the present. After disposing of other unfinished business, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—McClurg, from the Committee on Elections, reported, in the contested election case from North Carolina, that Nathaniel Boyden, the contestant, was not entitled to a seat, and that Francis E. Shaber, the sitting member, was. Resolution adopted. The bill to provide for the consolidation of Indian tribes, and to create a Territorial Government for the Indians, came up as the regular business of the morning hour, and, after discussion, was recommitted, with leave hereafter to extend the debate. Logan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a resolution authorizing a sub-committee with regard to the kidnapping and compulsory resignation of the three cadets, to proceed to West Point and take testimony. Adopted. Asper reported a substitute for the Senate bill to reimburse the State of Arkansas for money expended in enrolling, equipping and provisioning militia for the suppression of the rebellion. The substitute was agreed to, and the bill passed. Young presented the credentials of Stephen A. Carker, member elect from the Fifth Congressional District of Georgia, and moved that he be sworn in. There was a storm of opposition, but it was unavailing. Carker presented himself, and was sworn in. A bill was introduced by Niblack giving the Chicago and Ohio Southern Railroad Company the right to build a bridge across the Wabash river, and declaring it a post road. Passed. Bills were reported by the Committee on Commerce, and recommitted, in reference to a railroad bridge across the Mississippi river, and to encourage the building of steamships in the United States. The House then, at 4:30, adjourned.

JAN. 25.—SENATE.—Senator elect F. P. Blair, of Missouri, presented his credentials through his colleague, Schurz, appeared and took the oath of office. He was then appointed to fill the vacancies in the Committees on Education and Labor. Chandler introduced a bill to enable the Jackson, Lansing and Saginaw railroad to change the northern terminus of the road from Traverse Bay to the Straits of Mackinac. Trumbull, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back adversely, the bill introduced by himself in reference to life insurance. Sumner forwarded to the Secretary, and had read the credentials of his colleague, Wilson, re-elected for six years from March next. After a personal debate between Fenton and Conkling, relative to the New York Custom House and Collector Murphy's administration, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Niblack reported the Fortification bill, and it was made the special order for next Tuesday. The bill appropriates $1,647,900. Hopper, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the Senate amendment to the House bill declaring the meaning of the act of July 14, 1870, to reduce internal taxation. The amendment was concurred in, and the bill now goes to the President for approval. Negley, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill extending the benefits of the act for the establishment of an asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors to the disabled soldiers of the war of 1812 and the Mexican war. Passed. Negley also reported a bill to repeal the proviso in the sixth section of the act of July 27, 1868, relating to pensions. Passed. Morgan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the Senate bill to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior for disposal by sale, after appraisement, the United States military reservation at Forts Lane and Walla Walla, Oregon; Fort Zariah, Kan.; Camp McGarry, Nev.; Fort Sumner, New Mexico; Fort Jessup and Sabine, La.; Fort Wayne, Ark.; Fort Collins, Col.; Fort Dakota, in Dakota, and such portion of Fort Bridges, in Wyoming, as is no longer required for military purposes. Garfield moved to amend by adding Fort Smith, Ark. Agreed to. The bill then passed. Brooks, of New York, made inquiry of Dawes with regard to the meeting of the next Congress. Dawes replied that he could only give his private opinion on the subject. As it stood, it was obvious there must be a session on the 4th of March. The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Indian bill, and after disposing of half of it, adjourned.

JAN. 26.—SENATE.—The House bill authorising the sale of a portion of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation to the Kansas Agricultural and Mechanical Association for a fair ground was passed. Cameron called up the House bill to reimburse Robert Bringham, late Postmaster at Franklin, Pa., for the loss, by the failure of the Venango National Bank at Franklin, of $2,600 public funds, deposited there by that postoffice. Defeated. Chandler, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill making a temporary loan of $100,000 for the prosecution of the work on the Sault Ste. Marie canal and river. Passed. The Senate then took up and passed the Pension Appropriation bill, which now goes to the President. The Senate resumed consideration of the bill repealing the income tax of Dec. 31, 1869. The debate occupied several hours, and the bill was finally passed—yeas, 26; nays, 25—as follows: Yeas—Anthony, Bayard, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Casserly, Cole, Conkling, Corbett, Fenton, Flanigan, Fowler, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, McDonald, Osborn, Pomeroy, Rice, Scott, Stewart, Stockton, Sumner, Thurman, Trumbull, Vickers, and Yates—26. Nays—Abbott, Blair, Boreman, Brown, Cragin, Hamlin, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Howell, Johnston, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sawyer, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stearns, Tipton, Warner, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—25. The Senate, at 4:30, adjourned.

HOUSE.—Loughridge introduced a bill allowing an additional representation of forty-three in Congress, as follows: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Texas, Wisconsin, Kansas, Missouri, and Michigan, two each; Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, California, and Minnesota, one each; and Illinois, four—such additional members to be elected by general tickets. Referred. Arnell reported a bill for the better security of Agricultural College funds, requiring the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amount of agricultural land scrip issued to each State, and the disposition made thereof, and to make a report thereon to Congress at the commencement of each regular session, and forbidding any change in the investment of funds to be made, without the approval of the Secretary of Interior. After an explanation by Arnell, the bill passed. The death of Senator Norton, of Minnesota, was announced, and eulogies were pronounced on his life and character by Wilson, of Minnesota, and Wilkinson and Morgan, after which the House adjourned.

JAN. 27.—SENATE.—Scott presented twenty remonstrances from 1,400 citizens of Western Pennsylvania against the interference with the navigation of the Ohio river by the construction of the Newport and Cincinnati bridge. Referred. Hamlin introduced a joint resolution appointing Gen. Sherman Regent of the Smithsonian Institute, vice Gen. Delafield, resigned. Adopted. Trumbull's bill looking to civil service reform came up as unfinished business. Schurz reviewed the whole question, and offered as a substitute the bill introduced by him at the last session, for the radical reform of the civil service by a system of competitive examination. After a short Executive session, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—Maynard, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a joint resolution to relieve J. L. Thomas, Collector of Customs at Baltimore, from responsibility for the sum of $27,000, stolen by two Deputy Collectors. Recommitted. Hooper, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, offered the following: "Resolved, That the Senate bill to repeal so much of the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to repeal internal taxes, and for other purposes,' as continues the income tax after the 31st day of December, 1869, be returned to that body, with the respectful suggestion on the part of the House that section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution vests in the House of Representatives the sole power to originate such measures." The House refused to order the yeas and nays on the resolution, and it was adopted without division. Adjourned.

The Income Tax.

Representative Hooper, on the 26th, presented a communication from Commissioner Pleasanton relative to the income tax, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. In the communication the Commissioner says: "I regard the tax as the one above all others most obnoxious to the people, being inquisitorial in its nature, and dragging into public view an exposition of the most private pecuniary affairs of citizens. Such unwilling exposition can only be compulsorily effected through the maintenance of the most expensive machinery, and the means necessarily employed in its enforcement appear to be regarded by the better class of citizens with more and more disfavor from year to year. It is furthermore most difficult to exact a statement, especially of large business ramifications and where long periods of time are involved in extending commercial affairs. There is some question as to its constitutionality, but as to that I express no opinion. The amount derived from this source has, under legislation already had, been greatly diminished, and I am so well satisfied that the evils more than counterbalance the benefits to be derived from its longer retention, that I recommend its unconditional repeal." In a later communication from the Commissioner, he estimated the loss to the revenue from the increase from $1,000 to $2,000 at $9,338,161, which would leave but $16,739,539 as the revenue under the five per cent. rate, and but $8,369,794 as the aggregate revenue that would be derived under the two and a half per cent. rate. The tax on dividends and the addition to the surplus funds of the banks, railroad companies, &c., under the reduced rate, he estimates at $3,385,543, which, added to $8,369,794, would give in round numbers $12,755,000 as the approximate receipts from the income tax under the act of the 14th of July, 1870, based on the average returns of the last four years. He expresses the opinion, however, that in consequence of the general prostration of business, the gradual appreciation of paper currency, and from other causes, the actual receipts for the coming year would fall considerably short of that estimate, and he renews the recommendation for the entire abolition of the income tax.

DISPENSING WITH SURFACE PLOWING.—A correspondent of the Oshkosh (Wis.) Northwestern says he bought a field which had been plowed for twenty consecutive years, with a soil only four or five inches deep. He applied a subsoil plow, running it fourteen inches deep, then run it the other way, and then harrowed it twice, with an interval of a few days, and had his ground broken up without the aid of the ordinary plow. At one time he marked ground for corn by running a subsoil plow fourteen inches deep, both ways at proper distance, and planting at the crossings. He had a good crop notwithstanding a severe drouth.

WASHING BUTTER.—Our best butter-makers hereabout do not agree with the idea advanced by one of your prominent correspondents, viz.: that butter should never be washed in water. On the contrary, they contend that it should be washed in pure cold water, and every particle of buttermilk washed out, if such a thing is possible. They say the buttermilk cannot be worked out without water, but the butter will be injured in texture, or be left soft and "flabby." Cold water is also indispensable in very warm weather, where the cream is apt to be a little above above 55 degrees. We believe in water yet.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Our Invisible Enemies.

The raw, astringent atmosphere of winter creates and aggravates many ailments. To protect themselves as effectually as possible against the invisible dangers which surround them at this season should be the especial care of persons constitutionally delicate. As there is no medicinal preparation in use which so thoroughly braces and invigorates the stomach, the liver, and the nerves, as Hostetter's Bitters, a course of that agreeable tonic is particularly advisable for dyspeptic, bilious and nervous sufferers, in the cold, damp and trying weather which generally prevails in our climate at this period of the year. Sudden chills have a very bad effect upon dyspeptics and individuals of bilious habits, not unfrequently producing congestion of the liver or bowels, or low fevers, sometimes of an intermittent or remittent character. Attacks of rheumatism are also to be apprehended, and when there is a tendency to that complaint, the Bitters will be found the best preventive. The operation of the great vegetable tonic is direct and simple. It stimulates and strengthens the digestive and secretive organs and the nerves, and puts the system in a condition to resist the action of those formidable foes of vitality, a low temperature and unwholesome winds and fogs. By quickening the superficial circulation, without creating anything approaching to fever, it imparts tone to the skin, and thus renders the surface of the body comparatively impervious to unhealthy external influences.

TO PHYSICIANS:

NEW YORK, August 15, 1868.

Allow me to call your attention to my PREPARATION OF COMPOUND EXTRACT BUCHU. The component parts are BUCHU, LONG LEAF, CUBEBS, JUNIPER BERRIES.

MODE OF PREPARATION.—Buchu, in vacuo Juniper Berries, by distillation, to form a fine gin. Cubebs extracted by displacement with spirits obtained from Juniper Berries; very little sugar is used, and a small proportion of spirit. It is more palatable than any now in use.

Buchu as prepared by druggists is of a dark color. It is a plant that emits its fragrance; the action of a flame destroys this (its active principle), leaving a dark and glutinous decoction. Mine is the color of ingredients. The Buchu in my preparation predominates the smallest quantity of the other ingredients are added to prevent fermentation; upon inspection it will be found not to be a Tincture as made in Pharmacopœa, nor is it a Syrup—and therefore can be used in cases where fever or inflammation exists. In this you have the knowledge of the ingredients and the mode of preparation.

Hoping that you will favor it with a trial and that upon inspection it will meet with your approbation,

Cling to Those Who Cling to You.

There are many friends of summer,
 Who are kind while flowers bloom;
But when the winter chills the blossoms,
 They depart with the perfume.
On the broad highway of action,
 Friends of worth are far and few;
So when one has proved the friendship
 Cling to him who clings to you.

Do not harshly judge your neighbor,
 Do not deem his life untrue,
If he make no great pretensions—
 Deeds are great, but words are few.
Those who stand amidst the tempest,
 Firm as when the skies are blue,
Will be friends while life endureth—
 Cling to those who cling to you.

When you see a worthy brother
 Buffeting the stormy main,
Lend a helping hand fraternal,
 Till he reach the shore again.
Don't desert the old and true friend
 When misfortune come in view,
For he needs friendship's comforts—
 Cling to those who cling to you.

MY FRIEND LEWIS.

From London Society.

I never liked Lewis—never. We were boys together. Our good mothers were delighted to see us playing marbles together; but he could always knuckle down better than I could. We played at turnpike-gate with our hoops; and somehow he always trundled his between the pebbles which constituted, to our young imaginations, the pike, man in apron, toll-bar, and all—while I scattered them and lost the game. When we first came together we were both schoolboys on the same form. His lessons were my lessons, day after day; but then, if there was an advantage in the progress, it was generally on my side. Somehow he got all the credit.

Lewis was born under extraordinary circumstances. His family were a wild, ambitious, and, I have often heard my mother say, an unscrupulous set. At the period of his birth they were in the height of their splendor. It was impossible to reproach them in those days. They had the biggest house in their neighborhood by far. Their horses and stables were the envy of everybody. They gave parties that blocked up the place with the equipages of the guests. The greatest people in the land went to see them; and even people of distinction from abroad, on arriving in the country, would take the earliest opportunity of paying their respects to the Lewises. Mr. Lewis himself was a gloomy, morose, unpopular man; but his wife, when she was young, was one of the loveliest women, as my father often declared, to my mother's mortification, upon whom the sun ever shone. It seems that she was as brilliant in mind and as courageous in spirit as she was in person lovely. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis were called, among the local tradesmen, the beauty and the beast. While he never had a gracious word or look, she was always wreathed in smiles. She had a kind word and a ready hand for the poor. If she disliked her lord, she loved her children, and they were always with her in the carriage. Two boys that were the envy of all other boys who saw them; who wore the loveliest feathers in their hats; trundled hoops with padded sticks; played with marbles every one of which was an agate; and spun tops of satinwood with silken cords, were the idols of their beautiful parent, and were very seldom permitted to range beyond her sight. There was an uncle in the family—who had married, I believe, the mother of Mrs. Lewis, after her father's death, and whom Mrs. Lewis loved as well as the most devoted daughter can adore the most indulgent parent. He was her mentor, her guide in all things. His word was her law; and she was never tired of telling her friends about his wisdom and the great position he held in the world. Gossips said that the only fact which made the married life of Mrs. Lewis bearable was that her husband was related closely to her step-father.

It was very natural in Mrs. Lewis to make much of her step-father. He was the personage to whom she looked for the advancement of her darling boys in life. His influence appeared to be boundless—and he knew it, as my mother, who often saw him frowning out of his chariot window on his way to see his beautiful step-daughter, would tell me in after years.

The elder boy was sickly, and was kept at home; but the second was sent to school; and, as I have said, it was at school I first met him.

The new boy made a sensation. It was whispered along the forms that his name was Lewis, and that he had come in a barouche, with a servant in livery to carry his books. We crowded round him in the playground, and found that his pockets were full of money; that he had a knife with one blade more than the cock of the school; and that a most imposing coat of arms was engraved on the heaviest of silver spoons and forks, which were brought for his use at table. The master fawned on him, and gave him easy lessons, and put him at the desk nearest to the stove. We hated him for this—boys are only little men.

Out of school, Lewis, I must say, gave himself no airs. His plentiful pocket-money was lavishly scattered when the apple-woman came into the playground. He would buy a shilling's worth of Bonaparte's ribs, and give every boy in the school one. He would propose a scramble for apples, or a whole quart of Spanish nuts. I have known him come with half a dozen cocoa-nuts, and give one each to the fellows who played at horses with him. Playing at horses was his passion. A boy must be a great favorite, or be able to dispense favors, who wants to drive a team in the playground. Lewis was amiable enough, we thought, then, and was ready to give everything he had—provided we would be his nags. We made him pay—and he drove us. He was a ready fellow with his fists, I admit. He would give—but would have no takings. I got on very well with him, and was often his off-sider, because I made my bargains openly, and he liked that. I carried off heaps of things, till my mother at home was quite alarmed. "Where did you get that splendid top, Bob?" said mother. "Lewis," was my answer. "That kite must have cost five shillings, Bob." "Lewis," I replied. "Your father's knife is not worth that," my maternal parent observed. "Lewis," was my response. But I never liked him.

We played truant together and he got me off the punishment, and the school cheered him in the playground for it. I thought they made much of it—but I must say Lewis himself didn't; and he behaved well in asking me home to his mother's great house to dine and spend a Saturday afternoon with him. Mrs. Lewis's step-father was there, and everything gave way to him. He pinched my ear playfully, and tipped me when I went off to school in the evening—loaded with fruit and cakes for the boys of our form, which Mrs. Lewis packed up with her own white hands, while her step-father stood by looking at her, and joking very affably for so great a man.

When the holidays came—being an orphan, and my guardians being resident in Florence—Lewis persuaded his mother to invite me for a fortnight or so to their country house. It was here I saw the Lewises and their mighty friends in all their glory. The house was an ancient one, which her step-father had given to Mrs. Lewis as a marriage present, and which he helped her to beautify, superintending the cultivation of the fruits and flowers, the felling of the timber, the planting out of the shrubberies, and the repairs and adornments of the house himself. They were a picture together—when he was shuffling about in his grey dressing-gown, and she was in her white morning-robe, with her abundant hair floating about her—so long that she could throw it round Lewis, and almost smother him with it—which made him look very foolish, I thought. She petted Lewis in the most ridiculous style, and made him dress like a page in a burlesque. To me she was almost as affectionate as to her own son; and when I told her how I was left an orphan in my fourth year, and how I had no relation in the world, a big, hot tear from her brimmed eyes fell upon my hand, which she was holding while she was talking to me. She said I must let her be a mother to me; and she called up Lewis and told him, in her serious, impetuous way, that he was to look upon me as a brother, and be always kind to me.

Mrs. Lewis was an indulgent mother; but she was strict too, as her step-father directed her to be, and his word was, to her, law in everything. Lewis went to bed at nine, and so did I while I was at the castle. We begged half an hour's grace sometimes; but she would never yield—even when she was in the middle of a song. She sang divinely, and Lewis loved to hear his mother. Sometimes he would keep me awake for a whole hour after we were in bed, listening to Mrs. Lewis's voice in the drawing-room. I was obliged to keep awake, being his guest; but this shows how inconsiderate he could be.

He had begged Mrs. Lewis to allow him to give me one of his Shetland ponies on my birthday; and he had surprised me with it, with bran new saddle and bridle—which was very good, I am quite free to own; but he might have remembered that I liked fishing much better than riding, and that I should have been more pleased with a handsome rod and tackle.

One day Mrs. Lewis' step-father seeing me on the terrace alone called me to him, and began to question me on the life that my guardian had projected for me. When I told him that I had not heard from them for a year, and that I had not the least idea of their intentions in regard to me, he pulled my ear, and muttered, "Poor lad! poor lad!—this is the way the world is managed." And so the subject dropped, and Lewis and I, at the end of the holidays, returned to school.

Misfortunes overtook me when I was on the point of entering at the Middle Temple. My guardians died, and to my horror and amazement I was informed that their affairs were involved, to my utter ruin. They had speculated with my money, and out of a good fortune which my parents had left me I had something less than three hundred pounds left. I communicated my distress to Lewis; and he sympathized with me. He would have been a stone had he done less, seeing how intimate we had been from our early boyhood. Mrs. Lewis had been for some time in bad health. Her great step-father had died overwhelmed with ruin in a great lawsuit; and she had the castle no longer; and young Lewis could only keep one horse now, and was obliged to give himself fewer airs. The wreck was more than respectable; but it was a wreck. I was among those who did not desert them, and did not disdain to ride in the modest brougham to which poor Mrs. Lewis was reduced, and with but one man servant to wait at table. Lewis never forgot my birth-day; and Mrs. Lewis was good enough to insist, when she heard of my misfortunes, that I should let her pay my Temple fees, and that I should accept a couple of rooms in her house, to be with Lewis. She saw, I expect, that I exercised a very salutary influence over him. How could I look churlish and refuse—especially when Lewis joined his entreaties to those of his mother? It wanted no little moral courage, however, to keep with the Lewises, although they loaded me with attentions, because people talked about them in the neighborhood; and the tradesmen sneered and jeered when the plain little brougham rolled past their doors, or I and Lewis walked home to dinner. I had no other home, however, and hardly a farthing in my pocket. As I have said, I was without a relation in the world. But I do take a little credit to myself for my pluck in holding to the wreck; for—I can make no secret of it—I never liked Lewis.

Mrs. Lewis paid all my expenses while she lived, just as she paid those of her own child. I could hardly see anything in which she made a difference between us; and when there was any slight advantage in Lewis' share he made it up to me, for I was shrewd enough to see that he could not do without me. He was full of dreams. He was forever talking about his uncle and the grand days, and whether he could not redeem the fortunes of the family. I laughed at him, I confess, and advised him, with the small fortune that remained, to put himself in some good business in the city. He shrugged his shoulders, and would not hear of it, but went dreaming on; and I believe his mother encouraged him. He pinched himself to employ lawyers, who were to reopen the old horrible law suit, and win back the tens of thousands of pounds and the old castle. We were to walk on the old terrace once more, and smoke our cigars again in the familiar old vineries. It was sad to see the infatuation which possessed Lewis like his blood, not to say the vanity. He was not unmindful of me, I must say, in all his dreams. I was to have my share of the glory—when he got it. The cause came again and again before the courts. I had been called to the bar meantime, and Lewis had insisted that I should be employed, and that my brief should be handsomely marked. It was business to me, and any business to a young barrister is welcome. So I appeared. It was really an effort of friendship on my part; for the bar was laughing outright at young Lewis, as a fool who was throwing good money after bad. There was no hope for him. The judges tittered when I rose; the public smiled when Lewis took his seat among the attorneys. When we failed, my Temple friends would come round me and ask, "Well, has Young Infatuation had enough of it now?"

Lewis' brother died when he was about 19; and Mrs. Lewis followed soon after. I thought Lewis would have gone mad. He was certainly an affectionate son; but who would not have been affectionate with such a mother? Had it not been for his precious lawsuit he would have followed Mrs. Lewis in a month or two; but, as the difficulties increased, and the chances became less and less, he only grew firmer in his resolve—to spend his last farthing and the last hour of his life in the fight. He spared me all I asked from him—which was not much; and he contrived that we should continue to live together, so that I might carry on my profession. I intended, you may be sure, to refund him to the utmost penny some day; but who can tell what the morrow may bring forth. I don't think he expected to be paid. He never said so—and there were times, I known, when I had money and he had none. Nay, there were two or three occasions on which he was locked up. He actually carried on his plans in the sponging-house, and when he was let out walked straight away to his lawyers. He would meet me with that strange, sad smile on his face, and his first question would be, How was I getting on? Did I want anything? In a few months all troubles would be over, and we should be in clover. For I must do him the justice—one leaf of every trefoil he might gather was to be for your humble servant. Yet I never liked him.

To tell how, on a sudden, fortune came upon us would be to make a long story. The tenacity of Lewis' character carried him through. He looked sickly; but in the weak, weak casket was the mother's heart. He had the art of waiting. When he was in Cursitor street one day overtures were made to him by the acceptance of which he would have secured to himself a handsome income for life. But he disclaimed it, and went quietly up to bed, on a November night, in the shabby sponging-house, with the observation that he was in no hurry. So that when an extraordinary turn in the lawsuit took every lawyer by surprise, and the legal world stood aghast, amazed, dumbfounded at a decision that put him in possession of the entire wealth of that remarkable uncle of his who used to pinch my ears, he alone was cool. I can see him now, fastening the elastic band about his umbrella as he walked out of the court, as calm as the cabman whom he hailed. On the morrow morning, when he had read the report of the case in the papers, he turned to me, and said, "I was right, my friend; you see that I was right. And now tell me which are the rooms in the castle you would prefer? Drop in at Coutt's and see the liberty I have ventured to take with your balance. Tell me if you like your brougham; it is at the door. Now see whether you cannot become Lord Chancellor."

In sober truth, my brougham was at the door; my account was a princely one; and I had the pick of the castle apartments. The scene was a glorious one when the sun of Lewis' fortunes was in its noontide splendor. The beautiful, the brilliant, the gifted, the illustrious, crowded to his halls, thronged his drawing-rooms, peopled his park, and tasted of all the sweets of his refined and liberal hospitality. He alone remained calm and easy, I might say unconcerned. Misfortune had hit him hard, and had not stirred a muscle of his face; fortune was now his generous friend, and she could barely extort a smile from him. I was, I think, more grateful. I blessed and thanked—the Fates. For, while any care as to my living was removed far away from me, I neglected no opportunity of promoting my own advancement in my own way. I worked at my profession, and Lewis was able to introduce me to first rate business. I had at times more than I could well manage. When I was at the castle I would retire from the scene of the festivities to my own apartment, and there turn out my brief bag upon the table, and read into the small hours. Very few men, I flatter myself, would have done that, with the advantages that I had within my reach. But I was determined not to be dependent on Lewis. I was resolved to draw the line somehow; for, as I think I have remarked before, I never really liked him.

I grew rich—I do not deny it; and it was Lewis' money that enabled me to make a figure in the world, which is half the battle in the profession. But he wanted me; I was necessary to him; and therefore it was himself that he was open-handed with me. I am not the first orphan who has been adopted; nor the first school chum who has been befriended in after life; nor the first man who has owed his stepping stones to fortune, to accident. I don't see why I should be pestered about it, as though there were something so very extraordinary in the case. I made my acknowledgments once for all; and I fail to see why I should be perpetually uttering thanks. It has been said that gratitude is a lively sense of favors to come: I am sure that I expected nothing more from Lewis. The brougham in which I ride was his—granted; my house was part of his estate—granted. The case in which I pocketed nearly three thousand pounds was of his introduction—have I ever denied it? My wife's brilliants were a present made to her by Lewis when we were married. Does not this happen every day in the week? Am I bound to like a man because he finds pleasure in my society and profit in my advice? Let me tell my story in my own way to the end. We were at the castle. My wife and children had been staying there for months, and I had been in the habit of running down in the intervals of my arduous professional duties. Lewis had stood godfather to our eldest boy, and had settled a sum of money on the engaging young fellow, that insured him a good position in life; so that we felt bound to humor the godfather's desire to have the boy as much with him as possible. Lewis was very fond of children; and they, I am bound to add, were very fond of him.

Well, on a certain autumn morning—the first on which a fire had been deemed necessary in the breakfast room—Lewis asked me to give him half an hour in the library. I had business of my own in hand; but I was always a good-natured fellow, I believe, and I followed my old schoolfellow. He began quietly, as when he put the band around his umbrella when we had gained his cause—"The vicissitudes of my life are not ended yet. My dear old schoolfellow, learn that once again I haven't a penny in the world."

At this point I begged him to excuse me for a moment; and I ran to my wife's boudoir and told her to have everything ready for the mid-day train. Above all, she was not to forget her diamonds. She was the most obedient of consorts, and I will do her the justice to say that she did not forget a thing—even to the baby's socks. I returned to the library, and taking Lewis by the hand, expressed my regret. He continued—

"Not a penny in the world! I am beggared, my dear friend, by the men whom I have helped to affluence. My own people have turned upon me. My own stewards have destroyed me. The people and places I found poor and bare, and that are now thriving, are the centres of the infamy that has stripped me. You heard one of my bailiffs this morning give me notice. This rascal is rat number twenty, and carries off a handsome competence with him. But some are not at the trouble of masking their ingratitude. There is no creature on two legs, nor upon four, half so ungrateful as a bad servant whom you have petted, and can pet no longer. See that fellow crossing the park with a loaded cart. He came to me shirtless: rat number twenty-one."

"But how has this come to pass, my dear Lewis?" I asked; "is it altogether irremediable?"

"It has come to pass as I have told you. Every man on whose honor I have relied has betrayed me. My model cottagers, I am told, laugh at me for a fool. I have trebled the trade in my county town, and the townsfolk haven't a good word for me, although they had plenty yesterday. The local paper has turned about its readers. Last week I was munificent; but in to-day's copy I am a fool: in the next edition I shall be a rogue. I should advise you to clear the sinking ship while there's a boat—that is a coach—at hand."

"Leave you, Lewis, at such a moment!" I exclaimed; for I was hurt at his suggestion, which was not a very delicate one under the circumstances. "Leave you now! I would not think of such a thing; nor should anything less than the case—the tremendous case—of Thunder vs. Butter, drag me from your side to-morrow."

A smile passed over the placid face of Lewis while I spoke. It was a smile I had seen before, and at which a less amiable man than I, can say without vanity, I am, might have taken offense. "You leave to-morrow, then?" Lewis asked.

"I must."

"Well, we shall tide over the week, I dare say; but there will be elbow-room in the castle before then, I can see."

I did not like Lewis' style. Of course I made every allowance for him under the circumstances; and when I had seen my wife to the station with the children, the maids, the jewel and dressing cases, and my dispatch box in which my deeds were safely under lock and key, I made a second attempt to be kind and sympathetic. I asked whether there was anything I could do for him in London.

"Yes," he said, raising his cold blue eyes, and cutting his words with his glittering teeth. "Yes—remain in it!"

This was too much; and I left him. Now all my impressions as to his character were confirmed; and I could understand thoroughly why I never liked him.

At the railway station—for I left that very evening—I found more than half the castle servants. The station master was compelled to put on three or four extra luggage vans; and I kept the train quite five minutes, getting my boy's pony (Lewis' last present) into a horse box.

When I reached town I heard more than I care to relate about the immense ruin in which Lewis had involved himself. He had trusted vast sums of money to friends and relatives, right and left; he had listened to any kind of got-up tale of distress; he had been imposed upon in fifty directions. A splendid man of business; a powerful, clear-headed administrator—he had doubled the value of the enormous property which came to him, after so many years of battling and of poverty, from his uncle. But, you see, he ruined all by putting faith in men who were not trustworthy; and I am told that when he left the castle there was not a man left there to carry his carpet-bag to the railway.

I cannot help feeling a kind of warmth towards the man when my wife comes like a queen into her drawing-room, covered with the marriage parure of diamonds; but my conscience is at ease—is as quiet as a babe asleep—for, as I am sure I must have remarked twenty times, even at the height of his prosperity, I never liked Lewis—Never!

The Home of Walter Scott.

The interior of Abbotsford is an interesting but a mournful sight; and most mournful of all, says a contributor to All the Year Round, is the study of Scott, where his teeming brain, his gentle heart and his industrious hand produced his best novels; the laboratory of the literary alchemist, where he turned inferior metal into gold; the sanctum of a genius that was as copious as it was beneficent. Here is the cosy arm-chair in which he sat, here are the books of reference which he consulted, the pictures on the wall on which his eyes were accustomed to dwell, and more mournful than all, because to some extent painful (at least they were so to me), the clothes and the hat that he usually wore, still as fresh as in the time—fifty years ago, or nearly—when his literary work done for the day, he received his friends at luncheon, or roamed through the comparative wilderness, which it was his dearest wish to convert into an earthly paradise.

I desired to sit in the great novelist's chair; but the attendant who showed the rooms, a buxom and well-behaved Scottish lass, politely but very firmly refused, on the ground that she had been expressly forbidden to grant the privilege to anybody. "The chair," she said, "would soon be worn out, if every one who came in here was allowed to sit in it." I respected her orders, but I sat in the chair nevertheless, not simply with the consent and approval, but at the request of the owner of Abbotsford, and the present representative of Sir Walter. Our party enjoyed, moreover, the additional privilege of inspecting many interesting and valuable relics of the departed, which are kept carefully under lock and key, and are not shown to the mass of tourists.

THE argument that the destruction of the forests of a country usually results in an increase of temperature is evidenced by the fact that when in 1816 the forest tracts of Pennsylvania bordered close upon the city of Philadelphia, the Delaware river, a mile wide, was often frozen in a single night. The forests having now receded to a distance of over thirty miles, the thermometer at Philadelphia is rarely down to zero, the river is hardly ever frozen, and the snow lies on the ground but a short time.

How Alsace and Lorraine Wear the German Yoke.

Metz Correspondence New York World.

For the last three weeks sickness has kept me glued to my bed, and prevented me from giving you news of our saddened department. We are at present sheltered from the most awful calamities of the war, but we feel almost ashamed of our inactivity, whilst the columns of the enemy are pressing on into the very heart of France. To be just, I am bound to say that the Prussian occupation of our town is not rigorous, and that the Germans act towards our population with consideration, they being under the personal supervision of our Prefect, M. le Comte Eruthal Donuersmarck, and in part, perhaps, of the Government of Berlin, who wishes, no doubt, to preserve intact for Germany its conquests of Strasbourg and Metz. They would not naturally ruin a population that they hope to call their own. But withal, the consideration of the Prussian garrison towards our city does not lessen the marked coldness with which they have been received since the first day of the occupation. Only yesterday, two Prussian officers, who had perhaps dined too well, turned two respectable citizens out of a restaurant, under I don't know what pretext. On Sunday—Christmas day—the Convent de la Visitation was invaded by fifty Prussian soldiers, who drove out all the devotees assembled in the chapel, where the public had access. The cause of this incident was, that some children conceived the unlucky idea of firing some crackers, and of making them burst near a small Prussian detachment which was coming up the street. The soldiers pursued the children into the convent, where they had taken refuge. In their stupidity, the Prussians had doubtless taken for an attempted aggression what was only a blamable gaminerie. One thing is certain, and that is, that time, so far from bringing resignation to our population, only strengthens the desire which they feel to repel the foreigner. In spite of the great, very great obstacles, numbers of the young men of Lorraine leave the towns and villages clandestinely, and go to join the Army of the North or the Army of the Loire. Young men in business—even married men—brave the severity of the temperature and the Prussian orders, in order to cross the occupied territory and pay their debt to their country. To say the truth, at the commencement of the war I certainly never expected to see such an explosion of patriotism, and such brave and splendid examples of devotion. I see plainly that France was only rotten on the surface by her twenty years of corrupt government. She is throwing off that surface, and will appear, underneath, still solid, honest, and worthy of her glorious past. Misfortunes, the divine test, will cease, she will retrieve her lost honor, and arise a nation rendered wiser and stronger by the ordeal. Even under the Prussian yoke this transformation is taking place. The Government of the National Defense is in no want of stout arms; what mostly fails is military instruction, complements of efficient officers, and, above all, equipments. A person of my acquaintance, lately returned from the banks of the Loire, says he saw 400,000 men, some of them well armed and well provided with excellent artillery, but many armed very poorly, whilst 207,000 other recruits were still awaiting ammunition and guns. The fact of the resistance opposed by the Army of the Loire to numerous troops accustomed to war, as are all the German phalanxes, having been successful, is a good sign of vitality and renovation. The question of Luxembourg neutrality is watched here with grave interest. France, and Metz in particular, owe much to the brotherly assistance of Luxembourg, and it would be bitter trouble for us if their kind friends had to pay for its devotion to its neighbor with its nationality. Truly, Luxembourg did much for the French wounded, and also, I must say for our prisoners, many of whom owe to her their liberty and the happiness of being able once more to fight for France. Nevertheless, the Grand Ducal Government is by no means responsible for such acts of sympathy, which Prussia transforms into breaches of neutrality. Individuals committed these transgressions, the generous citizens of the Grand Duchy serving as guides to French officers and soldiers, and as soon as a band of fugitives arrived in Luxembourg they found all kinds of sympathy and assistance. I can understand that this was far from pleasing to Prussia, and it is certain that it was prejudicial to her; but the Grand Ducal Government was a stranger to all these acts, and, if it had wished, could not have prevented them. Luxembourg has always had French tendencies, and at this moment, if she were consulted, would give ninety votes out of a hundred for a reunion with France, even conquered, even fallen as she is.

German Spoliations in France.

The Havre correspondent of the London Times says:

Upon this district the army has descended like a flight of locusts. The officers and men live everywhere at free quarters, demanding and seizing the best of everything, taking meat, bread, wine, cigars, fuel and forage, using them with a profusion that is shocking to the frugal habits of the people, and neither giving receipts for them nor paying a single sou, either in coin or in promises. At two inns that we visited, both kept by widows, all the better sort of wine had been thus consumed. For the systems of requisitions or for the imposition of burdens upon a community, there is, perhaps, much to be said; but to plunder poor, helpless women, is a course that will hardly recommend itself to civilized people. As to the treatment of women I heard no complaints, although I made inquiry at every place, and I met only one old man who had been beaten and insulted. His house was occupied by Prussians, whose officer had locked himself into the best bedroom and had gone to sleep. Others came late at night, and hustled and ill-treated the poor old man because he could not make them understand why the door of the bedroom was fastened against their entrance. At houses kept by Havre merchants as shooting boxes, and left commonly in charge of gamekeepers, these gamekeepers have had pistols held at their heads and been threatened with instant death in order to force them to show their masters' stock of wine, which, when shown, has been all consumed or carried away, and the empty bottles broken. At one such house, the property of an Englishman, it is said by the keeper that a single soldier drank three bottles of champagne at a sitting. Breaking bottles has certainly been a favorite pastime, for the fragments are plentifully strewn along the roadside, and mark the track of the hostile occupation.

The Prussians and the British Ships.

The London Standard correspondent says:

The Prussians, in utter defiance of international law, in utter contempt of the British flag, have seized on and sunk no less than six English vessels in the Seine, between Duclair and La Mailleraye. These vessels, as I am informed, were brigantines and schooners. Five of them (as I am informed) the Sylph, the Juno, the Paragon, the Jane Kendal, and the ——— Macleren, had loaded cargoes of coal at Rouen, and had applied for a sauf conduit to return. This was neither granted them nor refused them, and at length, tired of waiting, the five vessels, in ballast, took advantage of the easterly wind and dropped down the river. No opposition was offered to their departure, and it was only when they reached Duclair that, as I am assured, by orders of Gen. Von Goeben, they were fired into and made to bring up. The crews were ordered off, and many of them without being allowed to take their clothes or money, and the Prussians, having boarded the ships, though they were fully aware of their nationality, proceeded to scuttle and sink them across the river, so as to block up the passage. Another vessel, whose name I have not been able to ascertain, was neither in cargo nor in ballast; she was scuttled too, but the strong tide that prevails in the Seine keeps her knocking about up and down the river. The Prussians added insult to injury; they put fancy prices on the British vessels thus destroyed, and paid the skippers their (assumed) value by means of "requisition bonds." The masters and their crews went back to Rouen, where they laid their complaint before the British Vice-Consul, and have, I understand, been sent home via Dieppe. The Vice-Consul at Rouen has sent a report to the Consul-General here, but when I called on him this afternoon he had not yet had time to read the report, and to my request for precise information, replied that he must first communicate with the Foreign Office. The French authorities, however, with a courtesy to which I am happy to be able to pay a public tribute, exerted themselves to facilitate my investigations, and on their information, and that picked up at ship-broker's offices and from river pilots, the above narrative is founded.

A telegram in the Manchester Guardian says that while the Prussians were firing upon three of the ships, a mate of one of them narrowly escaped being killed.

In the Wrong Theater.

From the Cincinnati Times.

A young man from the country, to whom a friend in this city had given a ticket to Woo's Theater, made a mistake in the place of the Young Men's Christian Association, on Vine, above Fifth, where evening exercises were to be held. Handing his ticket to a man who happened to be standing at the head of the stairs (greatly to the latter's amusement), the young man took a seat among the audience. He was not familiar with theaters, and had never been inside of Wood's, but the hall he was in did not coincide at all with the idea of what a temple of the drama should be. There was very little stage, and no scenery to speak of. While he was wondering over this, the assembly began singing a hymn, which increased his astonishment. He had never heard of theatrical entertainments being opened with music of that kind.

Turning to a man sitting by his side, he inquired, pointing to a group of ladies who were singing, "Which of them is the Chapman Sisters?"

The man only stared at him in silence. Then this sweet youth asked another man in front of him, "Is Bishop goin' to play to-night?"

"Bishop who?" was the reply; "no Bishop here."

A sudden suspicion flashed through the brain of the young man. "Ain't this Wood's Theater?" he inquired.

"What do you mean, young man?" was the stern reply. "Are you a fool? This is the assembly room of the Young Men's Christian Association."

The young man from the country was next seen hunting for the man he had given his ticket to, but he didn't succeed. The ticket-taker, with a commendable desire to shield a young man from the contaminations of the theater, had probably taken the ticket—and gone himself.

The Last Journey.

In Spain, when a baptized infant dies, a feast is spread, and all the neighbors round come, not to condole with, but to congratulate the parents. "We rejoice with you that you have a child in glory," they say; and the last—nay, the first journey of the sinless babe is a triumphant march, the funeral a festival, the music is glad. Only the mother weeps. In Greece, the last journey follows quickly upon death. The next day at dawn, the train of white-robed priests and choristers may be seen winding along the road toward the church. There, dressed as in life, and having the face uncovered, the dead lie at rest before the altar until the moment arrives when they must be committed to the earth. It is in the church that the last farewell is given. What of that terrible last journey in the cold North, where the dying Esquimaux is built up in his snow-house and left to die alone? Or of the African tribe who bury their hopelessly sick before death—hurry them out of the world altogether. They have been described as taking an affectionate leave of their relatives and performing this burying with the consent of the person chiefly concerned. Habit is everything, and they are used to it, only one fancies it must fall rather hard upon each individual as it comes to its own turn.—Once a Week.

AN amusing story is told by a sailor who, in a recent combat, had the luck to capture a Prussian subaltern. On the road to Paris the latter asked his captor, who had been chafing him unmercifully on the length of time the Prussians took to reduce the city, "How do you fare in your capital?" "How do we fare?—why, first rate," was the reply. "Then your oxen are not yet exhausted, as we imagined they were?" "Oxen! oh, they have been eaten long since." "You have large flocks of sheep, then?" "No, indeed, they disappeared simultaneously with the bullocks." "Ah! I understand; you have still horses to fall back on? I wish we had; we devoured them long since." "What the devil do you eat, then?" was the astonished inquiry. "What do we eat?" replied the sailor, with the greatest gravity in the world; "have you not heard in your camp?" "No." "Why, we eat our prisoners, of course, and find them delicious." The young Prussian turned pale at the thought, and did not venture another remark till his arrival at his destination.

Points of Science.

SCIENTIFIC education has found its way even to Constantinople, and lectures on natural philosophy are now being delivered in the Turkish language.

PROF. FISHER has been removed from the chair of chemistry in the California State University because he declined to assay some ores gratuitously for one of the trustees.

THE longitude of Moro Lights, Havana, Cuba, as given in the latest edition of the British Admiralty list of lights in the West Idies, is nearly a mile in error. So Professor Harkness, of the United States Navy, has ascertained.

WHEN the leaden rifle bullets are fired against iron targets, the lead is melted and spattered upon the target in the form of a star. This fact is stated as the result of careful experiments recently made at Basle, in Switzerland.

A BEAUTIFUL spider from Greece, which feeds on grasshopper, was exhibited at a meeting of the London Entomological Society, on the 5th of December. He was alive and well, although he remained without food since last July.

THE French Academy of Sciences has held its sittings regularly since the commencement of the siege of Paris, and its journal has been regularly published. It has been largely devoted to discussions of military science and balloon travel.

BOOKS which have been handled during recovery from scarlet fever should be burned after they have served their purpose for the patient. A writer in the Athenæum says that in the stages of recovery such books frequently become charged with the germs of the disease.

THE strongest vegetable fiber known is said to be that of the New Zealand flax. It has long sword-like leaves, ten to twelve feet in length. It is used by the settlers for binding their sheaves, fastening their gates, tying up their horses, and in almost every possible way.

GREAT numbers of caterpillars, of a species hitherto unknown there, have made their appearance in the country about Halifax, Nova Scotia, and their presence and the immense injury which they did last summer to the cauliflower crops have recently formed topics of discussion at the Institute of Natural Science.

DR. OLDHAM, an Englishman of scientific attainments, confident that no coal beds existed in that portion of India known as the Madras Presidency, once remarked that he would eat all the coal ever found there. The Times of India states that excellent and abundant deposits have been discovered, and that great anxiety is consequently felt for Dr. Oldham, as he is a man of strict veracity and honor.

THE microscope reveals the fact that a speck of potato-rot the size of a pin head contains about two hundred ferocious little animals, biting and clawing each other savagely; and microscopists find in every teaspoonful of raw sugar about a thousand of the ugliest little wretches wriggling about, with horns and daggers ready to poke them through our vitals at any moment, and without the slightest compunction; in fact, they rather like it.

THE most curious ant in the world is the parasol of the West Indies, if the accounts which we receive of its habits are correct. These ants walk in long procession, each one carrying a cut leaf over its head as a parasol in the sun, and they deposit these in holes ten or twelve feet under ground, apparently with no other object than to form a comfortable nest for a species of white snake, which is invariably found coiled up among them on digging out the deposit.

RAILROADS IN MEXICO.—Herapath's Railway Journal of December 31st, 1870, gives a report of meeting of the stockholders of a the Mexican Railway Company. From the report read at the meeting it appears that there are 116 miles of railroad in running order from the City of Mexico to Puebla, which, during the first ten months of 1870, earned $545,330; the working expenses for the same period amounted to $298,625, leaving $246,705 as profit. The section of the road from Vera Cruz to Paso del Macho is 47 miles long, and during the first nine months of 1870 earned $143,205; the working expenses amounted to $138,370, leaving only $4,835 profit. Part of the sum charged to working expenses, however, was used in construction. The payments made by the Mexican Government during the first nine months of 1870 in aid of the extension of the road, amounted to $723,483. The Company is now engaged in building another section of the road, from Paso del Macho to Fortin, a distance of 24 miles, requiring the construction of three iron bridges and two tunnels. The report says that the traffic is at present entirely local, and that until the remainder of the line is completed, through the difficult Maltrata Pass, and along the plain country at the top, the commerce between Mexico and Vera Cruz will continue to be carried on along the very fine old road built in the time of the Spanish Viceroys, which is still used for all purposes. The work of completing the road will be very expensive. After passing Fortin there is an enormously deep ravine which will be very difficult to cross, next comes about 20 miles of easy work, and then the ascent of the Maltrata Pass, a distance of 23 miles. The next point is Boca del Monte, which is 8,100 feet above the level of the sea. There is, however, a section between Boca del Monte and Esperanza, about 23 miles long, which is exceedingly difficult, and cannot be built unless a large amount of funds be subscribed.

Why is the letter G like death? It makes ghosts of hosts, and is always in the midst of slaughter.

Why should one never sleep in the cars?—The train runs over the sleepers.

What sort of a day would be good for running for a cup?—A muggy day.

Are there any birds that can sing the "Lays of Ancient Rome?"—Yes; Macaulays.

What have you to expect at a hotel? Inn-attention.

Why are there no eggs in San Domingo?—They banished the whites, and cast off their yoke.

When does a chair dislike you?—When it can't bear you.

Which is the best off, tea or coffee?—Coffee. It settles itself, but tea has to draw.

The Poetry of Sorrow.

A Southern poetess pours out her sorrow over the recent fire at Richmond in some stanzas which are truly affecting. We can give but three, as follows:

O, Richmond, gallant Richmond,
 Upon thy seven hills!
Like one of old we wot of well,
 Thy fame the wide world fills:
Beside the lays of Greece and Rome,
 Shall thy own lays be sung:
The glorious deeds that made thee great,
 By many an unborn tongue.

O, Richmond, mourning Richmond,
 Although thy laurels bright
Were scorched and withered by the blast
 That sprang up in a night;
And though the cypress wreath lay dark
 Upon thy polished brow,
Thou ne'er was greater in thy day
 Than in thy night art thou!

Then look up, glorious Richmond,
 That o'er that head hath broke:
Look up, from out thy bleeding heart,
 Behold the smiter smile,
Who chasteneth those he loves full well,
 And sore dismays the while.

Personalities.

A LIFE of Washington Irving has been published in Berlin.

MR. BERGH had better send an agent of his society to the Missouri, where it is said horse traders put a little oil of vitriol on the animal's hoof to make him show off his uncontrollable spirit.

MR. CARY COX, of Monroe county, Georgia, comes of a remarkable family. At a family meeting of the Coxes, in 1856, two hundred and fifty-two were present, and more than sixty of the descendants of Mr. Cox's father served in the Southern army.

AN irreverent Virginia ghost still furnishes an accompaniment of whistling, door slamming and window-rattling whenever Rev. Mr. Thrasher engages in evening prayers. The precher thinks he would like to justify his name in a personal interview with the impalpable rowdy.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Portland Transcript claims to have in his possession a diary of Nathaniel Hawthorne, kept in 1816, found in the neighborhood of the old Hawthorne home in Raymond, Me., and in which the boyish thoughts and fancies of the great word-painter are written out.

OF Mark Twain's autobiography, which he has written in imitation of other great men, his publishers say, "It is, on the whole, a model production; yet it is of that nature that some people may simply indulge in laughter at the gifted author's expense, instead of deriving from it the lessons of practical wisdom which it is intended to convey. The autobiography is accompanied by the author's first novel, and other satires, beautifully illustrated."

MR. SPURGEON says: "It is a remarkable fact that ministers of the Gospel are not able to live on much less than other people. They cannot make a shilling go so far as other people can make a sovereign. Some of them try very hard, but they do not succeed. A member once said to a minister, who wanted a little more salary as his family increased: 'I did not know that you preached for money.' 'No, I don't,' said the minister, 'I thought you preached for souls.' 'So I do; but I could not live on souls—and if I could it would take a good many the size of yours to make a meal.'"

Chief Justice Chase.

New York correspondence Cincinnati Commercial.

To pass from gay to grave, and to get the taste of New York out of my mouth, I called to pay my respects to this man. He has been very ill. The long life of arduous labor for the public good, the weight of heavy responsibility rested upon one brain, until at last the statesman, possessed of the finest trunk and most perfect head, went down in a terrible sickness. I was glad to find him convalescent. I was exceedingly rejoiced to know from observation, that his disease, had not been as the public had been taught to believe, paralysis. He rose and greeted me with the kindly smile of old, and I could see no traces in his face or in his movements of that terrible American disease. He is much emaciated, and, of course, weak, but his form is erect and his face clear and unclouded as the best days of his useful life. We had a long talk, made up, as our talks generally are, of jests and humorous comments, and I heard ring out a hearty laugh far stronger and healthier than his appearance would have made me expect. Chief Justice Chase, with admirable constitution and superb physique, is yet in the prime of life, and has, I firmly believe and most earnestly hope, many years of usefulness before him.

DISCOVERY OF GLACIERS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.—At the regular meeting of the Connecticut Academy, in New Haven, recently, an informal but highly important communication was made by Mr. Clarence King concerning some recent discoveries upon the famous peaks of the Pacific coast, Mount Shasta, Mount Rainier and Mount Hood. It would be hardly fair, without his authority, to attempt to give a minute account of these observations, but there can be no impropriety in reporting that during the last autumn Mr. King and his associates, in three parties, discovered the existence of active glaciers where they have never before been noticed, on the northern slopes of Mount Shasta in California, as well as on Mount Rainier in Washington, and on Mount Hood, in Oregon. Another season he hopes to pursue these inquiries even as far north as Mount St. Elias.

This is the first instance in which within all the territory of the United States (Alaska, of course, excepted) "living glaciers" have been found, though in the East, as well as in the West, there are many indications of glacial action in former geologic epochs. The glaciers now detected (on Mount Shasta, at least) have hitherto escaped the notice of those who have climbed the peak because the ascent has been made upon the southern slope.

PRIMITIVE SPOTS.—An artist correspondent of the Boston Transcript got permission to occupy the jail of the little city of San Marcello, in Italy, as a studio, and for diet is treated to bread and ground chestnuts. The use of money has gone out of use, and wheat in mountain vicinity has not come into vogue. This Italian spot must be a rival to the district in Spain celebrated by a Philadelphia grocer. "This soap," says he, "is genuine. It is made of oil, and comes from a Spanish district where the benighted people never heard of the lard oil, which goes out from this country to return in castile soap and salad condiments." Ignorance in cases is bliss to others than the ignorant.

SARNIGHAUSEN OUSTED.

Hon. John Sarnighausen, the popular Senator from Allen County, who was elected by the Republicans and as many Democrats as this party could humbug on what they called a "People's Ticket" last fall, has come to grief, through an overdose of Radicalism. He has just reaped a full harvest for his apostacy to the party that he would have ruined. His opponent, Hon. O. Bird, contested the election, and the Senate last week decided in favor of Mr. Bird. Only three Democrats voted to eject Mr. S. while eighteen straight-haired Radicals said John should "go nout mit his dog." Thereupon the Radical papers howled terribly at the Democracy. This was before the vote was known. What a fall there was, my countrymen, when the vote of the two parties was given! The Fort Wayne Sentinel thus graphically describes the effect among the Radical journalists of that city:

"As soon as the intelligence reached this city, the Gazette's corps editorial glowed to a white heat over the depravity of the Democratic party over its want of consistency, and over what it believed one of the most heineous principles in human nature. Imagine the collapse in the Gazette corps editorial when the vote on the contest showed eighteen Republicans to three Democrats! Had the earth cleft in twain, the horror of the gap would not have brought more surprise to six pair of eyes—black and blue mixed—than the vote on this contest. Wright fainted and fell into McNiece's arms; McNiece, electrified as if struck by a piece of chain-lightning, gazed with that blank astonishment which puts dignity and intellect into wax statues; and Whipple, convulsed with a laugh, came to the rescue and converted himself into a prop to protect the tableau from utter annihilation. As soon as "reason put forth its shadows," Wright articulated to a long meter hymn, "its all gone—we had it fixed up right for the spring election, but the d—n thing won't work." McNiece echoes a double base, "tis everything but well!" Whipple exclaims, 'Take courage, brethren, don't ask what we shall do to be saved, but go at it, and pitch into our own men, for in this we have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

The Canal Bond Swindler Squelched by a Democratic Legislature.

The Indianapolis Sentinel in speaking of this matter, says the House on yesterday, passed the Constitutional Amendment proposed by Hon. Jason B Brown, in the Senate, providing an unconditional prohibition on the assumption of the debt represented by the Wabash and Erie Canal bonds by any act or resolution of the General Assembly. If the amendment is confirmed by the next General Assembly, and then ratified by the electors of the State, it will become a part of the Constitution of Indiana. If this amendment is adopted it puts to rest all control over the canal bonds by the Legislature, and all question as to the liability of the State for the same, unless the people shall so amend the Constitution hereafter as to provide for its assumption and payment.

During the canvass last year the republican papers and speakers charged that the Democracy were in favor of the payment of the Wabash and Erie Canal bonds, and that if the Legislature was Democratic, these bonds, principal and interest, amounting to about sixteen or seventeen millions of dollars, would be fastened upon the State. Notwithstanding these impudent assertions, proclaimed by the Governor down to the lowest pothouse Radical partizan, this Democratic General Assembly has adopted an amendment to the Constitution, introduced by Mr Brown, a Democratic Senator, prohibiting the Legislature by act or resolution, from recognizing any liability of this State to redeem the certificates of stock issued one-half of the then indebtedness, as provided in the acts of 1846 and 1847, which were payable exclusively from the proceeds of the canal lands, and the tolls and revenues of the canal, set forth in those acts. This is a Democratic measure, passed by a Democratic Legislature. During ten years of Republican rule, having the power to do so, the Republicans did not take a step in the direction of prohibiting the assumption of those certificets stock, but it was left for the Democrats to signalize their return to power by putting this question at rest and relieving the anxiety and fear of the public mind in regard to it for swindling jobs and robbery of the public treasury having characterized Republican rule, the people insisted upon security to protect them from the thieving propensities of the Radical leaders. While the Democracy are in power there will be no danger of swindling, and this proposed amendment has been adopted for protection in case so dire a calamity as Radical rule should again afflict the people.

SNUBBED.—The Indianapolis Journal, recklessly Radical, characterized the House of Representatives, the other day as an obscene and vulgar body. A resolution was passed declaring the Journal's statement false, and an insult to the House that should meet with unqualified condemnation. Only five Republicans voted against it. Rough on the Radical organ of the State.

LAST week a party of cut-throats made an attack upon the conductor of the passenger train, on the Warsaw and Goshen railroad, at Leesburg, and would have probably killed him, had not the engineer and fireman come to his rescue. They attacked the train again next day and injured the baggage master, Mr. Wells. One of the scoundrels made good his escape, but the others were arrested and taken to Warsaw where they are probably trying the realities that may be experienced in the new jail.—Mishawaka Enterprise.

ODS AND ENS.

Nature never makes enny blunders. When she makes a phool she means it.

I hav finally cum tew the konklusion that the majority ov mankind kan be edukate on the back better than the brain, for good clothes will often make a phool respectable while edukashun only serves to show his weak pints.

I never knu a man yet whoze name was George Washington Lafayette Goodrich, Esq, and who alwus signed hiz name for the name for the full amount, but what was a bigger man on paper than he was by natur.

As a gineral thing an individual who iz neat in hiz person iz neat in his morals.

Man iz my brother, and i konsider that I am nearer relatee tew him thru hiz vices than i am thru his virtews.

There is nothing about which the world makes so few blunders and individuald so menny, as a man's acktual importance among his fellow critters.

A man with a very small head iz like a pin without enny, very apt tew git into things beyond his debth.

Affectashun has made more phools than the Lord haz.

About the nearest tew absolute insolvency that a man kan git in this world, and think he iz dieing rich, iz to leave nothing but a pedigree tew his family.

I don't pretend tew hav enny less vile pashuns than my nabors, but i do despise the person, most heartily who caters tew those i hav got.

The man who kant find enny thing to do in this world iz az bad oph as a yearling heifer.

There is no pashun ov the human heart that promises so much and pays so little az revenge.

An Odd Freak of Nature.

We have recently been placed in possession of the particulars of the birth of a wonderfull deformed infant, which occurred a few miles north of this city, a short time since, and about which there are a thousand wild and vague rumors afloat, and which is constantly being added to, as the story repeated from mouth to mouth; and in order to correct these wild stories, as well as to state the plain facts, are led to give the following particulars of the case. A week or two since, the mother of the curious malformation, gave birth to a male child, perfectly formed in every respect, save the top of its head, which was flattened from a short distance above the eyes, from which point the forehead abruptly receded, and the the shape of the head assumed the flattened appearance spoken of. On the top portion of this depression, and in the center of the top of the head—strange as it may seem—was a stiff, flabby, cartilaginous protuberance, several inches in length, bearing much the resemblance of a calf's tongue, growing straight up form the point indicated. It is considered, by all the medical profession who have heard of this strange freak of nature, as one of the most curious cases of which they have heard. The child lived for three days, and was perfectly, and wellformed, in every other respect.—There are numerous stories in circulation about this being, and we deemed it our duty to publish the facts in reference to it—as much for the purpose of stopping many of these absurd rumors, as anything else, which we have done, merely suppressing names of the parents of this wonderfull deformity.—Warsaw Indianaian.

The Angola Republican says that a meeting of the enterprising citizens of Fremont was held at the church in that place on the 27th of January for the purpose of considering the cost and dimensions of a new Methodist Episcopal Church, to be built early in the future.

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

PARTICULAR NOTICE.

Having sold my interest in the Air Line I respectfully request, all those indebted to me on subscription to call and settle immediately at this office or to me personally. A reasonable time will be given, for all to make their settlements, and as I intend removing from the county, those accounts which still remain unsettled will be left for collection. It is important that this should be attended to immediately.

AN alarm of fire, on Sabbath evening, was found to be nothing more than a chimney on fire, and we were glad of it.

RELIGIOUS.—There will be English services at the St. John's Reformed Church next Sabbath evening, by Rev. W. B. Sandoe.

SOUTH BEND is booming up—they have discovered a nest of theives and recovered a large amount of stolen property.

THE county jail at Ft. Wayne is full, so the citizens talk of building a new one.—Nothing like enterprise.

RELIGIOUS.—There will be divine service at the Presbyterian church, next Sabbath morning at half past 10 o'clock, by the Rev. Mr. Fowler.

THE sale of lands for the taxes due on them, commenced at the Treasurer's office on Monday last, and up to last evening quitl a number of sales were made.

A LADY ammused herself at Fort Wayne, last week, by counting the different styles of doing up the hair, and found fifty-one.—"How's that for high?"

THE Kendallville Standard is the only paper that published the Govenor's message, in the 10th and 11th Districts. That was sufficient.

MISS. LILLIAN EDGERTON, lectured recently, at Fort Wayne and there has'nt been a marriage license issued since. You don't catch the young folks of that place napping. Miss. Lillian was down on divorces.

WE state for the benefit of those who are not already posted, that we fill out the time subscribed for the Air Line with the COURIER. Those who have paid in advance for that paper, will get the COURIER, up to that time, without further pay.

WE learn that Crouse's furniture shop at Waterloo took fire one day last week, but was extinguished with some difficulty.—The grocery store of Geo. Miller, also met with the same misfortune. Waterloo seems to be fortunate in getting fires extinguished in good time.

DON'T fail to read the advertisement of C. S. Hare, who has recently supplied him self with a magnificent stock of Boot and Shoes. He has a large assortment from which to select, and sells at reasonable prices. Store in brick building opposite the Court House.

THE shooting of all birds of game, except wild ducks, by law, closed on Tuesday, of last week. Any violation of the game law after January 31st, subjects the offender to a punishment, by heavy fine, for every bird found in his possession. So look sharp.

SMITH & HARE, under the COURIER office, have just received a large invoice of fresh groceries, which they are disposing of, at unusually low rates, for cash. They mean business and will be found attentive and obliging to customers. Read their advertisement.

We gave a list of officers elected in the Delta Lodge, supposing that Lodge to be located in Butler. We copied from the local column of the Butler Herald, but learn since that Delta is the name of the place in which the lodge exists. Better luck next time.

IN TOWN.—A brilliant array of legal talent from Fort wayne, Goshen, Warsaw, Waterloo, Butler and South Bend, including of course, our own limbs of the law. Also a fifthteenth amendment from "de norf." Counsel will please excuse the connection.

OUR enterprising druggist, Dr. Davenport, has refitted up his establishment in a neat and tasty manner, and is now ready with a large fine assortment of drugs medicines &c, with which to accommodate his customers Those in want of articles in his line should give him a call.

GREAT TEA HAUL.—Several Railroad trains of from twenty to thirty-five cars each, have passed through Fort Wayne recently, on the Ft Wayne & Chicago Railroad, to New York, The teas are direct from China, by way of California, instead of the roundabout way to New York, by water. One train is estimated to contain over a quarter million dollars worth of this article.

OUR statement in regard to the proceedings in a Justice's court, in a neighboring town, was some what incorrect. The Justice was attorney for the plaintiff, and the defendent wanted a change of vendue, but Mr. Attorney could'nt see it. There has been considerable of a squabble about the case, and the probability is there will be a high old law suit about the matter.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.—Next Tuesday is Valentine day, an occasion which many of our young folks will make the most of, by inditing tender sentiments, and some that are not very tender. There will be a great demand for these beautiful valentines, which express so appropriately the sentiments of the love sick swain. A large assortment has just been received at the Post Office. Get one and send it to your "Gal."

Brainard's Musical World.

The February number of the Musical World is at hand, and contains, besides the usual large amount of entertaining reading matter, three beautiful pieces of new music, alone worth a year's subscription. The terms are only $1.00 per annum, for which the subscriber receives over fifty pieces of music, costing, in sheet form, from $15 to $20. No person interested in music can afford to be without the Musical World. Specimen copies can be obtained by sending ten cents to the publishers, S. BRAINARD & SONS, Cleveland, O.

We clip the following from the Waterloo Press of last week:

IMPROVEMENT.—Mr. O. T. Clark has purchased the remainder of the brick business room, heretofore occupied by Leas, Campbell & Co., and will remodel it at once, for occupation in another branch of business, early in the coming spring.

GOING IT ALONE.—Mr. John Butt, of the popular Grocery and Provision Store, has purchased Mr. Fitch's interest in the establishment, and will hereafter conduct the business alone, keeping everything in his line, and warranting his goods first-class in every respect.

NEW CHURCH.—The congregation of the Reformed Church, which has been worshiping for sometime in the Presbyterian Chapel, under the pastorate of Rev. Bear, has decided to build a church of its own the coming summer. The edifice will be of brick, and it is the intention of the building Committee to have the house under roof by the coming fall. A large amount of the necessary funds are already pledged, and the Church hopes to find no difficulty in securing the balance, from the members and the citizens generally, who desire to see this improvement go on. The committee has already been instructed to procure a lot, and contract for the building materials.

A RELIABLE citizen, of this county, informed us yesterday, that he had nighbors from a mile to two miles distant, just as able as he was, that came regularly every week to borrow the COURIER as they wanted to learn the news My God, what a people's If this should reach the eye of such, we would say that we have a few old paper collars that we have only worn a week, which they can have n application.

AT an election held in Way Lodge, I. O. of G. T., last Saturday evening, the following persons were elected for the ensuing term:

J. F. Rush, W. C. T. Alice Widney, W V. T. W. Griswold, W. Sec'y. Anna Robbins, W. T. Howard Griswold, W. M. B. Canon, W. I. G. A. Sheffer R. H. S. Mary Ford, L. H. S. E. S. Arnold, W. F. S. O. Bodine W. D. M. Chas. Sandoe W. O. S. G.

TOM TAYLOR says that the German citizens of that place, "lager beerically re-took Paris," meaning that they got drunk over the capitulation of Paris. This is the way our German citizens are treated by Republican Journals, and because they manifested a love of country and enjoyed the glory of the "Faderland," they must be accounted drunk. The Germans of Fort Wayne should remember this when they take part again in a people's convention, manipulated by the Republican party.

STRANGE.—They have a natural curosity in Fort Wayne. Its a human being that weighs eight hundred pounds. Fact, Tom Taylor says so. We knew this fellow when he only weighed about ninety, and he was actually so poor that the citizens clubbed together and got him a large cake, and that accounts for his corporosity now. He talks about muscle and claims he's a whale. He has lots of blubber, any how. He boasts about devouring bleareyed politicians. Good bye, Old John.

SAMUEL W. DICKINSON, the popular, agreeable and gentlemanly host, of the Waterloo House, at Waterloo, has opened up his establishment in fine style and is now ready to receive his friends and the public generally and entertain them in a princely fashion.—Mr. Dickinson possesses that suavity of manner and pleasantness of temperament so essential in the character of a "hotelist" and we doubt not but that he will soon build up a trade equal to his enterprise, and add to the character and reputation of Waterloo. Success attend him.

Extension of Our Railroad.

We neglected to mention last week that the Ft. W., J. & S. R R., had purchased the Ft. Wayne, Muncie & Cincinnati Railroad making the former one a continuous line from Jackson to Cincinnati, a distance of about three hundred miles. The price paid is 2,800,000.

We look upon the arrangement as one that will contribute largely to the growth and prosperity of this road, and under its present efficient management, will soon be second to none in importance, not only as the amount of business transacted, but also as a through route without change of cars, from the Northern limits to the very interior of our country.

Good Templars Convention.

The Lodges comprising the 19th Dristrict consisting of the Counties of Allen, Wells, Adams, LaGrange, DeKalb, Steuben and Noble, will meet in Convention at Kendallville, on Tuesday, the 14th inst. at 10 o'clock a. m. All members of the Order in good standing are hereby invited.

Delegates will please report themselves directly at the Hall, where they will be assigned quarters during the sitting of the Convention.

By order of

COMMITTEE.

THE EEL RIVER RAILROAD.

We learn that contracts are being made for the delivery of ties along the line of this road, east of this place, and that quite a number are at work in getting them ready. Present indications are that a large force will be to work at grading, in the Spring, and every effort will be put forth for its early completion. Work was suspended at Columbia City for the want of funds, but we are assured that this will soon be remedied and everything placed upon a good footing. We want to see the iron horse puffing away towards Butler inside of another year, and realize the fact that we are within fifteen minutes of the citizens of that enterprising town. Give us railroads or give us—money to build them.

THE Atlantic Monthly, for February, is replete with literature adapted to varied tastes, and ranging from easy narration to profound theses on scientific subjects. If "The Origin of Folk-Lore" dos destroy our faith in the historic value of the story of William Tell and other popular traditions, the "chapter of Modern Astrology" reassures the reader of human possibilities quite beyond the average conception. "Our Whispering Gallery" reveals the heart of Hawthorne, and will endear him to thousands. Mr. James T. Field continues as editor, but retires from the business department. Jas. R. Osgood & Co. are the new firm, 713 Broadway, N. Y. The price of the Atlantic is $4: single numbers, 35 cents each.

ONE of our physicians says a moderate size plum pudding contains over twenty first class cases of dyspepsia, and pronounces mince pies as no great shakes, that ain't good for three cases each.

BALTIMORE & CHICAGO RAILROAD

The Probability of Its Construction Through Auburn.

A meeting is to be held at LaGrange soon to consult in regard to the Baltimore and Chicago Railroad. In the mean time the friends of the proposed line through this place, should be on alert, and endeavor by every possible means to bring about its location here. There are three lines already contemplated. The center line, which passes through Auburn, is almost a bee line from Akron, Ohio, to Valparaiso, Ind. A second is talked of through Steuben county, and still another through Decatur and Bluffton, a few miles Sorth of Ft. Wayne.

Possessing the most practical route with every advantage in our favor, topographically speaking, there is but one thing that can thwart us in the construction of this grand line of railway through our place, and that is an inactivity of the poeple along the line together with a reluctance to subscribe liberally when a demand is made for assistance. There are two routes proposed, west from Akron, and that Akron will get the road we have scarcely any doubt, as that city posesses better roailroad connections than other point in that State. The route proposed through Steuben county encounters many difficulties in the way of heavy grading that can only be surmounted at great expense of time and labor.

It is conceded by engineers that our route can be constructed at even a less rate than is usually estimated for railroads generally, and will pass through a region, superior in agricultural resources, and other advantages to any of the other lines.

With all these chances in our favor we hold the vantage ground, and can rosess the road, by the display of that energy, enterprise and liberality that characterizes the wide-awake people of other localities who know the advantages of railways. There must be a unity of action in the matter all along the line, to bring it to a successful issue, and we hope there will not be one who will be found wanting in assistance to the consummation of this object. It is not a benefit to one particular locality, but to the whole county, giving competing lines that will contribute to the prosperity of all.

At Albion, the citizens are thoroughly alive to the work, and by their indefatigable energy are doing much, for the location of this line. East of us we have powerful auxilaries in such places as Defiance, Tiffin and Akron, who are thoroughly aroused to the importance of this projected road. Let us do our share, and our efforts will surely be crowded with success.

ATTENTION!

All those indebted to the AIR LINE on Subscription are requested to call and settle without delay. This matter must be attended to at once.

CIRCUIT COURT.—The DeKalb Circuit Court commenced its session in this place on last Monday, Judge Tousley, presiding. An unusual number of criminal cases appeared upon the docket, which is engaging the attention of the court, at this writing. The following cases have been disposed of:

State vs. Isaac Likens, assault and battery, fined $1 and cost.

State vs. William Lamm, assault and battery, fined $5, and cost.

State vs. John Ewing, larceny, fined $5, and cost.

State vs. Jothan Woolsey, assault and battery, fined $5, and costs.

State vs Moses Lower, assault and battery. Discharged.

State vs. Robert Knott, allowing Canada thistles to grow. Dismissed.

The case of the State vs Peter Brandon charged with the heinous crime of incest, is now in course of prosecution. The prisoner is a man about forty years old, wears specs, and looks as though he ought to be a better man. He is somewhat nervous, especially when any evidence is given, that indicates anything like guilt.

The prosecuting witness is a young girl only 13 years of age, of medium size, rather intelligent looking, and evidently en ciente She was somewhat agitated while giving in her testimony, which was of a positive character all the way through. We do not know what the verdict may be, but regret that persons so base as to be guilty of such a crime, can only be sentenced, at the gratest, to ten years imprisonment. The infamy of the gallows is too good for them.

We stop the press to give the verdict of the Jury in the above case which was, two year's imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

Railroad Accident.

An appalling accident occurred at New Hamburg, on the Hudson River Railroad, last Tuesday evening in which it is thought some twenty persons perished.

An oil train was bound south, and when passing New Hamburg an axle of one of the oil cars broke and dragged along the ground till it reached the drawbridge, when, striking the bars, it threw the car off the track, and in front of the second Pacific express. An attemp was made to stop the express, which was then approaching, but there was not time enough and it struck the oil car.

Fragments of the oil car scattered in every direction, and at once ignited, enveloping the entire Express train in flames.

The express train was composed of a locomotive, one baggage car, one express car, and five or six sleeping cars. The locomotive was at once hurled into the river, killing the engineer. The baggage and express cars were piled on top of the engine, and at the same time the Chicago sleeping car was one sheet of flame. Though desperate attempts were made to rescue the passengers, it is said that but one got out alive. Two of the other sleeping cars next to it were also wrapped in flames, but the passengers in them all came out safely. Mr. Benedict, editor of the Cleveland Herald, and wife are among the killed.

AN INTERESTING STORY.

DeKalb County From a Kansas Standpoint.

The following sensational story is going the round of the papers, and makes a very readable article, but it lacks one essential point, and that is truth. We have made inquiries as to whether DeKalb County ever had a citizen called Blank, but it is beyond the recollection of the "oldest inhabitant." The only correct application we can see in the word, is that it is a blank falsehood, and the story has been invented by some of those city chaps, such as write for the Fort Wayne Sentinel and Gazette (we don't include the Journal, because Tom Tayler is the only modern Washington we've got in Indiana, he won't tell a lie, unless the truth will serve him better.) We have got to be wary of those city editors, and give them a wide berth, as they say a good deal and don't care a cent what it means. But here is the story as it originally appeared in the Kansas City Bulletin:

About two years ago a peaceful family living in DeKalb County, Ind., had their family circle broken up in the following manner:

A man boarding in the house of Mr. Blank, was discovered to be on too intimate relations with Mrs. Blank, who being fair even to "auburn locks" and fat to corpulency, was no despicable object of jealously. Mr. Blank on discovering the intimate relations existing between his boarders, made the following sensible proposition: Said he "Harry, you love Bet and Bet loves you.—I'll give her up to you for good, providing you will take the five children into the bargain. Take them, Bet, and the furniture, and take care of them." The bargain was made. Harry took the wife, furniture and five children, and the husband took his valise and departed for the West, after obtaining an "Indiana divorce."

The family moved to Kansas City, and took up their abode near the gas-house, where they now reside. About a year ago the eldest son, aged about 18 years, discovered his father in Kansas city, and learned further that he was boarding at Mrs. Mahaffey's boarding-house on Main street. The son, at the father's request, took his father home where his wife and her second husband were living happily, a sixth child having been added to the circle. Finding it more pleasant to be with his old wife and his own children, the philosophical husband applied for, and was received as a boarder.

Strange as it may appear, the two men have continued to live in peace together during the past year; the old husband strictly adhearing to his contract respecting the wife, leaving her entirely to Harry.

During his residence there, the youngest child died, and though it was not his own, Mr. Blank paid all the funeral expenses.

The wife, with her two husbands, takes her seat at the table each day, one on the right side, the other upon the left; her first husband she designates as "the old man," the second husband as "Harry."

We were shown the model pair carrying water form the river, yesterday, and thought, as we looked upon them, that their equals have never been found in Kansas City.

A LOVESICK fellow went to serenade his gal the other night, and commenced whining, "Put me in my little Bed." The old man put his head out of the window and told the youth if he did nt "dust," he would come down and stand him on his little head. He "dusted."

—A boy named John Matthies met with a horrible death at the starch factory at Ottawa, Ill., recently. He was alone in a room shoveling corn into the conductor, a machine which carries corn from the sheller to the elevator in the basement of the factory. The conductor is armed with flanges, arranged in a spiral row; he fell upon this, and his face, breast, and ribs were torn to pieces by it. No one knows how long he had been lying upon the fatal instrument of death, as he was not found until several minutes after the corn had ceased to come from the elevator at the top, and the investigation of this caused him to be found where he was. He was quite dead, and his body was mangled in the most horrible manner.

—Judge Thomas Bolton, formerly a prominent politician of Cleveland, died on Thursday.

—A man named White was arrested in Middleville, Wis., on Sunday, charged with incest with his daughter. The crime is said to be of long duration, the girl being intimidated from making her position known by her guilty parent.

"The former grew cool, the latter excited, to the surprise of everybody." Tremendous excitement followed the result. Deery's largest run was 57; Dion's, 42.

—Hitherto the Japanese Government has prohibited the raising of swine as impure; but recently it decided that it was advisable to encourage the production of pork as an article of food, removed the prohibition, and sent agents to California by the last steamer to purchase stock on Government account. While in Des Moines he disposed of a load of grain, a wagon, and three horses, as was his intention before leaving his family, and it is not impossible that he may have met with foul play.

—It is said that Gen. Garibaldi has asked that his command be included in the armistice.

—The assembling of the Conference has been postponed in consequence of the illness of Earl Granville.

—Prince Frederick Charles has communicated the stipulations of the armistice to Gen. Chanzy, and asks whether he regards them binding on him.

—Dispatches from many parts of France concur in expressing the determination of the people to continue the war, unless the terms proposed by Germany are greatly ameliorated.

—Gen. Manteuffel encloses the army of Bourbaki [illegible] the Swiss frontier. He overtook [illegible] retreating French west of Pontailler, [illegible] captured Chaperi and six pieces of [illegible] 3,000 prisoners and [illegible]

—The peace negotiations have created great consternation among the Imperialists, who had hoped to treat directly with Bismarck. Desperate efforts are now being made by them to enter into negotiations with the Prussian Government.

—There was a terrible collision in the tunnel, Thursday, between two trains, one carrying German recruits for guards and the other French prisoners. Many prisoners were killed and a large number injured. The collision was accidental.

—Many thousands of Bourbaki's army have died from starvation. There were 15,000 prisoners taken, including 100 officers, two being Generals. Ten cannon, seven maitrailleuses, and two eagles were also taken. Only 8,000 men of the army of Bourbaki escaped in the direction of Lyons. Manteuffel is in pursuit.

—The Prussians commenced to provide for the restoration of the railways and the provisioning of the capital the moment the armistice was concluded, but the rolling stock was found to be in such a wretched condition that it is as yet impossible. Paris, consequently, suffers for the want of food, being still supplied from the rations of the Germans.

—A letter from Col. Ducan Kentry, assisting in the War Department in Bordeaux, says there is an immense reaction in official circles and among the populace against the Provisional Government, and that ten millions of people would vote for the restoration of the Empire to-morrow. France will refuse to continue the war. The Mobiles arriving at Bordeaux shout "Vive L'Empereur!"

—The Government at Bordeaux has issued a decree ordering the elections for the National Assembly to be held on the 8th inst. It disqualifies for election to the Assembly members of families reigning over France since 1789; all persons who have acted as imperial officials or candidates in past elections, or held office as Ministers, Senators, or Councillors of State under the Empire, and Prefects who have accepted office between the 2d of December, 1851, and the 4th of September, 1870.

—In his last interview with Bismarck, M. Favre showed great feeling. His spirit is much broken down. During the conversation, particularly on the subject of food for Paris, M. Favre was greatly agitated and frequently burst into tears. Bismarck expressed doubts as to Gambetta and his associates at Bordeaux, who was comparatively exempt from the horrors of war, and thought probably they would refuse to yield their power. Favre replied that the powers of Gambetta were only delegated him by the Government of the National Defense, and that his (Favre's) authority was not that of Paris alone, but of the whole country. He did not believe that Gambetta would claim power to act in opposition to the Government at Paris. If he did, his removal would take place immediately. Favre stated that Gen. Trochu was in an intolerable state of sorrow and distress, adding, "Tai tremble pour sa vie."

Washington.

—Maj. C. G. Megrue, of Cincinnati, has left Washington for San Domingo, as an official bearer of dispatches from this Government to the San Domingo Commission. Business of a private nature will also occupy his attention while he is absent.

—The World's Washington correspondent telegraphs: "It is understood in Washington that a thorough reorganization of the President's Cabinet will be made on March 4. Senator Morton will be Secretary of State. Gov. Morgan will probably have a seat. All the present members, except Delano, will retire."

—The World's special says: "The nomination of Cramer as Minister to Denmark was not confirmed by the Senate yesterday. Sumner objected, saying that the Committee on Foreign Relations have been several months inquiring into this nomination, and all they could find was that this nominee was a brother-in-law of the President, and wholly unfit for the position."

—There is some talk of the President vetoing the bill repealing the test oath. He is advised to do so by such men as Butler, in the House, and Morton, in the Senate, on the ground that the time has not yet arrived when it is safe for the Government to restore ex-rebels to their political rights. It is stated that the bill passed the Senate through a misunderstanding, and that if it had to go before that body again it would be defeated. Should the President veto the bill it will fail, as it cannot command two thirds in either honse.

A HORRIBLE MURDER.—A dreadful murder was committed in the town of Wayland, Allegan county, Michigan, on the 30th ult. A man named Joseph Wheaton, several years ago, on the death of his wife, gave their only child, a boy, a year or two old, to a neighbor, to bring up, making the transfer in legal form. Since then he has lived with several lewd women, and generally borne a bad character. He has attempted several times to get possession of the child, stealing it from its legal custodian, at one time snatching it from the arms of the man to whom it belonged, and in the melee breaking one of its limbs. On Monday last, Wheaton stole the child again, and took it home. On its crying to go back, he deliberately whipped the poor boy to death. The screams of the child brought six men to the spot, but too late to rescue him from his tormentor. On their attempting to take him, Wheaton seized an axe, and declared he would split down the first man who touched him, and made his escape. The whole community is terribly excited, and has turned out en masse to hunt the monster down.

SURGICAL OPERATION ON AN ELEPHANT.—The celebrated elephant Romeo, it will be remembered, killed his keeper about two years ago. In order to secure him at the time it was found necessary to throw him off of his feet. This was done with great difficulty. This fall caused a severe bruise on the side of the animal. This bruise caused the formation of a tumor, which increased in size until it got as large as a man's head, and endangered the life of Romeo. Dr. Robert Jennings, V. S., was then called in, and last week he succeeded in removing the tumor. The operation was performed at the winter quarters of Romeo, on Ridge avenue, above Jefferson street, and the animal was securely fastened by four log chains. The elephant is now doing well.

FRENCH PROTEST.—Twelve opposition journals have protested against the decree issued by the Bordeaux Government, providing for the disqualification from the privilege of an election to the National Assembly of members of the families reigning over France since 1789, of all persons who have acted as Imperial officials, candidates in past elections, or held office as Ministers, Senators or Councillors of State under the Empire, and Prefects who have accepted office between the 2d of December, 1851, and the 4th of September, 1870. A deputation from these waited upon Jules Simon, and stated to him verbally the grounds on which the protest is based. Simon, in his reply, declared that the decree issued by the Paris Government on the 28th of January abolished all disqualifications for the National Assembly, and that he (Simon) would insist upon the execution of the Paris decree.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JAN. 30.—SENATE.—The following bills bills were introduced and referred in the Senate: By Morrill, of Maine, declaring that any one who shall sell or give to any civil, military or naval officer of the Government liquors to be used as a beverage, shall be deemed guilty of crime against the peace of society, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, also providing that employees as officers of the Government, who shall continue to use intoxicating liquors, or shall become at all intoxicated, shall be summarily dismissed, and shall not be reinstated for two years. By Ferris—To extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. By Scofield—To extend to the officers of the military and naval service the benefit of the act for furnishing artificial limbs to disabled soldiers. Trumbull moved to take up the Georgia question, remarking that the questions involved were those of law and fact, and that the subject could be disposed of this afternoon. The motion prevailed, and the resolution of the majority of the Judiciary Committee, declaring Hill entitled to his seat, was then read. The question recurring on the resolution declaring Hill entitled to the seat, Thurman, the Democratic member of the Judiciary Committee, moved an amendment adding the name of Miller as Senator-elect. He withdrew the amendment at the request of Trumbull, to permit a direct vote on the resolution. Stewart moved to substitute the name of Henry. After considerable discussion, at 5 o'clock, without a vote, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Various resolutions were introduced and referred to their respective committees. Butler, of Massachusetts, asked leave to introduce the following joint resolution: Resolved, That the Congress of the United States give to J. O'Donovan Rossa, Thomas Clarke Luby, John O'Leary, Thos. F. Burke, Charles Underwood O'Connell, and their associates, Irish exiles and patriots, a cordial welcome to the Capital and the country; and that a copy of the resolution be transmitted by them to the President. Benjamin, of Missouri, objected. Butler moved to suspend the rules, and said the resolution was copied from the Kossuth resolution. The rules were suspended, and the resolution passed—yeas, 172; nays, 21. The Senate joint resolution for the appointment of Gen. Sherman as Regent of the Smithsonian Institute passed. Logan moved to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution authorizing claims of persons against the Government, in connection with building vessels of war, to be referred to the Court of Claims. Agreed to. Laflin moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill providing that assistant marshals for taking the ninth census when their pay did not amount to $5 a day, shall receive increased pay to that amount. Agreed to. The House, at 4:30, adjourned

JAN. 31.—SENATE.—The Vice-President announced the return from the House of the income tax repeal bill. After a long debate on the subject the bill was disposed of by the adoption of the following resolution: Resolved, That the bill be returned to the House of Representatives, and that the Senate ask for a conference on the question at issue. Pomeroy submitted, and had read a resolution commending the suffering poor of France to the American people. The House bill, suspending the proceedings in reference to the Charpenning claim, was received and referred to the Committee on Post Office, Trumbull characterizing the claim as the boldest imposition ever practiced on the Government. After the introduction of several bills of no general importance, and a long debate on the Georgia Senatorial question, the Senate adjourned without disposing of the latter subject.

HOUSE.—The Secretary of the Navy was instructed to institute proceedings by law, or otherwise, to obtain full damages and indemnification for the sloop of war Oneida in the Bay of Yeddo, Japan, by collision with the steamship Bombay. A bill granting land to Mr. Schnell, of California, for the culture of tea and silk, was passed. The House took up the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs to extend the bounty land system to soldiers and sailors of the late war, their widows and orphans. A long and animated discussion took place upon this bill, which was finally passed. A conference with the Senate on the income tax bill was agreed to. A lengthy debate was had upon the "iron-clad oath" bill, and without disposing of the question the House adjourned.

FEB. 1.—SENATE.—After a long debate the resolution extending encouragement and sympathy to the people of France was agreed to, requiring the concurrence of the House. A resolution in regard to the member elect from Georgia was referred. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was then passed, as was also the West Point appropriation bill. The motion to take up the steamship subsidy bill was then renewed, and without coming to a vote on the subject, the Senate went into executive session, and subsequently adjourned.

HOUSE.—After a noisy and excited discussion, the Senate bill abolishing the test oath for persons in the South not disqualified by the Fourteenth amendment, was passed without amendment, by yeas, 118; nays, 80. It now goes to the President for approval. The bill provides that such persons shall take the oath prescribed in the act of July 11, 1868, prescribing an oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal responsibilities shall have been removed: Be it enacted, &c., that when any person, who is not rendered ineligible to office by the provisions of the Fourteenth amendment, is appointed to any office of honor or trust under the Government of the United States and shall not be able, on account of his participation in the late rebellion, to take the oath prescribed in the act of Congress, approved 23d of July, 1862, said person shall, before entering on the duties of his office, take the prescribed oath in the act of Congress, entitled "An act prescribing the oath of office to be taken by persons from whom legal disabilities shall have been removed. Approved 11th of July, 1868." Bingham, from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill for the appointment of an additional Assistant Attorney General. Passed. Butler, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill relating to the jurisdiction of courts in certain cases. Passed. Kellogg, from the same committee, reported a bill to divide the State of Ohio into three judicial districts. Passed. Cook, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of purchasers of land sold for direct taxes in the insurrectionary States. Passed. The House, at 4:15, adjourned.

FEB. 2.—SENATE.—A bill was reported authorizing the suspension of the use of the spirits meter now used in distilled spirits. The Senate, on a motion of Sherman, took up the House bill to allow the importation of brandy with the same rights and drawbacks as allowed to rum, alcohol, etc. The Finance Committee's amendment was agreed to, and the bill passed. On motion of Lewis, the amendments by the House to the bill to divide Virginia into two judicial districts were concurred in. At 1:30 the Senate agreed to the pending motion of Williams to proceed with the bill subsidising a steamboat line in the Gulf of Mexico. A long debate ensued, and the matter finally went over.

HOUSE.—Holman reported a bill for the relief of Capt. David L. Wright, of the 51st Indiana volunteers. Passed. Kerr reported the bill in reference to the United States District and Circuit Courts of Indiana. Passed. Also giving the assent of Congress to the application of the 500,000 acres of school land in Oregon to the support of common schools. Passed. Also, the bill providing that the act of June 17, 1862, defining additional cause for challenge and prescribing the oath for grand and petit jurors in United States courts, apply only to petit jurors in cases where the United States is the party in name and interest. Passed. Mercur, from the same committee, reported the bill for the collection of debts due from Southern railroad corporations, authorizing the Secretary of War to compromise, adjust and settle suits on such terms, as to amount and time of payment, as may be just and equable, and best calculated to protect the interests of the Government. Passed. Kellogg, from the same committee, reported the bill authorizing the issue of duplicate bonds of the United States, under certain conditions, in lieu of bonds lost or destroyed. Passed. Adjourned.

FEB. 3.—SENATE.—Bills were introduced to mortgage the bridge now building at Omaha, and in relation to bridging the Mississippi river. Thayer, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely the House joint resolution making the 30th day of May, decoration day, a National holiday. The steamship subsidy bill was laid aside to take up the House bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers. The yeas and nays were demanded, which were 28 to 24; and the pension bill was considered and finally agreed to. The veterans of the war of 1812 were also given the benefit of the act. After a few slight alterations the bill was passed. It now goes to the House for concurrence on the Senate amendments.

HOUSE.—The business of the House was rather unimportant. The Senate concurrent resolution for the relief of sufferers by the war in Europe was taken from the Speaker's table and passed. After a long session in Committee of the Whole, on the naval appropriation bill, the House adjourned.

A Sad Story.

Reminiscences of a Blighted Life.

From the Kansas City Bulletin.

The readers of the Bulletin will some of them remember the sensation created by a report of a funeral sermon preached over the corpse of a young cyprian, named Lizzie Mavis, by the Rev. Robert Irwin, at the Grant House, December 2. The affair occasioned so much interest that three editions of the paper were insufficient to meet the demand.

Nearly two months have passed away, and yet the memory of the dead girl may not rest in quiet. At intervals some envious scribbler publishes fictitious letters purporting to come from the bereaved friends of the fallen Lizzie, with thanks, etc., for favors granted. The deceased left some personal effects, trinkets, etc., which were the cause of a correspondence being held between parties here and the friends of the girl living at Jacksontown, Licking county, Ohio.

A well known business man of this city waited upon us yesterday, who had just visited the village home of the reclaimed and repentant girl. From him we received the following account of her early life, which we reluctantly give as a finishing chapter to our first account:

The affections of Miss Mavis were sought and won by a man named Gamaliel Headley, a hard-hearted, worthless "roue," son of the proprietor of the Headley House, in Jacksontown. This man was at that time already the husband of a young wife and father of two children. These he deserted to pay his courtship to the young and artless Lizzie. After a time he succeeded in inducing her to become his wife in everything but the ceremony, and afterward took her to his home at the village hotel. But his love and his promises were as frail as the snows of winter, for when the warm suns of spring smiled upon the green village of the Licking river, Lizzie found herself a neglected mother, but not yet a wife. In grief she returned to the shelter of her mother's home, and in a few short days was in a raging fever, during which her infant died.

The brutal nature of the man for whom the trusting girl had thrown away all was here developed to its fullest extent. Being notified that his child was dead, he procured a horse and sled, and, after purchasing a cheap pine coffin, marched deliberately to the house, took the dead child, and placing it in the coffin, started off with it alone, leading the horse and sled through the village to the graveyard. There, with his own hands, he dug a shallow grave and buried the first memento of his infamy; the second memento was interred here at Kansas City in the person of his victim.

The sorrowful girl, on her recovery, followed her betrayer to Columbus, Ohio, but was again deserted, and afterwards married a man with whom she went to California. Here she became a widow and friendless, and became what we found her here. Her brother and sisters became aware of her whereabouts and her tragic end by copies of the Bulletin forwarded and letters from Mrs. Hipp. The parents are aware of her decease, but know not the whole truth. The name of the house she died at is known to the mother, but the character of it is not known. This pain was spared her. We have written this to set at rest the careless romancing upon a sad incident long ago exhausted by us.

Cutting the Fodder and Steaming Food.

Our own practice in preparing feed for thirty head of stock,—one half being horses,—is to cut the fodder, straw, meadow-hay, if we have any, cornstalks, and best hay. This is cut by a horse-power standing on the barn floor. This occupies from one to two hours twice a week, to cut enough for the thirty head of stock.

A portion of this mass, enough for feeding twenty-four hours, is spread upon the barn floor, sprinkled with water, a very little salt, and strewed with such grain as is used; this is principally shorts. The heap stands twelve hours, is then thoroughly turned over and remains twelve hours more, when it is ready to be fed out. If the barn in which the heap is made is a moderately warm one, all the fodder will by this time be impregnated with the taste of the grain and the aroma of the good hay. It will also be softened, so as to be easily masticated by the animals, and they will eat the whole with great relish. Or, if any be left, it will only be joints of corn stalks, which are not softened, or some coarse plants of woody fibre. A heap thus prepared should always be kept on hand, so that each heap may stand at least twenty-four hours.

These details may seem to require a slow, irksome, and somewhat expensive process as to the time required. But they will not be found so in practice when the system—for it must be a system—is once fairly established. The horse power and cutter will be somewhat expensive to start with, but with good care, both will last for many years. When thirty or forty head of stock are to be fed, we have no doubt the cost of both would be saved by their use in two or three years.

If the stock consists of ten or fifteen head only, a good hand hay cutter will answed the purpose, and the horse power may be dispensed with.

In our winters there are many days too inclement for out-door labor, and these may be occupied in the barn in cutting the fodder and storing it away in empty spaces for use when mild weather calls the help into field or forest.

An ample experience for many years convinces us that stock can be kept enough cheaper to more than pay the cost of labor in preparing the fodder, and that it will perform more labor, produce more milk, or gain more in growth, than it will if fed on coarse food. An experiment with twelve milch cows through an entire winter gave us the most gratifying results. The cows yielded more milk, kept in good condition, and at one-fourth less cost than when fed in the usual way. Horses thrive as well as neat stock under such feeding.

In order to work on this system, the barn must be sufficiently warm to prevent the heap that is mixed up from freezing; and this ought to be secured in any case, as an economical measure in the care of the cattle. An old sail cloth, cast-off woolen blankets or any similar material, thrown over the heap, will greatly tend to prevent freezing.

Another plan, and one that is gaining in popularity, is that of.

STEAMING FOOD FOR STOCK.

This process will cost much more for the fixtures necessary to be used, and will require much more exact care than cutting and soaking the fodder. This care, however, will make every pound of food tell with the fullest effect in the production of meat, milk, or strength. We have visited several farms where the practice of steaming is adopted, found the system approved, and the stock looking well. The product of milk in the cows was very considerably increased; the horses were sleek and strong, and the young cattle with soft, loose skins, and having every way a thrifty appearance.—New England Farmer.

THE extravagant tendency of the present generation suggests to a clergyman the inquiry whether it would not be better to devote half of one's energies to learning to live on a very small income, than to devote all of one's energies in struggling and waiting for a large income?

CURE OF CHRONIC SOMNAMBULISM.—A foreign medical journal mentions two instances in which chronic somnambulism was cured by administering bromide of potassium, the dose given in one instance varying from thirty to one hundred grains per day; and in the other case fifteen grains were given both morning and evening. The attacks in each case gradually became less and less frequent, and in a short time entirely ceased.—Harper's Magazine.

The Spottswood Square Ruins.

The large HERRING SAFE of the Southern Express Company, rescued from the ruins Tuesday afternoon, was opened yesterday, and found to contain $15,000 in bank notes and $5,000 in checks, making in all $20,000. The notes, which were protected by a stout brown paper wrapping, were slightly singed on the outer edges, and were quite damp, but their value was not thereby in the slightest depreciated. After being expanded by the extreme heat which prevailed during the fire, the safe door naturally, when cooled under the continuous stream from the fire engines Sunday and Monday, contracted.—Richmond Whig, 29th.

For Dyspepsia,

Indigestion, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and as a tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

"A SLIGHT COLD," COUGHS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a cough or "slight cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected often attacks the lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give sure and almost immediate relief. "The Troches" have proved their efficacy by a test of many years, and have received testimonials from eminent men who have used them.

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY.

Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosciusco Co., Ind., says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."

Isaac C. Doran, M. D., of Logan Co., O., says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

It is Harmless to the most Delicate Child.

It Contains No Opium in Any Form.

It is Sold by Medicine Dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Call for "ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM," and shun the use of any other Balsam. Unprincipled men may deceive you with worthless preparations.

Suggestions for the Season.

Thousands regard the winter as a season of trials; and the truth is, that if there is a weak point in the system, winter is pretty sure to find it out. Constitutional tendencies to disease are generally aggravated by damp and cold. (Rheumatism sometimes lies perdu all the summer and fall, to pounce upon its victims in the season of cold.) As a means of fortifying the body against all the diseases which prevail most extensively in winter, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters cannot be too urgently recommended. There would be fewer cases of the pulmonary complaints tending to consumption, if all feeble systems were invigorated during the season with a course of this inestimable vegetable tonic and alterative. Constipation, indigestion, torpidity of the liver, and a general sluggishness of the secretive organs, very generally prevail at this period of the year. To all these ailments experience (the most trustworthy of all mentors) teaches us that the Bitters is a reliable remedy. Warm clothing is a good external defense against atmospheric cold and moisture, but vigorous activity in the vital organization which generates heat and delivers it to the surface, is also essential to health, and this activity is secured through the operation of the Bitters. The skin sympathizes with the stomach, and if digestion is regular and perfect, the exterior circulation will be brisk, and damp and cold may be encountered with comparative safety.

I. C. BABCOCK'S LETTER.

OFFICE OF ADAMS EXPRESS COMPANY,
No. 59 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Dec. 31, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:—Our agent at Richmond writes: "We got through to-night drying and fixing up the money from the late fire. The contents of the safe, $23,530 in bills, we recovered. It was a Herring's Safe, and a good one, certain."

LETTER FROM J. M. SUBLITT & CO.,
Proprietors of the Spottswood.
RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 29, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:

GENTS:—On the morning of the 24th inst., we were so unfortunate as to have our hotel burned, with contents. Yet, we were fortunate enough to have one of your Herring's Patent Champion Safes, which fell into the cellar among a burning mass of ruins. After the fire abated, we tried all means to extricate it, but found it impossible on account of the bricks, mortar, and burning rubbish lying thereon and about it, and we employed a mechanic and cut it open through the bottom, and, to our utmost surprise, we found the contents, consisting of valuable papers, money and some silverware, all in good order. Had it not been for your Herring's Safe we would have lost everything.

EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

They are not a vile FANCY DRINK, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effect.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.

BRIGGS & BRO'S. Illustrated Catalogue For 1871.

Of Flower and Vegetable Seeds and SUMMER FLOWERING BULBS,

Will be ready for mailing by the middle of January, notwithstanding our great loss of type, paper, engravings, &c., by the fire which destroyed the Job Printing Office of the Rochester Democrat & Chronicle on the evening of 25th December, 1870. It will be printed on a most elegant new tinted paper, and illustrated with nearly

Five Hundred Original Engravings,

And two finely executed Colored Plates—specimens for all of which were grown by ourselves the past season and from our own stock of Seeds. In the originality, execution and extent of the Engravings it is unlike and eminently superior to any other Catalogue or "Floral Guide" extant.

The Catalogue will consist of 112 Pages, and as soon as published will be sent free to all who ordered Seeds from us by mail the last season. To others a charge of 15 Cents per copy will be made, which is really not the value of the Colored Plates. We assure our friends that the inducements we offer to purchasers of Seeds, as to quality and extent of Stock, Discounts and Premiums, are unsurpassed. Please send orders for Catalogues without delay.

Our Colored Chromo for 1871,

Will be ready to send out about the 1st of January. The Chromo will represent Forty-two Varieties of the most showy and popular Flowers, of natural size and color. We design to make it the best Plate of Flowers ever issued. Size, 19x24 inches. The retail value would be at least Two Dollars; we shall, however, furnish it to customers at 75 cents per copy, and shall offer it as a Premium upon orders for Seeds. See Catalogue when out.

TO PHYSICIANS.

NEW YORK, August 15, 1868.

Allow me to call your attention to my PREPARATION OF COMPOUND EXTRACT BUCHU. The component parts are BUCHU, LONG LEAF, CUBEBS, JUNIPER BERRIES.

MODE OF PREPARATION.—Buchu, in vacuo Juniper Berries, by distillation, to form a fine gin. Cubebs extracted by displacement with spirits obtained from Juniper Berries; very little sugar is used, and a small proportion of spirit. It is more palatable than any now in use.

Buchu as prepared by druggists is of a dark color. It is a plant that emits its fragrance; the action of a flame destroys this (its active principle), leaving a dark and glutinous decoction. Mine is the color of ingredients. The Buchu in my preparation predominates; the smallest quantity of the other ingredients are added to prevent fermentation; upon inspection it will be found not to be a Tincture as made in Pharmacopœa, nor is it a Syrup—and therefore can be used in cases where fever or inflammation exists. In this you have the knowledge of the ingredients and the mode of preparation.

Hoping that you will favor it with a trial and that upon inspection it will meet with your approbation,

With a feeling of profound confidence,
I am, very respectfully,

Novel Method of Manufacturing Milk in Massachusetts.

Worcester people have generally had cause to congratulate themselves that, although living in a large city, its "rich and rural" surroundings were such that the milk supplied to their tables was above suspicion, and that their milkmen were above reproach, or, at most, that a faint infusion of pump water was the extent of its adulteration. But a case was developed in the municipal court this morning, the recital of which will set many people to thinking, and produce in one man's customers, at least, sensations far from pleasant. Lyman H. Whipple, who belongs in Shrewsbury, was arrested for keeping adulterated milk, and for selling the same. He has had a place of business on Front street, and employed two or three hands in his "milk factory," who appeared as witnesses against him. They state that he had a room fitted up with a great tank or can, holding 180 gallons, into which the good milk is put, but that every time it is filled forty gallons of a mixture of burned molasses, chalk, salt and water is put in, and the whole is mixed together and sold as genuine country milk. The business has been thus conducted for some time, all the customers receiving their share of the "milk," except a few who furnished small cans to be filled with the milk of one cow, for children. The doors of the establishment were kept locked, and the business was conducted in as private a manner as possible. The examination resulted in finding Whipple guilty on both charges—of keeping and selling—and he was fined fifty dollars and costs on each complaint, which he paid and departed.—Worcester Gazette, Jan. 24.

PETE SWEENY—THE RAGGED IRISH BOY WHO BECAME CITY CHAMBERLAIN OF NEW YORK.—About thirty-five years ago, a ragged boy of Irish parentage, but of native birth, and of humble circumstances in life, might have been seen playing about the streets of the Sixth Ward in New York, in the neighborhood of the stables owned by his uncle, Thomas J. Barr. Such was the early condition of one who was destined to gain the highest political influence in the city of his nativity, and to rule with an almost autocratic sway over a million people.

Sweeny has made vast sums of money by his various transactions, and is now wealthy. While City Chamberlain he had an income of $200,000 and upward for three years, and he now fills numerous positions of great profit. Among these are the following: President of the Central Park Commission, Director in the Ninth National Bank, Mutual Gas Company, Brooklyn Bank, and Dry Dock Railroad, and part owner of the New York Printing Company, the New York Leader and the Transcript. To this inadequate memoir of a great man may be added an extract from the World of March 15, 1870: "Mr. Peter B. Sweeny is prospering. With $62,522 in cash from the Treasury; and once or twice as much out of the Treasury; with $150,000 for fees on a receivership of property which he never took possession of; with a liberal interest in the Fisk pavement on Fifth avenue and other similar jobs, he will get on."

Don't Leave the Farm.

Come, boys, I have something to tell you;
Come near, I would whisper it low—
You are thinking of leaving the homestead—
Don't be in a hurry to go!
The city has many attractions,
But think of the vices and sins;
When once in the vortex of fashion,
How soon the downward course begins!

You talk of the mines of Australia—
They're wealth yin gold without doubt;
But ah! there is gold on the farm, boys,
If you'll only shovel it out.
The mercantile trade is a hazard,
The goods are first high and then low:
Better risk the farm awhile longer—
Don't be in a hurry to go.

The great busy West has inducements,
And so has the busiest mart,
But wealth is not made in a day, boys—
Don't be in a hurry to start!
The bankers and brokers are wealthy;
They take in their thousands or so—
Ah! think of the frauds and deceptions—
Don't be in a hurry to go.

The farm is the safest and surest,
The orchards are loaded to-day;
You are as free as the air of the mountains,
And monarchs of all you survey.
Better stay on the farm a while longer,
Though profits come in rather slow;
Remember, you've nothing to risk, boys—
Don't be in a hurry to go.

THE STORY OF A VALENTINE.

From Scribner's Magazine.

When my friend Capt. Terrible, U. S. N., dines at my plain table, I am always a little abashed. I know that he has been accustomed always to a variety of wines and sauces, to a cigarette after each course, and to a cookery that would kill an undeveloped American. So, when the Captain turns the castor round three times before selecting his condiment, and when his eyes seem to be seeking for Worcestershire sauce and Burgundy wine, I feel the poverty of the best feast I can furnish him. I am afraid veteran magazine readers will feel thus about the odd little story I have to tell. For I have observed of late that even the short stories are highly seasoned; and I cannot bear to disappoint readers. So, let me just honestly write over the gateway to this story a warning. I have no Cayenne pepper. No Worcestershire sauce. No cognac. No cigarettes. No murders. No suicides. No broken hearts. No lovers' quarrels. No angry father. No pistols and coffee. No arsenic. No laudanum. No shrewd detectives. No trial for murder. No "heartless coquette." No "deep-dyed villain with a curling mustache." Now if, after this warning, you have courage to go on, I am not responsible.

Hubert said I might print it if I would disguise the names. It came out quite incidentally. We were discussing the woman question. I am a "woman's righter." Hubert—the Rev. Hubert Lee, I should say, pastor of the "First Church," and, indeed, the only church in Allenville—is not, though I flatter myself I have made some impression on him. But the discussion took place in Hubert's own house, and wishing to give a pleasant turn at the end, I suppose, he told me how, a year and a half before, he had "used up" one woman's rights man, who was no other than old Dr. Hood, the physician that has had charge of the physical health of Hubert and myself from the beginning. Unlike most of his profession, the Doctor had always been a radical, and even the wealth that has come in upon him of late years has left him quite as much of a radical, at least in theory, as ever before. Indeed the old Doctor is not very inconsistent in practice, for he has educated his only daughter, Cornelia, to his own profession, and I believe she took her M. D. with honors, though she has lately spoiled her prospects by marrying. But socially he has become a little aristocratic, seeking an exclusive association with his wealthy neighbors. And this does not look very well in one who, when he was poor, was particularly bitter on "a purse-proud aristocracy." I suppose Hubert felt this. Certainly I did, and therefore I enjoyed the conversation that he repeated to me all the more.

It seems that my friend Hubert had been away at the seminary for three years, and that having at last conquered in his great battle against poverty, and having gained an education in spite of difficulties, and having supplied a city church acceptably for some months during the absence of the pastor in Europe, he came back to our native village to rest on his laurels a few weeks, and decide which of three rather impecunious calls he would accept. When just about to leave he took it into his head for some reason, to "drop in" on old Doctor Hood.

It was nine o'clock in the morning, and the Doctor's partner was making morning calls while the old gentleman sat in his office to attend to any that might seek his services. This particular morning happened to be an unfortunate one, for there were no ague-shaken patients to be seen, and there was not even a case of minor surgery to relieve the tediousness of the morning office-hour. Perhaps it was for this reason, perhaps it was for the sake of old acquaintance, that he gave Hubert a most cordial reception, and launched at once into a sea of vivacious talk. Cornelia, who was in the office, excused herself on the ground that she was cramming for her final examination, and seated herself at a window with her book.

"I am afraid I take your time, Doctor," said Hubert.

"O no, I am giving up practice to my partner, Dr. Beck, and shall give it all to him in a year or two."

"To him and Miss Cornelia?" queried Hubert, laughing. For it was currently reported that the young doctor and Cornelia were to form a partnership in other than professional affairs.

Either because he wished to attract her attention, or for some other reason, Hubert soon managed to turn the conversation to the subject of woman's rights, and the old doctor and the young parson were soon hurling at one another all the staple, and now somewhat stale, arguments about woman's fitness and woman's unfitness for many things. At last, perhaps because he was a little cornered, Hubert said:

"Now, Doctor, there was a queer thing happened to a student in my class in the seminary. I don't suppose, Doctor, that you are much interested in a love story, but I would just like to tell you this one, because I think you dare not apply your principles to it in every part. Theories often fail when practically applied, you know."

"Go on, Hu—go on; I'd like to hear the story. And as for my principles, they'll bear applying anywhere!" And the old Doctor rubbed his hands together confidently.

"This friend of mine, Henry Gilbert," said Hu, "was, like myself, poor. A long time ago, when he was a boy, the son of a poor widow, the lot on which he lived joined at the back the lot on which lived a Mr. Morton, at that time a thriving merchant, now the principal capitalist in that part of the country. As there was a back gate between the lots, my friend was the constant playmate from earliest childhood of Jennie Morton. He built her play-houses out of old boards, he moulded clay bricks for her use, and carved tiny toys out of pine blocks for her amusement. As he grew larger, and as Jennie's father grew richer, and came to live in greater style, Henry grew more shy. But by all the unspoken language of the eyes the two never failed to make their unchanging regard known to each other.

"Henry went to college early. At vacation time the two met. But the growing difference in their social position could not but be felt. Jennie's friends were of a different race from his own. Her parents never thought of inviting him to their entertainments. And if they had, a rusty coat and a lack of money to spend on kid gloves would have effectually kept him away. He was proud. This apparent neglect stung him. It is true that Jennie Morton was all the more kind. But his quick and foolish pride made him fancy that he detected pity in her kindness. And yet all this only made him determined to place himself in a position in which he could ask her hand as her equal. But you do not understand, Doctor, as I do, how irresistible is this conviction of duty in regard to the ministry. Under that pressure my friend settled it that he must preach. And now there was before him a good ten years of poverty at least. What should he do about it?

"In his extremity he took advice of a favorite theological professor. The professor advised him not to seek the hand of a rich girl. She would not be suited to the trials of a minister's life. But finding that Henry was firm in his opinion that this sound general principle did not in the least apply to this particular case, the professor proceeded to touch the tenderest chord in the young man's heart. He told him that it would be ungenerous, and in some sense dishonorable, for him to take a woman delicately brought up into the poverty and trial incident to a minister's life. If you understood, sir, how morbid his sense of honor is, you would not wonder at the impression this suggestion made upon him. To give up the ministry was in his mind to be a traitor to duty to God. To win her, if he could, was to treat ungenerously her whose happiness was dearer to him a thousand times than his own."

"I hope he did not give her up," said the Doctor.

"Yes, he gave her up, in a double spirit of mediæval self-sacrifice. Looking toward the ministry, he surrendered his love as some of the old monks sacrificed love, ambition, and all other things to conscience. Looking at her happiness, he sacrificed his hopes in a more than knightly devotion to her welfare. The knights sometimes gave their lives. He gave more.

"For three years he did not trust himself to return to his home. But having graduated and settled himself for nine months over a church, there was no reason why he should not go to see his mother again. And once in the village, the sight of the old school-house and the old church revived a thousand memories that he had been endeavoring to banish. The garden walks, and especially the apple trees, that are the most unchangeable of landscapes, revived the old passion with undiminished power. He paced his room at night. He looked out at the new house of his rich neighbor. He chafed under the restraint of his vow not to think again of Jennie Morton. It was the old story of the monk who thinks the world subdued, but who finds it all at once about to assume the mastery over him. I do not know how the struggle might have ended, but it was all at once stopped from without.

"There reached him a rumor that Jennie was already the betrothed wife of a Colonel Pearson, who was her father's partner in business. And, indeed, Colonel Pearson went in and out at Mr. Morton's gate every evening, and the father was known to favor his suit.

"Jennie was not engaged to him, however. Three times she had refused him. The fourth time, in deference to her father's wishes, she had consented to 'think about it' for a week. In truth, Henry had been home ten days, and had not called upon her, and all the hope she had cherished in that direction, and all the weary waiting seemed in vain. When the Colonel's week was nearly out, she heard that Henry was to leave in two days. In a sort of desperation, she determined to accept Colonel Pearson without waiting for the time appointed for her answer. But that gentleman spoiled it all by his own over-confidence.

"For when he called, after Jennie had determined on this course, he found her so full of kindness that he hardly knew how to behave with moderation. And so he fell to flattering her; and, flattering himself at the same time that he knew all the ins and outs of a girl's heart, he complimented her on the many offers she had received.

"'And I tell you what,' he proceeded, 'there are plenty of others that would increase them. There's that young parson—Gilbert, I think they call him—that is visiting his mother, in the unpainted and threadbare-looking little house that stands behind this one. I've actually seen that fellow, in his rusty, musty coat, stop and look after you on the street, and every night, when I go home, he is sitting at the window that looks over this way. The poor fool is in love with you. Only think of it! And I chuckle to myself when I see him, and say, "Don't you wish you could reach so high!" I declare, it's funny.'

"In that one speech Colonel Pearson dashed his chances to pieces. He could not account for the sudden return of winter in Jennie Morton's manner. And all this sunshine was powerless to dispel it, or to bring back the least approach of spring.

"Poor Jennie! You can imagine, Doctor, how she paced the floor all that night. She began to understand something of the courage of Henry Gilbert's heart, and something of the manliness of his motives. All night long she watched the light burning in the room in the widow's house; and all night long she debated the matter until her head ached. She could reach but one conclusion: Henry was to leave the day after to-morrow. If any communication should ever be opened between them, she must begin it. It was as if she had seen him drifting away from her forever, and must throw him a rope. I think even such a woman's-rights man as yourself would hardly justify her, however, in taking any step of the kind."

"I certainly should," said the Doctor.

"But she could not find a way—she had no rope to throw. Again the Colonel, meaning to do anything else but that, opened the way. At the breakfast-table the next morning she received from him a magnificent valentine. All at once she saw her method. It was St. Valentine's day. The rope was in her hand. Excusing herself from breakfast she hastened to her room.

"To send a valentine to the faithful lover was the uppermost thought. But how? She dare not write her name, for, after all, she might be mistaken in counting on his love, or she might offend his prejudices or his pride by so direct an approach. She went fumbling in a drawer for stationery. She drew out a little pine boat that Henry had whittled for her many years before. He had named it 'Hope,' but the combined wisdom of the little boy and girl could not succeed in spelling the name correctly. And here was the little old boat that he had given, saying often afterward that it was the boat they two were going to sail in some day. The misspelt name had been the subject of many a laugh betwen them. Now—but I mustn't be sentimental.

"It did not take Jennie long to draw an exact likeness of the little craft. And that there might be no mistake about it, she spelled the name as it was on the side of the boat: 'HOAP.'

"There was not another word in the valentine. Sealing it up, she hurried out with it, and dropped it in the post-office. No merchant, sending all his fortune to sea in one frail bark, ever watched the departure and trembled for the result of a venture as she did. Spain did not pray half so fervently when the invincible Armada sailed. It was an unuttered prayer—an unutterable prayer. For heart and hope were the lading of the litttle picture-boat that sailed out that day, with no other wind but her wishes in its sails.

"She sat down at her window until she saw Henry Gilbert pass the next street corner on his morning walk to the post-office. Three minutes after, he went home, evidently in a great state of excitement, with her valentine open in his hand. After a while he went back again toward the post-office, and returned. Had he taken a reply?

"Jennie again sought the office. There were people all around with those hideous things they call comic valentines open in their hands. And they actually seemed to think them funny! She had a reply. It did not take her long to find her room and to open it. There was another picture of a boat, but the name on its side read 'DESPAIR.' And these words were added: 'Your boat is the pleasantest, but understanding that there was no vacant place upon it, I have been obliged to take passage on this.' Slowly the meaning forced itself upon her. Henry had fears that she whom he thought engaged was coqueting with him. I think, Doctor, you will hardly justify her in proceeding further with the correspondence?"

"Why not? Hasn't a woman as much right to make herself understood in such a matter as a man? And when the social advantages are on her side the burden of making the advances often falls upon her. Many women do it indirectly and are not censured."

"Well, you know, I am conservative, Doctor, but I'm glad you're consistent. She did send another valentine. I am afraid she strained this figure of speech about the boat. But when everything in the world depends on one metaphor, it will not do to be fastidious. Jennie drew again the little boat with the misspelt name. And this time she added five words: 'The master's place is vacant.'

"And quite late in the afternoon the reply was left at the door: 'I am an applicant for the vacant place, if you will take that of master's mate.'

"Good," cried the Doctor; "I always advocated giving women every liberty in these matters."

"But I will stump you yet, Doctor," said Hubert. That evening Gough was to lecture in the village, and my friend went, not to hear Gough, but to see Miss Jennie Morton at a distance. Somehow in the stupefaction of revived hope he had not thought of going to the house to see her yet. He had postponed his departure and had thrown away his scruples. Knowing how much opposition he would have to contend with, he thought, if he thought at all, that he must proceed with caution. But some time after the lecture began he discovered the Morton family without Jennie! Slowly it dawned upon him. She was at home waiting for him. He was near the front of the church in which the lecture was held, and every inch of aisle was full of people. To get out was not easy. But as he thought of Jennie waiting it became a matter of life and death. If the house had been on fire he would not have been more intent on making his exit. He reached the door, he passed the happiest evening of his life, only to awake to sorrow, for Jennie's father is 'dead set' against the match."

"He has no right to interfere," said the Doctor, vehemently. "You see I stand by my principles."

"But if I tell the story out I am afraid you would not," said Hubert.

"Why, isn't it done?"

"I beg your pardon, Doctor, for having used a little craft. I have much at stake. I have disguised this story in its details. But it is true, I am the hero——"

The Doctor looked quickly toward his daughter. Her head was bent low over her book. Her long hair hung about it like a curtain, shutting out all view of the face. The Doctor walked to the other window and looked out. Hubert sat like a mummy. After a minute Dr. Hood spoke:

"Cornelia!"

She lifted a face that was aflame. Tears glistened in her eyes, and I doubt not there was a prayer in her heart.

"You are a brave girl. I had other plans. You have a right to choose for yourself. God bless you both. But it's a great pity Hu is not a lawyer. He pleads well." So saying, he put on his hat and walked out.

This is the conversation that Hubert repeated to me that day, sitting in his own little parsonage in Allenville. A minute after his wife came in. She had been prescribing for the minor ailments of some poor neighbors. She took the baby from her crib, and bent over her till that same long hair curtained mother and child from sight.

"I think," said Hubert, "that you folks who write love stories make a great mistake in stopping at marriage. The honeymoon never truly begins until conjugal affection is enriched by this holy partnership of loving hearts in the life of a child. The climax of a love story is not the wedding. It is the baby!"

"What do you call her?" I asked.

"Hope," said the mother.

"Hope Valentine," added the father, with a significant smile.

"And you spell the Hope with an 'a,' I believe," I said.

"You naughty Hu," said Mrs. Cornelia. "You've been telling. You think that love story is interesting to others because you enjoy it so much!"

A Man and a Pair of Mules Carried 300 Feet on a Cow-Catcher.

Yesterday morning, at about 10 o'clock, as train No. 4, south-bound from Indianapolis, on the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis railroad, was approaching the first road-crossing south of the starch factory, this side of Edinburg, a man named Abraham Russell, with a wagon and two mules, attempted to pass the track in the face of the locomotive. The consequence was that a collision resulted, and the cow-catcher caught up man, mules, and wagon. The train was running at a speed estimated between twenty and thirty miles an hour. The train having the Westingham atmospheric brakes on, they were applied, and it was stopped in the short space of not quite three hundred feet from the crossing. Upon looking for the man, the officers of the train found him sitting on the fore part of the engine, with a few slight scratches, and the mules were hanging on to the cow-catcher, bellowing at a terrible rate, but upon being extricated, got up, and were found not to be injured in the least. The wagon and harness were the only parts of the team injured; they were torn into slivers. Had it not been for the efficiency of the Westingham brake, the officers think the accident must have proved fatal. The Jeffersonville road is now having the brake applied to all its trains. The team was the property of Jacob Multz, of Edinburg.—Louisville Courier.

Telegraph in Mexico.

It is stated that the telegraph line, from Mier, near the Rio Grande, to Ceralvo, is now completed, and is the commencement of a wire running through Mexico, and forming a connection with the lines of the United States. The Legislatures of the States of Durango and Sinaloa have just authorized a lottery, the profits of which, $30,000, are to be employed in building a telegraph line from Mazatlan, on the Pacific side, to the cities of Sinaloa and Durango. The Federal Government of Mexico, some time ago, abolished all kinds of lotteries except those whose proceeds should be destined for works of public utility, and the profits of which should not exceed one fifth of the amount raised. Under these exceptions the States of Durango and Sinaloa have established the above-mentioned lotteries. It is also stated that the Federal Government of Mexico has just published a decree, offering a donation of $25 for each kilometer of telegraph laid between Tampico and Matamoras. This assistance, which amounts to $40 a mile, does not seem to offer any substantial encouragement for building such a line. It is also stated that a steamer recently brought to Vera Cruz 160 packages of material for building the telegraph line between that city and Minatitlan.

MORMON PROPAGANDISM.—The peculiar tactics resorted to by the Mormon missionaries in England to secure converts are given in the Manchester (Eng.) Guardian. They urge the dark clouds hanging over Europe and the threatening aspect of political affairs in England at the present time, as a reason why the people of the latter country should embrace Mormonism, and by emigrating to Utah escape the terrible devastation, woe and death for all unbelievers. The "saints" were secure in Utah against the machinations of the worldly and secular governments; for, said one of the missionaries in a recent sermon, when a large army entered the Territory some years ago, backed by the whole power of the United States, the threatened danger passed away, and the good things brought by the soldiers fell into the hands of the "saints" for little or nothing. Bacon was bought for 1-4d. and 1-2d. per pound, and the suffering "saints" who had bad teams were enabled to get new ones. And it is by such falsehoods as these that the poorer classes in England are beguiled into embracing Mormonism.

THE Western Reserve Historical Society, of Northern Ohio, have recently received a valuable collection of copies of documents in the English State-paper Office, in reference to the capture by the French, in 1752, of Pickawillany, an English trading-post on Laramie's creek, Shelby county, Ohio. The facts relating to this transaction have been very obscure, some writers placing the date of the capture in 1751, others in 1753, while some doubted whether the occurrence ever took place at all. The British Government, on the application of Mr. Motley for these papers, ordered copies to be made, free of expense, of all the letters and documents in the archives that related to the affairs in the Ohio country about the period mentioned. The collection comprises hitherto unpublished letters and reports of Governor Robert Dinwiddie, of Virginia, letters from the Lords of Trade to Dinwiddie, and letters and a manuscript journal of Captain William Trent, agent to the Western Indians. This journal, commencing June, 1752, gives a full account of the attack on Pickawillany, and also various new facts of historical importance in regard to the Twightwee and Shawanese Indians.

SENATOR WILSON proposes to establish a national standard for determining the quality and character of the materials used in the construction of all vessels according to their merits. He has introduced into the Senate a bill for this purpose, which provides for the appointment by the President of a commission of five members possessed of the requisite scientific and practical skill, who are to examine and certify the rating of all registered vessels, the owners of which shall require this service at their hands. As an inducement to comply with the act, a deduction of five per cent is to be allowed from the duties on all goods imported on vessels inspected and found to have the national standard rating provided for.

THE LUMBER TRADE OF CANADA, it is stated, has been extended beyond prudent limits, and the directors of the Bank of Toronto have issued a circular, announcing that it would be for the interest of all parties engaged in it to curtail their operations. The valuable forests covering large portions of Canada are being so rapidly cut away, that it is believed the supply in the course of a few years must be exhausted. The production of sawed lumber for an overstocked market, it is asserted, has the simple result of giving away the forests without recompense—it is said to be questionable whether in some cases even the cost of labor has been obtained for lumber shipped.

From the South Bend Register.

A prominent physician in this county hands us the following letter received by him from an individual who pretends to practice medicine in a Michigan town, not a thousand miles from here. It is worthy of publication, as showing to what devices and "ways that are dark," quack doctors have to resort to get their diplomas. It is hardly necessary to say that his request in the following letter was not complied with:

DR———SIR: I take this opportunity to inform you that I am well and doen a prety good business in Praction Medcine I have the Best cind of luck mr. ——— Sir I wont a favor of you if you pleas I wunt you to send me a copy of your diplomea and where your name is assorted put my name in I have an objic in view not to do Eney body harm but to doe good if you will fulfil my request I will pay you well mr ——— I beseach you to send me a true Copy of your Diplomea gest like yours but put my name in where yours is git a big sheat of paper and rite it on Send it right of if you pleas and gest as soon as I git it I will send you a good present if you Ever a kindness doe it to me if you pleas

AN AMERICNN'S EXPERIENCE IN PARIS DURING THE SIEGE.—A letter received at Washington from Paris by a prominent official, written by an American who has stayed there during the siege, gives a graphic account of life in the French metropolis under the present circumstances. Affairs are said to be in a most deplorable condition. Coal gave out some time ago, hence there are no such things as light or fire in the city. Even the most wealthy classes suffer from want of the commonest necessaries of life, while among the poor and destitute the suffering is beyond description. Even the most sanguine do not expect that the city can hold out against the Germans beyond February 1, unless by providential interposition. As an ininstance illustrating the scarcity of food, the letter gives the following rates for the articles mentioned: Rats readily bring 5 francs a pair; cats are considered cheap at $4 each; mule meat is scarce at $1.50 a pound; while turkey, on the day the letter was mailed, brought 250 francs. As a general thing, the people are said to be despondent. Trochu, it is said, has lost his popularity, and has come to be regarded as a total failure. He endeavored to leave Paris by balloon a short time ago, under the plea of gathering an army outside, but was prevented, it being shown that such conduct on his part would cause the people to lose what confidence they had left. Trochu himself, it is stated, has become completely spoiled by the praise lavished upon him, and has come to think that he only can save France, and consequently will listen to no advice or pay attention to instructions. A significant political feature is said to be observed in a number of the nobility joining the Mobile Guards as privates, preferring this course to accepting commissions in the Republican armies, on the ground that the latter would in some way commit them to the French Republic.

THE NAMES OF PAPER.—Printers are sometimes asked why various kinds of papers obtained the peculiar names they bear. Here is the reason: In ancient times, when comparatively few people could read, pictures of every kind were much in use where writing would now be employed. Every shop, for instance, had its sign, as well as every public house; and those signs were not then, as they are often now, only painted upon a board, but were invariably actual models of the thing which the sign expressed—as we still occasionally see some such sign as a bee-hive, a tea-canister, or a doll, and the like. For the same reason printers employed some device, which they put upon the title-pages at the end of their books. And paper-makers also introduced marks by way of distinguishing the paper of their manufacture from that of others; which marks, becoming common, naturally gave their names to different sorts of paper. A favorite paper mark between 1540 and 1560 was the jug or pot, and would appear to have originated the term pot paper. The foolscap was a later device, and does not appear to have been nearly of such long continuance as the former. It has given place to the figure of Britannia, or that of a lion rampant, supporting the cap of liberty on a pole. The name, however, has continued, and we still denominate paper of a particular size by the name of "foolscap." Post paper seems to have derived its name from the post horn, which at one time was his distinguishing mark. It does not appear to have been used prior to the establishment of the General Postoffice (1670), when it became a custom to blow a horn—to which circumstance, no doubt, we may attribute its introduction. Bath past is so named after that fashionable city.—London Printers' Register.

THE statistics of Lowell for 1870, just published, give the following information in reference to the manufacturing establishments of that city: Capital stock invested in manufacturing companies, $13,650,000; number of mills, 50; spindles, 526,710; looms, 12,940; persons employed, 14,898, consisting of 6,035 males and 8,863 females; weekly product, 2,240,000 yards of cotton goods, 21,667 yards of woolen goods, 35,000 yards of carpeting, 2,500 shawls, 10,900 dozens of hosiery. Raw materials used per week: 612,000 pounds of cotton, 97,000 pounds of clean wool. Goods dyed and printed per annum, 51,691,200 yards. There were also used per annum, 39,890 tons of anthracite coal, 18,100 bushels of charcoal, 1,875 cords of wood; 102,576 gallons of oil, 1,980,000 pounds of starch, and 1,275 barrels of flour. The steam power consists of 52 engines, with an aggregate force of 4,430 horse-power. The manufacturing corporations support an hospital for the use of sick and disabled operatives.

THE New York Express says: "Accidents of a painful and fatal character occur in the Hoosac Tunnel at short intervals, through the use of nitro-glycerine. These accidents may be the result of carelessness or of ignorance, or of both combined. They are too frequent to be continued, whatever the cause, and measures should be taken to put a stop to them. If nitro-glycerine cannot be employed in works of usefulness and importance, without a tolerably sure risk of killing dozens of men every day or two, something less effective, but safer, had better be employed instead."

Mysteries of the Toilet.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

With your kind permission I have a few words to say to that Boston girl who asks the following questions of her girls:

"Could you love a man who wore false hair on his head when he had enough of his own?—who painted his face and improved his form as you improve (?) yours?—who pinched his feet with small shoes, his hands with small gloves, his waist with corsets, and then, as if he had not already deformed himself enough, tied a huge bustle to his back, and thrust tiny mountains of wire into his bosom?"

I am disgusted with you, Boston, you, or any other girl, who follows the fashions, and then rails about them; for there is not a doubt that you are the very personification of style, from the jute switch that surmounts your cranium to the dainty French boots which torture your tiny feet. I hold that it is everybody's duty to look as well as they can, or their circumstances will admit of; and what would be said of any girl or woman who did not arrange her hair after the prevailing style?—although there are plenty of ladies who do that, with only their luxuriant tresses, without getting any credit for it, as every one says, "What a splendid switch;"—whose boots and gloves did not set neatly?—who wore ill-fitting dresses? And suppose we do wear bustles? When they are properly adjusted, instead of being a deformity, they are very becoming. There is nothing injurious about them, and we must have some variety. Women dress to please the men; and there is not a man in Christendom who has the moral courage to appear in public with a lady dressed, however modestly and sensibly, if in disregard of the prevailing fashion.

And when you come right down to the nicety of the point, and talk about getting up one's self to look pretty, the men use quite as much deception for that purpose as the women, and quite as much money. Your gentleman pays a barber by the week to keep his hair and whiskers in order, and to brush and clean and fix him up, and turn him out in the morning fit for his place of business, and at night presentable for the evening; and a tailor by the year to keep him well dressed. And you just go to these tailors—to the "artist tailors" in Temple place, in your own city, for instance—and see what they will you, if you can persuade them to tell, of stays and corsets, padded chests, shoulders, and even legs, to which the "tiny mountains of wire," which, perhaps, some ladies wear—although, for my own part, I never saw such a thing—are not a circumstance.

Men quite as often use cosmetics as women. They wash in borax and lemon juice; use endless quantities of glycerine and sweet oil; and can tell the girls secrets about sleeping in kid gloves and poulticing hands and face to make them white. Perhaps you have not a big brother. I have, and a big cousin, both of whom delight in looking as irresistible as possible; and some of the mysteries of the toilet into which these lords of creation have initiated us girls would astonish you. Why, bless you, Boston, we didn't even know there was such a thing as "Pearltina" until they told us. "Most all the students use it," says cousin Tom, who is at Amherst. "Can't get along without it—it makes them so fair." And then brother Jack tells who buys cosmetics at his drug store—and it is not the girls.

I know for a certainty of more men that paint their faces than I do women—really paint, pink and white; and you can't find one lady in five hundred that does that. Almost every lady sometimes uses a little innocent toilet powder, to counteract the effect of soap, and makes no secret of it; but that is a very different thing from poison paint.

Do you say it is only young clerks and students that are so vain? You are mistaken. Vanity is not confined to a class. I have heard a lady say, who for years kept a large boarding-house for gentlemen, and at different times numbered professional men, railroad officials, insurance agents, drummers, mechanics, etc., among her patrons, that nearly every toilet table was supplied with paint, and she knew they used it. And no harm in it either, only this universal painting makes one almost fancy that "civilization is a failure, and the Caucasian played out."

I like to see fair play. The men need not blame the women for what they are continually doing themselves. "Could you love a man who pinches his feet?" I should just like to see Boston or any other girl find a man to love who does not wear boots a full size too small for him. Did you ever see a man's bare foot? I wish you could see brother Jack's. They look about as much like a lady's soft, white, pretty, perfectly shaped feet as they do like mud-turtles. Corns here, dislocations there, bunions on the joints, and the toes piled up on top of another, with the ends turned under. And I know, by the sly talk I hear between him and his chums about ointments and corn plasters, that he is not an exception.

After making the few follies of the gentler sex their own, in an aggravated degree, these male bipeds assert their manliness by chewing tobacco, smoking cigars—or worse, a nasty pipe—by staggering home several times a week the worse for liquor, by keeping disreputable company of the opposite sex to their own, indulging in fast horses, betting at races, playing at billiards, and squandering their money generally. And it is very little appreciation the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters get for keeping themselves nice, pure, dainty and pretty, aud for doing everything in their power to make home pleasant and attractive for them. Boston had better let the men fight their own battles, as they are quite able to do, and if she has anything smart to say, let it be on the other side of the question. To be sure her article would not stand so good a chance of getting printed; for anything down on the women every editor will give a conspicuous place to, and every man will chuckle over and read it aloud to his lady friends within hearing, and mark the place and send it to those at a distance. Whether my letter is read or not, I have freed my mind, and that is one satisfaction to

The griefs that fall to every share,
The heavier sorrow that life brings,
The heart can nerve itself to bear—
Great sorrows are half holy things.

But for the ills each hour must make,
The cares with every day renewed;
It seems scarce worth the while to take Such little things with fortitude.

And he before whose wakened might
The strongest enemies must fall,
Is overcome by foes so slight,
He scorns to hold them foes at all.

AUBURN IND., ... Feb. 23, 1871

GRANT declares himself in favor of redeeming the national character. Now if the President would commence doing work looking to the redemption of his own we would have more faith in him.

ONE of the most prominent Ku-Klux-outrages, fished up by the Congressional Committee, is that of a white man shooting a negro for committing a rape upon his little daughter, ten years of age.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that Grant has been constantly receiving presents since he was nominated for President, he is by no means an "exhausted receiver." From all accounts he is full upon nearly every occasion.

THERE is little doubt now that at the conclusion of the present armistice a premanent peace will be signed between France and Prussia. The people of the former country recognize the hopelessness of their cause and deeming the hour arrived when discretion should take the part of valor, they are ready to accept any terms the victor offers.

THE new Congress is to have a genuine representative of the African race. The Hon. R. B. Elliott, member from the Fourth South Carolina District, appeared on the floor, and was introduced by Hodge, his white predecessor. The Radicals, as a general thing, did not embrace him with the warmth extended to Rainey and Long, who are nearly white.

WHEN it was reported that the Tennessee, with the San Domingo commissioners on board, had been lost at sea, the first impression upon the public mind was that Charles Summer had concealed a keg of powder with a slow match in the hold; but the idea was abandoned as soon as it was remembered that the commissioners had two negroes among them.

THERE is a slight difference of opinion between Radicals as to what are the leading characteristics of the Radical party. Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, says "the Republican is essentially an honest party." Donn Piatt, of the Cincinnati Commercial, says "the Republican party is the party of organized rascality." Both the witnesses are Radicals of the first water, but Donn's testimony is corroborated by the facts, and Smith's is not.

"ETERNAL VIGILANCE" is said to be "the price of liberty." The women suffrage agitators seem to think that the price of the ballot is eternal talking. The last "big talk," as Red Cloud would call it, was between the Governor of Missouri and a delegation of strong-minded, who fired a volley of words. The Govener appears to have born the ordeal with becoming fortitude, and in response to there address, informed them that his mind was not made up on the question as he desired to satisfy himself of the effect of the doctrine upon "family relations." Upon this, the delegation raised the seige and retired in good order.

GRANT has the weakness of all small men to be on the winning side. When the war broke out between France and Prussia he openly sympathised with the former, and when Faver and his confederates proclaimed the republic, Grant's friend, Washburne, immediately granted it recognition. As the French suffered disaster, the President lost his admiration for French republicanism, and finally when Paris surrendered, he seized upon a flimsy pretext to smouther with flattery the imperial ruler of the Germans. The Germans, however, are too shrewd to be gulled by any such trickery. They understand the devices of a demagogue too well to place much faith in our tricky and coquettish chief magistrate

A New Version of an Old Story.

I commenced being good at a very early age, and built myself up on the best models. I was yet an infant when I read the affecting story of hacking down the cherry tree by George Washington, and his manly statement to his father that he could not tell a lie. I read the story and it filled me with a desire to surpass him. I was not going to allow any such boy as George Washington, if did afterward get to be President, to excel me in the moralities. Immediately I seized an axe, and cut down the most valuable cherry tree my father had; and more, I dug up the roots and burned the branches, so that by no means could the variety be produced, and I went skating one Sunday, so that I might confess the two faults, and be wept over and be forgiven on account of my extreme truthfulness. The experiments were, I regret to say, partial failures. I was very much like Washington, but the trouble was, my father did not resemble George Washington's father, which was essential to the success of my scheme. "Did you cut down the cherry tree?" ask he.—"Father, I cant tell a lie: I did it with my little hatchet." I answered, striking the proper attitude for the old gentleman to shed tears on me. But he didn't shed.—He remarked that he had rather I had told a thousand lies than to have cut down that particular tree, and he whipped me till I was in a state of exasperated rawness. My skating idea was no less a failure. I broke through the ice that Sunday and was pulled out with difficulty—and a boat-hook. As I lay sick for a month with a fever, I didn't get a chance to get off the Washington remark—Mark Twain.

A YOUNG Canadian, being ill, took it into his head to try the effect of medicine prescribed for him by his physician upon a favorite cat, and was startled to see poor pussy very promptly fall over and die. Similar results following experiments on two other cats, he determined to throw away the medicine and dismiss the doctor. He had been taking the medicine three times a day for a week.

ANOTHER decision of the railroad law of Indiana, which will prove of great interest in the entire State, has just been made in Wayne Common Pleas Court. William L. John brought suit to enjoin the collection of a two per cent. tax on a county subscription in aid of the construction of the Richmond and Fort Wayne Railroad. The Court held the railroad law of the State constitutional, and ordered the collection of the tax.

THE failure to hear any news from the Tennessee, the Government vessel upon which the Commissioners and party sailed for San Domingo, causes great uneasiness in Washington. It is said that the she was never at sea before, this being her first trip. She was completely overhauled before starting, and was supplied with new machinery, engines and boilers. With fair weather and her machinery keeping in good order, it was calculated that she would make the trip in eight days. The theory seems to be that her machinery got out of gear, and that she was compelled to proceed under sail, in which case it is thought it would probably take her twenty-five days to make the trip. The principal mystery seems to be why it is she has not been spoken, in as much as her route for the entire trip was along the path which is followed by our entire coastwise and gulf trade

THE TENNESSEE

The great anxiety felt throughout the Country, as to the fate of the Tennessee, the vessel containing the Commission to the Island of San Domingo, is at last broken by goods news of her safety.

The telegraph reports that the Commission arrived from Samana Bay outher second the inst. Every one connected with the party are in excellent health. The want of coaling facilities detained the ship six days at Samana. The commission found the inhabitants of the peninsula very generelly in favor of annexation. A full investigation made in regard to the ownership of the land around the harbor, showed that no United States official is involved in any private transaction there whatever. Fobeus and his associates, and Sulivan have a lease, at a nominal price, of all the available water front for large vessels around the harbor of Samana. There is no valuable mineral in that section The commission landed here this forenoon, and was formally received by President, Baez.

Mr. Wade explained the character and object of the commission. Baez and the Cabinet gave a cordial welcome.

President Baez and that peace and a stable government would follow the union with the United States; the people were all anxious for union.

HORRIBLE MASSACRE.

A gentleman traveling in Texas writes:

Last Friday, with a couple of companions, I started from the pleasant little village of Decatur to this place, about two o'clock, P. M. We jogged along until about one hour after night, when we arrived at the residence of William Freeman, an old pioneer, where we spent a cheerful night, and again pursued our journey.

We had not traveled futher than a mile when we received the sad intelligence that a family had been massacred about two miles above. We hastened on to the place of the awful tragedy—and may God forbid that my eyes should ever again look upon such another scene as I there witnessed. The first victim was a little boy some eight or ten years old, about forty yards from the house, stone dead. His left arm was cut out from his body, exhibiting to his full view his heart and lungs; his bowels cut out and then scalped.

We then repaired to the house and the first victim that met our gaze, near beside the entrance, was a girl about nine or ten years old wrapped, or rather tumbled, in a mass of bed-clothes, etc., with one naked hand and arm elevated. I took hold of her hand, but found that she too was dead and wounded in several places. Next was a lady, some sixty years of age, by the name of Keenan, shot through her breast with two arrows that passed through her body, suffering all that humanity could suffer. Her scalp was taken off, too.

Next was a lovely girl, three years old, nursing a babe; and when it was taken from her arms, the poor child said she "did not want Dolly to starve." On examination it was found that (she little girl) had been lanced through the breast, the weapon entering on the left and passing through the right. Near by hre another girl about ten years of age, with her head beaten and bruised in a most brutal manner, stiff and cold, almost lifeless. The Indians had beaten her head until she was probably thought to be dead, and pitched her out of the window, where she had lain all night in a senseless conditon. Then we turned to a little boy calling for water—he was lanced, the wound entering above the breastsbone and passing out below.

The next and last was a Mrs. Pashoal lying beside the bed on her face, weltering in gore. On examination she was found to be dead, with several wounds that had been inflicted in different portions of the body. One little boy was lanced in the breast, who made his escape during the night, and after daylight made his way to a neighbor's house about one mile off. Two little children were left in the bed unhurt. One of the wounded has since died. This leaves four dead and four wounded; two of the wounded will probably recover. Mrs. Keenan says there was eight or nine Indians that entered the house about two hours after night—after they had retired for the night—and committed this brutal massacre. In addition to the murders the Indians had violated the females and mutilated the person of the boy. There were no men about the place. The dead were promptly buried in a decent manner as possible, and the wounded removed to where they could be properly cared for.

County Temperance Convention.

The friends of Temperance seem determined to accomplish a good work in this county, as they are taking vigorous measures not only to arrest the spread and increase of the curse of Intemperance, but to crush out and abolish its presence from our midst. Yesterday, a large number were present from different parts of the county, at the M. E. Church in this place, and we give the following as the report of their doings.

The Convention met persuant to call and organized by electing Mr. Gib. McFarland, President; Lewis Holbrook, vice President, and D. D. Moody Sec'y. Vocal and Instrumental music, by Auburn choir, prayer by Rev. S. B. Ward. On motion of J. P. Widney a committee of three was appointed, by the presiding officer to take charge of, and report all resolutions submitted for the consideration of the Convention. Adjourned until 1½ P. M.

The Convention met at 1½ P. M. Music by the Auburn and Butler choir alternately.

On motion of John P. Widney an executive committee consisting of one from each Township as follows:

Jackson, Samuel Cornell; Concord, Solomon Barney; Newville, Sol. DeLong; Stafford, Wm. Wannemaker; Wilmington, P. B. Nimmins; Union, Auburn. Michael Long; Waterloo, S. Bassett; Richland North, Wm. Parks; Richland South, James Graham; Fairfield, Willard Childs; Smithfield, Edward Barker; Franklin, Henry Jones; Troy Andrew Casebeer, was appointed and requested to meet at the Law office of Moody & Peterson, in Auburn, the 4th, of April, at one o'clock P. M. for the purpose of perfecting a county Temperance organization.

Whereas, The sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is the fountain from which the dark and turbid stream of Intemperance flows out upon society, paralyzing industry, turning happy homes into desolation, purity into licentiousness, virtue into crime, wealth into pauperism bearing upon its pestiferious current taxation, poverty, disease and death; pervading by its corrupting influence, alike, the ballot box, the legislative councils and the Courts of Justice. And whereas, an evil thus fundamental in its character can only be controlled by action that is prompt, decisive and radical, Therefore.

Resolved, 1st. That we will use all honorable means to limit the manufacture, sale and use of all intoxicating beverages, giving especial attention to the suppression of those licensed dens of inequity, the grog shops of our land.

Resolved, 2d. That we, as members of the rival political parties, pledge ourselves to use all proper means to secure the nomination and election of thorough temperance men to fill the offices of our country; that we will vote for no one in the nominating Conventions, whose record in this respect is not clear and unquestionable, thus giving to temperance the importance it demands, by making it the paramount issue.

Resolved, 3d. That for the purpose of united and efficient action we recommend the organization of a county Temperance Society with such officers, and subject to such regulations as may best attain the end we have in view, namely, the redemption of humanity from the curse of intemperance.

Convention adjourned to meet at Waterloo on the 18th of May at eleven o'clock A. M. On motion the Secretary was requested to publish these proceedings in the Waterloo Press and Auburn COURIER.

D. D. MOODY, Sec'y.

Auburn Courier.

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Bring your Job Work to the Courier office.

Gen J. B. Magruder died at Galveston, Texas, on Sunday morning last.

A man was robbed of $18.000, on Sunday last, in Cincinnati.

The best time to catch soft water is when it is raining hard. Rather parodoxical but nevertheless true.

We are enabled this week to record a run-a-way on our streets of a country team, which did but little damage.

Fort Wayne has an oil factory. Any one who doubts this will have ample evidence of the fact on entering the city.

For books, stationery, wall paper, &c., go to Stockbridges, on Columbia street, between Calhoun and Clinton.

In Fort Wayne bonnets are worn "high, with a reef in the maintopsail and a spanker over the chignon."

"Hurry, Mother," said a little boy the other day who had cut his finger, "hurry it's leaking."

Using tobacco has killed an old Virginia lady, aged 100 years. When will people learn to let the poison alone?

Change.—The post-office, generally known as Iba, situated on the L. S. & M. S. Railroad, in this county, have been changed in name to Sedan.

A fellow, in this State, put one end of a gun barrel in the fire, then looked down the muzzle to see whether it was loaded. A coroner's jury decided that his suspicions were correct.

The main building of the Howe Sewing Machine, at Peru, being destroyed by fire, there is an effort being made to have them locate elsewhere. How would Auburn do, gentleman?

A man by the name of Miller, died very suddenly at Columbia City, the other day, from heart disease He was sitting at the dinner table at the time, and was in apparent good health.

Rev. H. H. Sandoe, of Liberty Center, Ohio, will preach in the St. John Reformed Church, next Sabbath evening. The services will be in English and all are cordially invited.

A rich man was presented with a bill for the tenth time. "Why, that's a pretty round bill." "Yes," was the reply, "I have sent it round often enough to make it appear so, and I have called now to have it squared."

The following recipe for the toothache, it is said, never fails to cure: Bind a roasted onion the pulse of the wrist, and it will knock the spots out of the able-boiled tooth ache in short metre. No extra charge for this.

The person who insisted that he saw snow flakes as large as a saucer the other day carried an empty pint flask in a side pocket. This fact will, probably, account for the immense size of the snowflakes.

A young Hoosier once said to a Hoosieress, "Sal, is there anybody courtin' yu now?" And Sal replied, "Well Sam, there is a fellow sorter courtin' and sorter not, but I reckon it is more sorter not that sorter.

A girl at Springfield, Ohio, who danced with her corset pulled up to the last hole, was the next day in a hearse that was pulled up to the last hole that was dug in the graveyard.

The Northern Indianian commences an obituary headed "In Memorium," thus "Against expenditures in honor of the dead, heaven has uttered no prohibition, and earth is not injured, but benefitted by them."

The perpetrator of the following, we are happy to say, is deceased. He was bled to death with hair pins and afterwards drowned in catnip tea: "When are babies not babies? When they are robbin redbreasts."

Mayer House.—We have no hesitancy in pronouncing this one of the best hotels in the State. Mr. Bull, the proprietor, is our ideal of a landlord, clever and accommodating, and all are comfortably provided for. who make themselves guests of this house.

They have a hen in Montgomery county, Ind., that during the past season hatched forty chickens, at three settings, raised thirty-seven, and after dismissing her last brood, laid forty-two eggs before going into winter quarters.

California must be a nice place to live; spring is now coming on, and for over three weeks the cry of "Strawberries," has been heard on the streets. Just think of it, who would want to eat strawberries and cream this time of year. Sour grapes.

A prominent former, of Allen County, finding himself hard pushed, these hard times, was forced to sell his best team. He offered a whole rig—two horses, harness and wagon and whip—everything complete, at auction, and realized forty-five dollars. Splendid team that.

Mossawell & Fowler, near the Aveline House, on Calhoun street, keep all the late styles of collars. A new kind has just been introduced which gives the purchaser a chance for a prize. Buy a box and you may be lucky enough to get a nice article. No brass jewelry.

In order to get an enemy, lend a man a small sum of money for a day. Call on him in a week for it. Wait two months. In three months insist upon his paying you. He will get angry, denounce you, and ever after speak of you in abusive terms. We have seen this experiment tried repeatedly, and never knew it to fail.

We are finally in receipt of the Laporte Argus, the very best county paper published in the State. It's Democratic too, and that is what gives it its superority. The local department is also abundant, and Wadsworth's election, would have been a calamity, surely, for no one can give forth that rare spiciness and vigor with such modest grace as Mr. Don't forget to send it regularly.

Remember.—Don't forget the dance, at Union Hall to-morrow, Friday evening. Its going to be nice, and everybody should be anxiously waiting the event. Good music with happy, glowing faces is sure to present a scene that will be interesting and enjoyable.

The spring trade is just on the eve of opening. We would, then, suggest to those who do not generally invest in printers' ink that systematic and judicious advertising secures patronage, and ask, would it not be well to spend a few dollars in informing the readers of the Courier what you have to sell?

The following is a Duchman's reason that the world stands still: "I has all de wile saidt dat dish wurld doosh never go roundt anny more never. Pekause if it shooldt de vater vod go splidt from ouden de oshen und mine house be on de back side off mine barn and mine yardt be out by de back door, don't it?"

According to the Terre Haute papers; the pure country milk furished to the people of that town is made of two quarts of water one tablespoon of corn starch, one teaspoonful of salt, white of four eggs, one ounce of pure olive oil, one ounce of white sugar, beaten with a switch swiftly for twenty minutes.

We cannot too earnestly impress upon the minds of our people the importance of encouraging all those who seek our place, with the view of establishing manufactories Railways and manufactories are the great powers which bring wealth and prosperity. Far better that individuals should make personal sacrifices than lose sight of these advantages.

Warm Baths.—That popular knight of the Razor, Fred C. Meyers, who has no equal in the state, has fitted up several bath rooms in excellent style, and any of our friends visiting Fort Wayne, desiring a luxurious healthful bath, should certainly go to Fred's. His shaving saloon is between the Myer and Aveline House, on Calhoun street. He shaves, dresses hair and shampoo's in apple pie order.

It appears that the Ft. Wayne College has never had such prosperity as at present It may not be known to all that besides bringing up all the ordinary studies of a College to the highest efficiency, the College has a Commercial College in its Curriculum, managed by Prof Gladding. He has three classes in book-keeping and penmanship; besides there is also a Conservatory of music, managed by Prof. Virgil.

Whistling.—Next to laughing, whistling is one of the most philosophical things in which a fellow of good spirits can indulge. Whistling is a popular prescription for keeping up the courage—it might better be said good spirits. It oils the wheels of care, supplies the place of sunshine. A man who whistles has a good heart under his shirt front. Such a man not only works more willingly, but he works constantly Mean or avaricious men never whistle.

The autocrats of fashion have decreed that frizzed hair hanging low over the forehead is no longer stylish. The present simple style is alike graceful and elegant moreover, becoming to all; drawn loosely back from the brow in Pompadore style suits all except the extremely high or projecting forehead. The front hair can be crimped, but no longer tightly frizzed. The chatelaine braids have wholly taken the place of the chignon.

Our doctors are promised plenty of work, if present fashions prevail. The ladies go with their dress turned away at the throat sufficiently to allow a current of air to play constantly over the lungs. The result of this imprudent style of dress must be an alarming increase of lung disease, colds and coughs, many of which may lead to consumption. To fashion, indeed, are due about half the ills to which woman kind is heir.

A large number of buildings will be put up in this place, the coming season—many of them of a superior character. Many of our older settlers have come to the conclusion that they can afford better and more substantial improvements, and intend to make them this year. These evidences of growth and advancement are most gratifying, and we take it as a proof that we are bound to become something more in keeping with a county seat than we have been in the past.

We notice a number of our exchanges are already croaking about the fruit crop—that the peaches and other tender fruits have been killed by the late storms. The fact is, it is all guess-work, and they really don't know much about it. They suppose the cold weather or sleet has been sufficient to accomplish the end, and perhaps are corroborated by some one, who, without even an examination, declares it to be true. We have heard such reports ourselves, and place no confidence in them.

There are a great many mendicants, at present, traveling over the country. Some of them, no doubt, tell a tale of sorrow, which is strictly true; but others, again, are imposters. As a general thing it looks questionable for a party to come into a locality five or six hundred miles from home, to raise the means which his own immediate neighborhood would be most likely to supply, were he is an object worthy of their consideration. It is the duty of every locality to look after its own poor, before help to any great degree is extended elsewhere.

Spruce Up.—If you get a moment to spare, spruce up; put the gate on its hinge; put a little paint on the picket fence you built last year; trim up about the door yard; make it cozy and inviting. Don't say you cant find time to attend to these things. The fact is, you have no right to be slovenly. Your wife and children will be happier, your farm will sell for more money in the market, and will be worth more to you at home, if you devote an odd hour now and then to sprucing up.

A neighboring editor has got it awfully. He attended a wedding, and says when he saw the sweet bride he felt "like going into the shadowed gardens of imagination and gathering there the rarest roses of language—roses half asleep in their buds, and half awake as they swelled to bloom from slumber—and adorning her wedding wreath; already full with the blessings and repeated blessings and bridal offerings of loving friends." We have attended lots of weddings, but they never made us feel like that. Get out with your "shadowed gardens of imagination," and try to be a man.

Done For.—A verdant youth from the country, with a greater desire for whisky than his stamps would cover, pawned his gold watch for a quart of whisky in Fort Wayne the other day. After passing the salubrious, hilarious and torpid stages of a systematic drunk, upon his sober second thought, he wished to redeem the watch, but the watch and the holder was "non comatibus." The young man now talks of joining a temperance society. He will never see his watch again; so much for a drunk on a quart of whisky.

In order to convince a customer who did not feel disposed to pay the price charged for making a coat, a mathmatical tailor placed the following figurers before the astonished customer, and triumphantly asked, "Would you do that work for eight dollars?" Basting 782 stitches stitches on edges, 5,500; do. filling same and faces, 7,114, making pockets, &c., 1,082; stitching collar, 3,056; do. seams, 5,359; making button-holes, 11450. Total, 25 243 stitches. The price was payed without any more grumbling.

Our friend George went into a resturant, at Fort Wayne, the other day and ordered dinner and with it "two soft-boiled eggs." Sambo went off to the kitchen, but soon returned and asked, "Mass' Boss, did you want dem eggs scrambled?" "No," said George "I want them soft-boiled." "All right, sar," and off he trotted again. In a few moments he loomed again, and remarked in a most pursuasive tone "Mass' Boss, you better have dem eggs scrambled." "What the d—l do you mean?" roared George. "Well," said Sambo, "Mass' Boss, I'll tell you; dem eggs ain't very fresh, and they'll look better scrambled." George cancelled the order for hen fruit in toto.

The Laporte Argus gives an account of a new way to raise the wind as practised in that city, thusly: A new dodge to raise money was practiced upon one of our citizens at the Teegarden House, one evening last week. A party of showman were engaged in conversation, and one of them made use of the word infortunate. Two of the party, who understood the game, laughed at the speaker, and said there was no such a word in the English language. A dispute followed, during which the parties made bets between themselves. A bystander becoming interested, offered to wager $50 that the word could not be found in a lexicon. The bet was promptly taken and the money "staked." A dictionary was brought, and to the surprise of the victimized individual, the word was found, although obsolete, and victim was minus $50.

Mutilated Currency.—The post master of Hillsboro' N. C., was recently sued in the United States Court by a person who had presented a two dollar bill, United States Currency, considerably mutilated, in payment for stamps. The post-master refused to take the bill, and the citizen sued him for two dollars damages. The Court gave judgement against the postmaster for the damages claimed and costs, amounting to about ninety dollars. It was proved the Post-office Department had issued orders that post masters should receive mutilated currency for postage when offered; the Court besides held that all departments of the Government were bound to sustain the currency of the Government, and the fact of a bill being more or less mutilated, was no justification for its being refused by any official of the government.—Lynchburg News.

Railroad Matters.

There is still considerable interest evinced in Railroad matters on the part of our citizens and everything looks even more favorable than they did last week. The selection and adoption of the line running through Defiance and this place is taken as a matter of fact, and is the subject of general conversation every where. Several prominent railroad men passing over the road, the other day, looked upon this as the final decision and were confident of its speedy construction. There is much to gain and nothing to lose by our county, and we want to see every body interested in the movement.

There seems to be considerable maneuvering in regard to the Eel River road, there being several schemes proposed for its final success. The impression has prevailed for a week past that the Central Michigan is at work to get control of it proposing to join it here with the Saginaw road, and thence north on that line. In fact the subject was brought before the Board of Directors of the latter at their meeting at Jackson, last week, but nothing definite was determined upon. We would regard this as a great calamity to the original project, and hope that everything will be done to quash any such movement. We are decidedly in favor of having the road clear through, as at first proposed, and we would be in favor of withdrawing all aid and encouragement until a positive decision is made to this end. We trust that another week will give us more definite and favorable news in this direction.

Home! Sweet Home!

Home, if it is what it should be, it is the most desirable place on earth; there is no name that sounds half so sweet as home, to the tried, troubled, toiling man. There are thousands of families that have no home, in every large city, and in every town and hamlet in the country, many who have no excuse for not having one, and a good one too. Almost every man who has his health, can, in a few years, save enough to lay the foundation of a permanent and comfortable home. It is the duty of every head of a family to try and secure a home for that family—one according to his station and means. We do not mean to be understood that a man should try and go beyond his means, better keep a little behind than to go a little ahead, but it is better for every man to commence at the earliest possible moment to procure a home. A man always feels more a man when he lives in his own house, and he feels that every nail he drives is adding to the value of his own property; he takes more interest in fixing up around his own place than he would around a place he rented. Go into a neighborhood where every man owns his home, and you will, as a general rule, find that the yards and walks look neater and more tidy than where they are rented tenements. At the present time a man can buy property, paying a small sum down, obtain credit for the balance. There is no excuse now for a man to remain long without a home, subject to the trouble and expence of frequent moves, which are expensive, and very distructive to Household furniture.

See proceedings of Temperance Convention in another column.

R. D. Dumm and J. W. Henderson, Esqs., have sold their interest in the Fort Wayne Sentinel to Mr. Burt of Van Wert, Ohio.

Something Beautiful.

We were fortunate enough to witness the rendition of "Queen Esther" by the Beethoven Society, at Fort Wayne, last Saturday evening, and cannot refrain from pronouncing it the finest effort in the musical art ever put forth in that city. It was entirely made up of home talent,—no big guns from other cities to put in an appearance and carry off the palm—but even from amidst her own citizens did she yield forth all that was required to produce this cantata in most excellent manner. We have never heard the great Nilsson, but we think we could not possibly be more satisfactorily and comfortably entertained in a musical way than we were, at the above representation. It was also pleasant to notice that not a blunder or mistake occurred during the entire representation, and that each character seemed peculiarly suited to the role they assumed. There was worth and excellence in the whole performance and Fort Wayne should be proud of the talent that has so recently been developed, and made such proficiency in the musical art in her midst. If any of our readers should ever have an opportunity to hear this excellent society, we would advise them to attend, and enjoy a musical treat the like of which they may never see again.

Gone.—Peter Brandon Martin Wixon and Emmett Baxter, convicted at the last session of the Civil Circuit Court, departed last Monday morning for Michigan City, in company with Sheriff Plum, where they design locating for a short time, more or less. It is thought that Peter will stay about two years, and the two latter "covies" about half that time. A large concourse of people assembled at the depot to see them depart. It was a glorious sight. The sun rose in majestic splendor and set about six o'clock that night. It was'nt an imposing sight, by any means, though there had been a good deal of imposition going on part of the prisoners for some time. An ordinary pair of specs bestraddled the nose of the sanctimonious Peter, through which he caught a glimpse of the surroundings, and sighed that he was not free—"slaves to a horde of petty tyrants." The others followed meekly like a lamb—they had been following this animal before and knew how to do it. And when the good engine Auburn had puffed herself out of sight, a sense of relief prevailed over all—that is there was sense in being relieved of three great scamps, who had done all in their power to outrage society, disgrace their relations and friends and meet with the odium that follows closely in the wake of evil doers. For particulars see illustrations at the Bar Exchange, Wm. Fales, artist.

Shower's Corners.

Editor Courier.—The closing exercises of the Shower's Corners School took place last Tuesday. The school has been highly successful under the efficient management of W. H. Keeran, teacher, and has made great proficiency under his acknowledged ability.

The forenoon was devoted to examination The questions were placed upon the board, and the answers written out on paper by the scholars. This exercise although conducted silently was indicitive of an unusual interest in the school. The first exercise in the afternoon was reading, followed by an exercise in map drawing, in which ten pupils were engaged drawing the States east of the Mississippi river. This exercise elicited much interest and secured the attention of all present. Next came the declamations which were recited with credit to the school. The exercises was concluded with a brief but touching address by the teacher.

A visitor.

ATTENTION!

All those indebted to the Air Line on Subscription are requested to call and settle without delay. This matter must be attended to at once.

We dropped in upon our affable and good looking friend, Dr. A. J. Cowan, and found him cosily ensconced in his new quarters in Union Hall. The front part of the hall has been partitioned off making a handsome suit of rooms on each side of the entrance. The Doctor is located to the left, and has every thing furnished in grand style. The first door leads into the main office which is elegantly fitted up with every convenience. The room adjoining to the left, is the Dispensatory where everything is arranged in neat and tasty order. The room to the right contains a handsome set of furniture, for a sleeping apartment, to be used by attaches of the office, so that at all hours day and night, some one will be there to respond to the call of visitors. The appointments altogether are in keeping with the enterprise of the Doctor, and he now possesses office rooms that are not excelled by any in Fort Wayne. The Doctor informs us that he has just received a quantity of fresh vaccine virus, or material with which to vaccinate those who have not already undergone the operation.

Union Hall is now in much better shape and is even more attractive than before. It will accommodate quite a large audience and will be found just the place for dances &c.

Mark Twain's Horses.—While I am speaking of animals I will mention that I have got a horse by the name of "Jasien." He is a mare. I have seen remarkable horses before, but none so remarkable as this. I wanted a horse that could shy, and this fills the bill. I had an idea that shying indicated spirit. If I was correct I have got the most spirited horse on earth. He shies at everything he comes across, with the utmost impartiality. He appears to have a mortal dread of telegraph poles especially; and it is fortunate that these are on both sides of the road, because as it is now I never fall off twice on the same side. If I fell on the same side always it would get to be monotonous after a while. This creature has got scared at everything he has seen to-day, except a hay wagon. He walked up to that with an intrepidity and recklessness that were astonishing. And it would fill anyone with admiration to see how he preserves his self possession in the presence of a barley sack. This dare devil bravery will be the death of this horse some day.

He has only one fault; his tail has been chopped off or driven up, and he has to fight the flies with his heels. This is all very well, but when he tries to kick a fly off the top of his head with his hind foot, it is too much variety. He is going to get himself into trouble that way some day. He reaches around and bites my legs, but I don't like to see a horse too sociable.

Rev. Mr. Fowler will preach at the Presbyterian Church next Sabbath afternoon at half past two o'clock.

District Convention.

The Good Templars of the 19th District, met in convention at Kendallville, Tuesday, Feb. 14, 1871. The District embraces the following counties: Allen, Adams, LaGrange, DeKalb, Noble, Steuben, Wells and Whitley. By the last grand Lodge report, we have 31 Lodges in our District. Delegates of 13 Lodges were present and reported an average of 47 members to each Lodge.—At this rate there would be nearly 1478 members in the District. The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The delegates of the 19th District are in Convention assembled to consider the great question of Temperance, and devise the best means of spreading the great truths of sobriety and morality, therefore be it

Resolved, That there has been no time in the history of our organization so favorable as the present for the dissemination of the principles of our order, and that it is the duty of ever Good Templar, by precept and example, by word and by deed, to spread broadcast through the community the objects and benefits of the order, and to induce all classes to join and use there influence with ours to drive intemperance from our land.

Resolved, That we deplore the dreadful curse of intemperance which has brought so much misery to our country and we deem it the duty of all good citizens, in whatever sphere of life, to aid in bringing about the total abolition of everthing that can intoxicate, and to neither assist or support in any official position any person that is not favorably disposed to the great principles of temperance.

Resolved, That subordinate Lodges procure the names of persons who sign petitions to county Commissioners to grant liquor licenses, and publish said names in county papers, and also make them public, where said persons reside.

Resolved, That we the delegates of the different Lodges return our sincere thanks to the citizens of Kendallville and the members of Fidelity Lodge, for their courtesy and kind hospitality to us while associated with them in convention.

After a very pleasant and profitable session, adjourned to meet the third Tuesday in May, 1871, at Waterloo.

IN MEMORIAM.

Butler Ind., Feb. 4 1871.

At a regular meeting of Unity Lodge, No. 21, Daughters of Rebecca, held Feb. 14, '70, the following Premble and Resolutions were adopted.

Your committee to whom was refered the sad duty of giving expressions to the universal sentiments of sorrow which pervades not only this Lodge, but the whole community, on the death of sister Elizabeth L. Norford, wife of Bro. James M. Norford, we beg leave to report that they have discharged the duty assigned them with the full conviction that words are but faint symbols of the feeling which pervades the hearts of this whole people.

Whereas, It has pleased the Allwise Ruler of the Universe to remove from us to the Grand Lodge above, our well beloved sister Elizabeth L. Norford, and believing that the priciples of our order call upon us, not only, to pay due respect to departed worth but to "weep with those who weep" and feeling that the present especially, is an occasion where an expression of sympathy is due to the sorrowing relations and friends. Therefore

Resolved,—That in the death of our beloved sister, Elizabeth L. Norford, this Lodge has lost an able and efficient member, one whose councils were safe, whose heart was deeply imbued with the sentiments of benevolence and christianity, and whose hand was ever open to the call of charity, whether it came from this Lodge or the cause of suffering humanity.

Resolved.—That with heartfelt emotions of sorrow we deeply deplore that that dispensation of Divine Providence which has taken from this Lodge an honored member, from her family an affectionate wife and mother, and from society, one of its brightest ornaments.

Resolved.—That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved relatives of our deceased sister, especially the stricken husband and children, and would most earnestly pray that He who tempers the winds to the shorn lamb, and who suffers not even a sparrow to fail to the ground without his notice, may hold them in the hollow of his hand, and bring them all to join our sister in the Grand Lodge above, where loved ones are never parted, and where every law is an illustration of the sublime principles of Friendship, Love and Truth.

Resolved.—That, as a token of respect for our departed sister, and, as an outward symbol of the esteem in which her merits have deeply rooted in our hearts, and, in the hearts of all who knew her, this Lodge dressed its charter in mourning until the end of the present term.

Resolved.—That, those resolutions be placed upon the minutes of this lodge.—That a copy, under seal of this Lodge, be sent to the family and other near relatives of our deceased sister, and that copies be furnished for publication in the Waterloo Press and Auburn Courier.

All of which is respectfully submitted in Freindship, Love and Truth.

M. McLaughlin,
Mrs. A. M. Banks } Committee

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—Frederick Gould, late President of the Blackstone Bank, died on the 17th.

—Richard Adams Locke, a well known writer, died at his home on Staten Itsand, on the 17th.

—At New York, recently, J. Stuart Gwynne was sentenced to the Penitentiary for five years, for bigamy.

—A committee of the Irish citizens of Boston have collected $1,500 for the benefit of the released Fenians. Halpine is to be cared for on his arrival.

—Three or four Germans who attempted to cross on the ice from Staten Island to Elizabeth, on the 16th, are missing. There is no doubt that they were drowned.

—George H. Matthews, a well known Broadway bookseller, died on the 17th. He was a warm friend of all philanthropic movements, and a frequent contributor to the press.

—A Boston dispatch says that the United States Circuit Court, on the petition of Samuel J. Muscroft, of Ohio, has granted an injunction on the representation of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh," except upon the payment of such a sum as may satisfy the petitioner, who is the author.

—The woman giving her name as Sarah Bennett, and claiming that her husband was on the ill-fated train, and who identified a hat at Poughkeepsie as her husband's, and fainted, and who has collected considerable money from sympathetic persons, was arrested as an imposter, but, out of consideration for her children, released.

The West.

—Immense rich silver mines have been discovered in the Bradshaw district, Arizona, near Prescott, causing much excitement.

—The California orange crop is very fine. Many thousands of orange and lemon trees are being planted in the central part of the State.

—Cincinnati is again agitated over the question of keeping the public library open on Sundays. The subject was on Sunday alluded to from the pulpits.

—A San Francisco dispatch says: The schooner Cygnet, coming up the coast from Scammon's lagoon, Lower California, has 100 turtles on board for Chicago.

—A woman about thirty years old, supposed to be Johanna Essert, was found dead in the woods, near Clifton, O., on the 17th. Her right wrist was terribly gashed.

—Census returns from Michigan foot up as follows: Number of dwellings in the State, 235,687; number of families, 284,725; number of voters, 268,756; number of inhabitants, 1,184,638.

—Coal operators in St. Clair and Madison counties Ill., have resolved to pay only four cents per bushel for mining hereafter, and will close their mines until the miners accept these terms.

—Six inches of snow fell at Peoria, Ill., on Saturday night, the heaviest of the season. At Boston and Springfield, Mass., yesterday, it snowed all day, twelve inches having fallen at the latter place.

—The River and Harbor Appropriation bill, just reported, appropriates $100,000 for the Chicago harbor, and $50,000 for Calumet. The total for Michigan is $542,000, the principal item of which is $250,000 for St. Mary's Falls canal and river improvements. The total for Wisconsin is $251,000, the principal items in which are $60,000 for Superior City and $38,000 for Milwaukee harbor.

The South.

—The receipts of the Treasury for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1870, were $85,097,120, and expenditures, $74,115,723.

—An engine on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad exploded near Piedmont, Va., on the 14th, instantly killing R. McClurg, the fireman, and slightly scalding the engineer.

—The man-of-war seen on the 28th ult. by Capt. Hopkins, of the bark Mary Baker, was in all probability the Tennessee, as Secretary Robeson states that none other would be in that locality at that time. The news was received in Washington with great joy.

—William B. Waters, a boy 13 years old, recently jumped on the cowcatcher of a heavy freight train, near the Shore Line depot crossing, and falling off, the engine ran over him, cutting off his right leg, crushing his left leg nearly off, and bruising and mangling him horribly. He lived four or five hours. The engineer was arrested and held in $2,000 bail.

—The steamer Judge Wheeler exploded her boiler, burnt, and sunk on Sunday, at Bell's Landing, forty-five miles above Vicksburg. The killed were Con. Hogan, a deck hand; Thomas Welsh, a deck sweep, and another man, whose name is unknown. The injured were Capt. Noland, serious; Charley Storey, carpenter, slightly; C. N. Pope, of Little Rock, badly. Very little of the cargo was saved.

Foreign.

—It is ascertained beyond a doubt that the result of the French elections is a triumph for the Conservatives.

—The Liverpool Courier of the 12th says that a French transport, with 1,250 persons on board, has foundered off Cape La Hague, and that all on board were lost.

—The London Spectator believes it probable that Leopold, King of Belgium, will be put on the French throne, with the consent of his own subjects and of the Emperor William.

—In consequence of certain preparations made in the south of France for calling into service the military class of 1872, Bismarck will consent to prolong the armistice only five days.

—Dissatisfaction is felt at the presence of Chanzy and Faidherbe in Paris. It is thought that an oversight in framing the armistice permits these generals, under pretense of voting, to communicate with the authorities in Paris.

—The Paris Figaro says: "It is reported that the German propositions for peace run thus: The cession of Alsace and Lorraine and a portion of the Department of Daubs, and indemnity of one and a half milliards of thalers; the Prussians to keep all materials of war they have captured, and the French fleet and colonies to remain intact."

—The steamship Riga cleared from New York on the 16th for Bordeaux, with a cargo of munitions of war, valued at $398,770. The shipment consisted of 1,550 cases harness, 6,284 cases ammunition, 358 ammunition chests, 53 cases implements, 862 wheels, 215 limbers, 75 gun carriages, 18 guns, 16 battery wagons, 99 caissons, and 16 forges.

—From information received, it is believed that the commanders of the different French armies are universally of the opinion that a continuance of the war at the present time, with any reasonable prospect of success, is utterly impossible. Garibaldi, it is said, has recently expressed himself to the same effect.

—Everything has been arranged at Bordeaux for a committee to negotiate a treaty for peace. A draft of a treaty has been approved of by Bismarck and Moltke. The treaty will be signed immediately, and the German troops will then march through Paris to Strasbourg and there take trains for home, the trains following each other as rapidly as possible. The Assembly will adjourn to Paris and proceed with the reorganization of France.

—It was intended at one time to invite the reigning sovereigns of Germany to accompany the Emperor and army in the triumphal entry into Paris, but this plan has been abandoned, and the sovereigns invited instead to attend his Majesty in his grand entrance into his own capital. It is still undecided at what time the Emperor will return to Germany, but it is thought he will leave Versailles on the 23d, traveling through Strasbourg, Carlsruhe, Stuttgart, and Munich, and visiting on the way the sovereigns who elected him Emperor, and who will fall into the train to grace his triumphal entry into Berlin. The Emperor will be in Berlin on March 8, when the first Diet of United Germany meets.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the House joint resolution appropriating $5,000 to Geo. F. Robinson, for his services in saving the life of Secretary Seward, was adopted.——Sumner, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported adversely the House bill directing the Secretary of State to cause to be brought home and interred the remains of Generals Ashman and Steadman, and Elisha N. Saulnier, the late United States Consul at Vera Cruz. The bill was indefinitely postponed.——The bill authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for the carrying of mails was passed.——The bill making an appropriation of $4,000 for the compensation of Nicholas P. Trist, as negotiator of a treaty, was passed.——Sumner called up the House bill regulating telegraphic communication between the United States and foreign countries. After debate, the Senate, without action, adjourned.

In the House, on the 14th, Beck, from the Conference Committee on the West Point Military Academy Appropriation bill, made a report, which was agreed to.——Brooks, of Massachusetts, called up the contested election case of Shofe against Tillman, in the Fourth District of Tennessee. A resolution declaring Tillman, the sitting member, entitled to the seat, and allowing Shofe $4,500 for expenses of contest, was agreed to without debate.——Usher moved to proceed with the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the West Point Academy difficulties. Agreed to.——The evening session was entirely devoid of interest. Several speeches were made, when a motion to adjourn was adopted.

In the Senate, on the 15th, Sumner introduced the following resolution: Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the instructions to the commander of the ship Tennessee on her present cruise. ——A long argument on the Fifteenth amendment was had between Morton and Blair.——The President's message, returning the test-oath bill without his signature, was read. He takes ground in favor of the full repeal of that obligation, on the ground of the obvious unfairness of asking those for whom the oath was not made to take it, while it relieves those against whom it was intended.——A few unimportant resolutions were offered and properly referred, after which the Senate took a recess until evening, but at the evening session there was no quorum.

In the House, on the 15th, the consideration of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee to enforce the right of citizens of the United States, under the Fifteenth amendment, to vote in the several States of the Union, was taken up. The debate was long and warm, and brought out all the fine language and beautiful expressions of the House, the choicest of the latter being that of Voorhees, that "the bill provides for an army of officials all over the land as thick as locusts and as mean as the lice of Egypt, to arrest, without warrant, free-born citizens." Finally a vote was reached, and the bill passed—yeas, 114; nays, 64. It contains nineteen sections, covering twenty-four pages.——The House met in the evening at 7:30. Numerous reports were made, but no business of importance was accomplished, and at 9:20 a motion to adjourn was adopted.

In the Senate, on the 16th, a motion to consider the bill preventing cruelty to criminals was objected to.——Cragin reported, without amendment, the House bill providing for the recovery of damages for the loss of the sloop-of-war Oneida.——Nye, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill for the relief of contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery, with the message of the President returning the bill with his objections. The question being, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President? the yeas and nays were called, and resulted—yeas, 2 (Ross and Saulsbury); nays, 57.——The Legislative Appropriation bill came up as the regular order of business, after the expiration of the morning hour. The question being upon the amendment to increase the salaries of United States District Judges, the proposed increase was retained in the bill—yeas, 30; nays, 28. The following is the scale: Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, $8,500; Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, $8,000; United States Circuit Judges, $6,000; Chief Justice of the Court of Claims and Superior Court of the District of Columbia, $6,000; Associate Justices of the same Courts, $5,000; United States District Judges, $5,000.——Adjourned.

In the House, on the 16th, it was ordered that, on and after Saturday, the 18th, the House meet at 11 o'clock a. m.——The resolution directing the dismissal of the leaders and instigators in the first class at West Point, and the court-martialing of the others, was agreed to by 113 to 109.——The House then, at 2:30, proceeded to the consideration of the bill reported by Conger, to provide for better security on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam. The bill establishes regulations to be observed by steamers, to guard against loss or danger from fire, leaking, explosion, or other accidents. It was passed as a substitute for the Senate bill.——Adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 17th, the Vice-President presented the credentials of Eli S. Saulsbury, as Senator from Delaware for six years from March 4th next, which were read and laid on the table.——Nye reported back the House bills for the apportionment of members of the Territorial Councils of Wyoming and Colorado. Passed.——The Legislative, Executive and Judicial appropriation bill was then proceeded with. After full discussion a vote was taken on Trumbull's amendment, and resulted in a tie—yeas 25, nays 25—when the amendment was carried by the casting vote of the Vice-President.——Trumbull, on leave, introduced a bill providing for assistant treasurers at [illegible]. Referred.——The Senate then, at 5:45, after a short executive session, adjourned.

In the House, on the 17th, Wilson, of Minnesota, presented a memorial from the Minnesota Legislature for an appropriation for the improvement of Duluth harbor.——The report of the committee on the bill creating a territorial government in the District of Columbia was then taken up and agreed to. The bill now goes to the President for approval.——The next bill taken up was the one giving a right of action, in the District of Columbia and the Territories, by any person suffering from injury to person, property, or means of support, on account of intoxicating liquors being sold to husbands or fathers. Lawrence explained the bill, which, he said, gave a wife right of action against any person who sold liquor to her husband, which made him incapable of performing duties such as he ought to perform. [Laughter.] Potter moved an amendment, confining the bill to the District of Columbia. Agreed to. The bill was then ordered engrossed, and read a third time.——Adjourned.

NEW BLEACHING PROCESS.—In a new bleaching process, the wool or silk, having been first cleaned in the usual way, is to be steeped for about an hour in a solution of equal parts, by weight, of oxalic acid and chloride of sodium in clear, cold water, after which it is removed from the bath and allowed to drain, and is then washed in the ordinary manner. The same bath may be used repeatedly by adding at each fresh charge of wool or silk a little more oxolic acid and chloride of sodium. The materials, whilst in the bath, should be stirred, and in the case of woven fabrics they should be passed through rollers. Should it be required to impart a blue color to the materials, the color employed should be first dissolved, filtered and strained, and then introduced into the mordant bath, in proportion varying with the shade required.

Orchards Without Money.

There are many farmers in limited circumstances who do not see their way clear to purchase trees for an orchard. In many instances there is a mortgage on the farm, which must be cleared off or it will clear the farm off. Shelter is wanted for the stock; or perhaps more important yet, better shelter is wanted for the family. Often in the case of new farms there is no well and no cistern, the water for the barns being brought from a spring at a distance. There is no roller to smooth down the surface of the fields that are to become permanent meadows; there is no mowing machine to cut the broad acres of grass; perhaps a neighbor's grind-stone has to be called into requisition whenever a scythe or axe has to be sharpened. Then there is a family to be fed and clothed; taxes to be paid; school books to be bought; and a host of other pressing wants that require immediate and every day attention.

None know but the industrious poor, and none know so well as the poor farmer, how pressing some of these wants are. Many little feet go unshod till the grass is whitened by the frost for want of money to buy shoes. Many an ambitious farmer's boy has to delay his entering the winter school till something can be sold from the farm in order to buy his books. The wife of many a frontier farmer cannot provide her scanty winter wardrobe suitable for attending meeting, till the pork is fattened and sold. Indeed there are hosts of farmers just commencing to prepare homes, where the supply of groceries is gauged by the supply of eggs and butter. It is only in good seasons or in times of good luck that such families "can make both ends meet"—whenever there appears a "frowning providence" some of the real, present necessities of the family are unsupplied.

It is all nonsense to talk to a man in such circumstances about spending three or four hundred dollars in buying fruit trees. Downing on Landscape Gardening and Home Adornment is an excellent book, but not for him. An evergreen belt would look well on the windworn side of his place, and would protect his orchard site; but evergreens cost money. It is vain to tantalize this man by telling him that he could get more money from five acres put in fruit trees than he realizes from his whole farm now; he knows that already. He knows, too, that his little boys and girls are fond of apples, pears, plums and cherries; that they are wholesome food; and cheap, when home grown. He wants and needs an orchard, and knows that the sooner the young trees are set the quicker will they bear fruit. He has no money to purchase trees from a nurseryman, and does not wish to run in debt in order to obtain them. How is this man to have an orchard without money, and without other price than the labor of himself and his family?

This is the way: Set apart a small plot of land in the garden or field for a nursery. If you can do no better for obtaining seeds, save them from the apples that are used in the family, and obtain more from the wild crab apples growing in the woods. They may be planted the present season, where the ground is still open, or kept till spring and then put out. They sould be planted in drills uniformly straight. The earth should be finely pulverized, and the seeds covered to the depth of about half an inch. Nothing is required the first season but to keep the weeds down, and to have the ground soft and mellow about the young roots. No more skill is required to raise seedling apple trees than to raise a crop of corn or beets. An hour's work, once a week through the summer and fall, will be sufficient to tend a plantation of several thousand seedling apple trees. A man having advanced thus far towards raising an orchard will be a shiftless fellow indeed, and very lacking in mechanical ingenuity, if he does not continue the cultivation of his young stalks, and learn to engraft them when they are of sufficient age.

We lately visited the largest apple orchard in the West, if not in the whole country, an orchard producing this year some fifteen thousand bushels of fruit. This famous apple orchard was started in this wise: A fourteen year old boy came to Illinois about the time of Black Hawk's war. Where his father settled there were few apple trees, except wild crabs. Wise men said apple trees did not do well here, but he did not believe it.

Young apple trees were brought from a distance and commanded high prices, but cash was scarce with him. So he started out to make an orchard with such means as he had. He saved all the seeds that he could, planted them, and tended the young trees till they were large enough to engraft. His first cions he obtained with money earned by himself. He rode on horseback seventy miles over the prairies to get the cions and put them in himself. Every year he continued to give his spare time to planting, pruning and grafting apple trees. The orchard was started to supply a single family, now it supplies thousands of families.

Undoubtedly the best way to obtain a fine orchard is to purchase first class trees from a reliable nurseryman. So, too, it is the best way to obtain a fine stock of cattle to purchase thoroughbred animals. But because a man is so circumstanced that he can do neither, it is no reason that he should go without fruit or cows.

Many a poor farmer delays putting out an orchard for the want of money to purchase trees, till he gets at an age that he thinks the trees will never yield their fruit to him. The surest way for a poor farmer to make sure of an orchard is to commence to get one by the labor of his own hands. In this way he can have an orchard of bearing trees, cider to drink, apples to eat and to sell long before he became forehanded enough to spare the money all at once to buy the trees to plant an orchard. The people who went from the old towns in the vicinity of Boston to colonize the more northern states of New England "were wiser in their generation," as far as the planting of apple trees is concerned, than were the settlers of most parts of the West. They took a bag of apple seeds with them wherever they went to settle. Every man became his own nurseryman, partly from force of circumstances and partly from force of poverty. Apple trees took the place of forest trees before the stumps of the former had rotted away.—Prarie Farmer.

Keeping Apples.

Having just read an account of a writer's keeping apples a long time by wrapping them in paper, and another article in which it was stated that the keeping in a sound condition was greatly prolonged by keeping them from the air, I will give my testimony to substantiate the truth of the above assertions. I have eaten apples in August in a perfectly sound condition, that were wrapped in light paper the October previous. The Fourth of July has been frequently celebrated by partaking from a loaded dish of apples, as well as from a pitcher of "ice cool lemonade." The former was not wrapped in the paper until near the close of March. I think, by selecting the best of fruit now, and carefully enveloping each specimen separately in paper so that the air cannot pass through, the time of keeping in a sound and eatable condition can be greatly prolonged. After covering each apple with paper, I would select a tight wooden box and cover it on the inside, or outside, with paper either before, or after putting in the fruit, as the case may be. Those persons who are desirous of preserving a small quantity of apples will be amply repaid for their trouble by trying the above experiment. The fruit should not be disturbed after packing until the box is opened at the time the fruit is to be eaten.—Exchange.

Grand Gift Enterprise.

In placing before our readers the grand gift enterprise inaugurated by the Musical Society of Milwaukee, Wis., we wish to recommend the merits of the scheme to their careful consideration. The originators of the enterprise are widely and honorably known throughout the country, there being very few musical organizations of equal merits in the United States. Within the twenty years of its existence, this Musical Society has gained the universal esteem and support of Milwaukeeans as one of their most prominent institutions. For this reason the most widely known business men of that city, foremost among whom is the Hon. ALEXANDER MITCHELL, President of the Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R., and Representative in Congress of the First District of Wisconsin, have not only given their indorsement, but also their active influence to this enterprise, which is to take the last obstacle of the society's future away, by ameliorating the state of its financial affairs. The scheme so indorsed cannot but meet with confidence and universal favor. Eighty Thousand Dollars in greenbacks are to be distributed, among which there is one prize of $25,000, and many others, amounting to large sums. The tickets are sold at $2. Mr. H. N. Hempsted, the well-known music dealer of Milwaukee, is the general agent of the enterprise.

JOHN V. FARWELL & Co. have removed to their new store, 106, 108, 110 and 112 Wabash avenue, Chicago, and are now opening the largest and most varied stock in the city.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company of Chicago is a favorite with the insuring public. It is one of the few companies which showed a good increase of business during the past year.

THE connection of J. V. Farwell & Co. with the chief manufacturers of Europe and America, enable them to show the largest and best stock of notions, fancy goods, hosiery and gloves in Chicago.

FOR an irritated throat, cough or cold, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are offered with the fullest confidence in their efficacy. They have been thoroughly tested, and maintain the good reputation they have justly acquired. As there are imitations, be sure to OBTAIN the genuine.

THE great house of J. V. Farwell & Co.—now opening their foreign importations—have the best and lowest priced stock in Chicago.

For Dyspepsia,

Indigestion, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic, and as a tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

JOHN V. FARWELL & Co.'s unprecedented success with the "Railroad" brand alpacas has led them to again secure its entire production.

Poisonous Medicines.

The theory that the virus of disease can be safely counteracted by doses of poison, is false and dangerous. Within the last twenty-five years, not less than a score of virulent poisons have been added to the repository of the medical profession. They are given in small doses, otherwise they would destroy life immediately; but even in minute quantities, they produce, ultimately, very disastrous effects. It is unwise and unphilosophical to employ, as remedies, powerful and insidious drugs, which, in subjugating one disease, sow the seeds of another still more unmanageable. None of these terrible medicaments operate with as much directness and certainty upon the cause of disease as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a tonic and corrective, without a single deleterious ingredient in its composition. Arsenic and quinia are given for intermittents; bromide of potassium for nervous disorders; strychnine and prussic acid for general debility; preparations of chloroform and opium for sleeplessness; and yet these deadly drugs do not compare, as specifics for the diseases above enumerated, with that wholesome vegetable invigorant and alterative, while they are all so pernicious that it is astonishing any physician should take the responsibility of prescribing them. Let invalids, for their own sakes, try the Bitters before they resort to the poisons. The relief they will experience from a course of the harmless specific, will render a recourse to the unsafe preparations referred to, quite unnecessary.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effect.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.

WALTHAM WATCHES.

The extensive use of these watches for the last fifteen years by Railway Conductors, Engineers and Expressmen, the most exacting of watch-wearers, has thoroughly demonstrated the strength, steadiness, durability and accuracy of the Waltham Watch. To satisfy that class in all these respects, is to decide the question as to the real value of these time-keepers.

More than 500,000 of these watches are now speaking for themselves in the pockets of the people—a proof and a guarantee of their superiority over all others.

The superior organization and great extent of the Company's Works at Waltham, enables them to produce watches at a price which renders competition futile, and those who buy any other watch merely pay from 25 to 50 per cent. more for their watches than is necessary.

Those time-pieces combine every improvement that a long experience has proved of real practical use. Having had the refusal of nearly every invention in watch-making originating in this country or in Europe, only those were finally adopted which severe testing by the most skillful artisans in our works, and long use on the part of the public, demonstrated to be essential to correct and enduring time-keeping.

Among the many improvements we would particularize:

The invention and use of a centre-pinion of peculiar construction to prevent damage to the train by the breakage of main-springs, is original with the American Watch Company, who, having had the refusal of all other contrivances, adopted Fogg's patent pinion as being the best and faultless.

Hardened and tempered hair-springs, now universally admitted by watchmakers to be the best, are used in all grades of Waltham Watches.

All Waltham Watches have dust-proof caps, protecting the movement from dust, and lessening the necessity of the frequent cleaning necessary to other watches.

Our new patent stem-winder, or keyless watch, is already a decided success, and a great improvement on any stem-winding watch in the American market, and by far the cheapest watch of its quality now offered to the public. To those living in portions of the United States where watchmakers do not abound, watches with the above mentioned improvements which tend to insure accuracy, cleanliness, durability and convenience, must prove invaluable.

The trademarks of the various styles made by the Company are as follows:

I. C. BABCOCK'S LETTER.

OFFICE OF ADAMS EXPRESS COMPANY,
No. 59 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Dec. 31, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:—Our agent at Richmond writes: "We got through to-night drying and fixing up the money from the late fire. The contents of the safe, $23,530 in bills, we recovered. It was a Herring's Safe, and a good one, certain."

LETTER FROM J. M. SUBLITT & CO.,
Proprietors of the Spottswood.
RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 29, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:
GENTS:—On the morning of the 25th inst., we were so unfortunate as to have our hotel burned, with contents. Yet, we were fortunate enough to have one of your Herring's Patent Champion Safes, which fell into the cellar among a burning mass of ruins. After the fire abated, we tried all means to extricate it, but found it impossible on account of the bricks, mortar, and burning rubbish lying thereon and about it, and we employed a mechanic and cut it open through the bottom, and, to our utmost surprise, we found the contents, consisting of valuable papers, money and some silverware, all in good order. Had it not been for your Herring's Safe we would have lost everything.

COMPOUND FLUID

Extract Catawba

Grape Pills.

Component Parts—Fluid Extract Rhubarb and Fluid Extract Catawba Grape Juice.

FOR LIVER COMPLAINTS, JAUNDICE, BILIOUS AFFECTIONS, SICK OR NERVOUS HEADACHE, COSTIVENESS, ETC. PURELY VEGETABLE, CONTAINING NO MERCURY, MINERALS OR DELETERIOUS DRUGS.

H

These Pills are the most delightfully pleasant purgative, superseding castor oil, salts, magnesia, etc. There is nothing more acceptable to the stomach. They give tone, and cause neither nausea nor griping pains. They are composed of the finest ingredients. After a few days' use of them, such an invigoration of the entire system takes place as to appear miraculous to the weak and enervated, whether arising from imprudence or disease. H. T. Helmbold's Compound Fluid Extract Catawba Grape Pills are not sugar-coated, from the fact that sugar-coated Pills do not dissolve, but pass through the stomach without dissolving, consequently do not produce the desired effect. THE CATAWBA GRAPE PILLS, being pleasant in taste and odor, do not necessitate their being sugar-coated. PRICE FIFTY CENTS PER BOX.

LADIES.

In many affections peculiar to Ladies, the Extract Buchu is unequalled by any other remedy—as in Chlorosis or retention, irregularity, painfulness or suppression of customary evacuations, ulcerated or schirrus state of the uterus, leucorrhea or whites, sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion or habits of dissipation. It is prescribed extensively by the most eminent physicians and midwives for enfeebled and delicate constitutions, of both sexes and all ages (attended with any of the above diseases or symptoms).

O

in all their stages, at little expense, little or no change in diet, no inconvenience, and no exposure. It causes a frequent desire, and gives strength to Urinate, thereby removing Obstructions, Preventing and Curing Strictures of the Urethra, Allaying Pain and Inflammation, so frequent in this class of diseases, and expelling all Poisonous matter.

Thousands who have been the victims of incompetent persons, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they have been deceived, and that the "Poison" has, by the use of "powerful astringents," been dried up in the system, to break out in a more aggravated form, and perhaps after Marriage.

Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU for all Affections and Diseases of the Urinary Organs, whether existing in Male or Female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing. PRICE, ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS PER BOTTLE.

L

HENRY T. HELMBOLD'S IMPROVED ROSE WASH

cannot be surpassed as a FACE WASH, and will be found the only specific remedy in every species of CUTANEOUS AFFECTION. It speedily eradicates PIMPLES, SPOTS, SCORBUTIC DRYNESS, INDURATIONS of the CUTANEOUS MEMBRANE, etc., dispels REDNESS and INCIPIENT INFLAMMATION, HIVES, RASH, MOTH PATCHES, DRYNESS OF SCALP OR SKIN, FROST BITES, and all purposes for which SALVES or OINTMENTS are used; restores the skin to a state of purity and softness, and insures continued healthy action to the tissue of its vessels, on which depends the agreeable clearness and vivacity of complexion, so much sought and admired. But however valuable as a remedy for existing defects of the skin, H. T. Helmbold's Rose Wash has long sustained its principal claim to unbounded patronage, by possessing qualities which render it a TOILET APPENDAGE of the most Superlative and Congenial character, combining in an elegant formula those prominent requisites, SAFETY and EFFICACY—the invariable accompaniments of its use—as a Preserver and Refresher of the Complexion. It is an excellent Lotion for diseases of a Syphilitic Nature, and as an injection for diseases of the Urinary Organs, arising from habits of dissipation, used in connection with the EXTRACTS BUCHU, SARSAPARILLA AND CATAWBA GRAPE PILLS, in such diseases as recommended, cannot be surpassed. PRICE, ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Growth of Cereals.

At the last meeting of the British Association, Mr. F. G. Hallett read a paper on the "Law of Development in Cereals." His experience showed him several years ago, that grain, and especially wheat, was injured by being planted too closely. He found a wheat plant would increase above the ground in proportion as its roots had room to develop, and that the roots might be hindered by being in contact with the roots of another plant. Mr. Hallett thus sums up the result of his extended experiments:

1. Every fully developed plant, whether of wheat, oats, or barley, presents one ear superior in productive power to any of the rest on that plant.

2. Every such plant contains one grain which, upon trial, proves more productive than any other.

3. The best grain in a given plant is in its best ear.

4. The superior vigor of this grain is transmissible in different degrees to its progeny.

5. By repeated careful selection the superiority is accumulated.

6. The improvement which is first raised gradually after a series of years is diminished in amount, and eventually so far arrested that, practically speaking, a limit to improvement in the desired quality is reached.

7. By still continuing to select, the improvement is maintained, and practically a fixed type is the result.

SAD PICTURES OF NEW YORK LIFE.—Two very sad pictures of city life are made known this morning. The first is that of a Cuban woman who, losing all her money through unfortunate speculations and treacherous friends, found herself and children on the brink of starvation, and then, utterly despairing of relief from her troubles, attempted to commit suicide, and was only prevented by the opportune arrival of some of the occupants of the house. The second is that of an old hag dying from want and cold in a filthy room in a Mulberry street tenement house. She had lived entirely by begging, and never had been known to purchase anything for her sustenance, and yet she was found to be possessed of over $600. Opposite as these two cases are in some respects, in others they are analogous, and only go to show how much misery and suffering and want there are in the metropolis. The tenement houses could tell a sad story were their secrets to be given to the public, and if there were an Asmodeus to lift the roof of the houses in the city as of old he did for Don Cleofas in Madrid, a history of privation and destitution would be spread out in which the incidents are dark and sorrowful.—New York Express.

While Snows Are Falling.

The Spring time came—the Spring time went,
With shimmering cloud and shiny weather.
The golden glory of June was spent;
On hills and fields we roamed together.
We walked through autumn's purple haze,
The future's dream of bliss forestalling,
And shuddering, thought of Winter's days,
With snows a-falling.

For earth was all so wondrous fair,
And heaven smiled down so blue above it,
Each wandering breath of balmy air
But made us learn anew to love it.
What wonder, if with all so bright,
And wild birds through the woodland calling,
We sighed to think of Winter's night,
And snow a-falling.

And when, at last, the world was dressed
In shining robes of ice-mail gleaming,
And calm white silence lulled to rest
The pale, dead flowers, beneath it dreaming,
Behold, we woke to find made true
The hope our hearts had been forestalling,
And life grew fairer than we knew
While snows were falling.

Ah well! the days of youth fly fast;
Their suns grow dim, their blossoms wither,
And all the dreams that made our past
Fly fast and far, we know not whither;
But when we tread life's wintry slope,
We hear again their voices calling,
And Memory clasps the hand of Hope,
While snows are falling.

The Husband's Complaint.

BY JOSEPH TAYLOR.

A few short months ago, my dear,
Before we two were one,
You vowed to do so many things,
That now are never done.

You said, when home from daily toil
I came with aching brow,
Your hand alone should soothe its pain—
It never soothes it now.

You said you would no burden be,
And dress as means allow;
But what with silks and rings and things,
You do not do so now.

You used to sacrifice yourself,
And to my wishes bow,
Allowing me to have my way—
You never do so now.

You used to sing and play and smile,
And gush I can't tell how;
You won my heart, I grieve to say—
You never gush so now.

I mind the moonlight night when I
Was moved to hear you vow
A joy 'twould be to die for me—
Why don't you do so now?

MANY CROSSES IN LIFE.

Jacqueline looked at the little old-fashioned seal which bore this inscription engraved upon it in white cornelian: "Many crosses in life." It was a true saying, engraved on many a heart withal—in Jacqueline's heart, too. She turned it in her toil-worn fingers with a sigh, thinking that perhaps some superstition attached to its use; that, had she lost or put it away, life might have gone otherwise with her; for poor Jacqueline had known many crosses—thwarted youth, poverty, enforced idleness, and blasted hopes. It seemed to her that this little seal typified them all. She remembered one who had brought it for her birthday gift, who had kissed her when he placed the chain about her neck, and had said: "If you wear your crosses as an ornament, love, they can hardly bear heavily upon you."

But they had borne heavily upon her. They had stolen the color from her cheeks, the glow from her eyes, the roundness from her limbs; they had mingled silver with the brown satin of her hair, and had written themselves in wrinkles upon the white brow; they had bowed the stubborn will, and bent the stiff neck, and broken the sobbing heart.

He had said, too, that the crosses on the seal made the effect of a crown in outline, while she answered that they loooked rather like a crown of stars. But, for all that youthful fancy, few stars had shone across her path, and her crown was yet to come. And the giver of the sacred gift had left her these many years. She sometimes thought she had done wrongly, as the wife of another, to keep this little memento of that dear past—that all her trials had arisen to upbraid her for the sin, to assure her that somewhere, under all the pain and weariness and long suffering, she still preserved one smouldering spark for the lover she had forsaken in her youth.

But then, had she been a happy wife, as other wives had been happy, giving all and receiving much, that would have made all the difference in the world. It seemed now to her as if the girl who waited at the boat to see her lover off, to take her last look, to give him the blessing of her beaming glance to lighten the labor of his work-a-day—who waited there, ages ago was it?—with blushing cheek and wistful eyes, was some other person than herself, Jacqueline; some one of whom she had read, some picture she had seen, something dreamed, or imagined, or heard in the strains of distant music; but surely nothing like it had ever been experienced in her own bleak existence. Love had entered her heart, like sunlight through a prison grating, only to move forward and leave the darkness more terrible; but, for all that, it were better to have known the sunshine than to have been born blind.

Mark had been as poor as herself when he brought her that simple gift—only a clerk in the house of Call & Dunn, on a miserable stipend; but, as the poet sings, his hoard was little, but his heart was great, and Jacqueline had believed it; for after all, afterevérything, she had never been quite able to change her creed. To be sure, she had seemed to change, to doubt him; but what of that? She could control her own actions, force her own inclinations, but her emotions were subject to a higher and more potent influence still. As if it were only yesterday, she could remember when Mr. Dunn suddenly appeared before her one afternoon, in the doorway of her humble home. She had not heard him enter; he had been regarding her, unobserved—who could say how long?—weighing her character in the balance with his false weights, making rough calculations of her pride and principle. When she looked up and saw him there, her needle snapped beneath her finger, and brought the blood.

"This is a bad beginning," said he, gravely.

"Of what?" she cried, in alarm. "Is anything the matter with Mark?"

"Nothing that you can help, child," he answered, almost tenderly; "and yet perhaps you may—if you will."

"If I will!" she repeated. "Is there anything I would not do?" asking it of herself rather than appealing to him.

"Nothing?" he questioned. "Are you certain? Think."

"Nothing. Tell me what you mean, Mr. Dunn; you torture me. Is Mark sick? is he in trouble?"

"Mark is in prison, Jacqueline."

"In prison! Mark! There, you are trying to frighten me."

"I am speaking the truth—the dreadful truth."

She sat now with her hands folded upon her work, all the color vanishing from her tinted cheek, never to reappear again save in a momentary flush.

"Can nothing be done?" she gasped, presently. "Of what is he—accused?"

"Of forging the signature of Call & Dunn to a check."

"And he did it?" she asked. "You believe it."

"There is blasting proof, Jacqueline," sadly. "The money found in his possession, the blanks at his hand, the signature fac-similed over sheets of paper in his private desk. But these proofs are all in my power; they can be used or not, at my pleasure;" and she felt his breath upon her cheek, and met a pair of eyes full of significance.

"Then there can be nothing done;" and the bitter tears sprang to her relief, and fell upon the hand extended to her.

"Something can be done," he said. "You can do it."

"I can love him still; I can believe in him in spite of proof. There is something greater than proof, that neutralizes it and makes it superfluous—it is faith. I do not believe a word of all this. Let me go to Mark; he needs me."

"Sit down, Jacqueline; you cannot go to him now. Remember that others will believe, though you should doubt his guilt. It is only when we have a personal interest in a thing that faith outweighs proof. It is right for you to trust him; but will that save him?"

"It will comfort him."

"But you can save him."

"I! You are wasting words. And the proof?"

"I will destroy it."

"Oh! thank you, thank you. You are our kind friends, after all. You believe in his innocence. How I love you! how Mark will love you! You said that it was I who could save him, when we shall owe everything to you."

"It is you who can save him—with me."

"Yes, oh yes. How kind, how generous. Tell me my part—what I shall do."

"Your part is soon told. You refused it once. Consent to become my wife—hear me out!—and I will destroy every shred of this damning proof. Mark will be proclaimed innocent and be reinstated. In the eye of the world it will all seem a mistake. He will appear an honorable man, free from suspicion, the world before him where to choose. Which is the greater love—to save his happiness or his honor?"

Jacqueline answered him not a word, but rose in her wrath and left him alone. She went to her room and then put on her bonnet—the poor little braid which Mark had said became her so well, which he was never to see her wear again. She would go down to the ferry, and take the boat for the city, and see Mark, and tell him that, however the tide might set, she was with him, believed in him. But when she reached the ferry the boat had left. Then she returned, and wrote to him a long loving letter, reiterating her faith, her firm assurance in his innocence. And the next day but one she received these lines:

"You have believed in me long enough, dear Jacqueline. Your protestations come to me as so many sharp but well deserved rebukes. I am guilty. Look in the books of common law and see what the sentence of the forger is. Will you let me wear away a miserable youth in prison, when I might be up and amending my ways—when you might deliver me? Mr. Dunn has told me of his suggestions to you. For your own sake, as well as mine, pray, pray accept his terms; for though we part in pain, life without love is better than with disgrace. MARK STRETTON."

Jacqueline put down the letter with a twinge of agony. So cold, so selfish! Ready to accept her sacrifice! Had it been herself, she would have grown gray in prison, starved on bread and water, suffered on the rack, rather than abandon her love. Even Mr. Dunn stood out large and generous beside him. That he had done the deed in a moment of dire temptation, she could have forgiven him; but that he should lay the burden upon her shoulders—though she were ready to bear anything for him—but that he should require it of her, that was the sting. Why not leave him to his fate? Did his welfare any longer concern her? The man who could frame this letter must be radically bad from the heart's core—not the bright ideal she had worshipped. Was this her punishment for making an idol for herself? Had the brazen image fallen and crushed her? But just here there came to mind the image of her lover as she had last seen him; the large calm eyes; the firm, well-cut lips, that knew not how to shape a lie, you would have said; a man with sincerity in every look—whose presence made one forget narrowness and deceit as naturally as the sunshine banishes darkness. And here the flood-tide of Jacqueline's love set in, covering the ugly wreck, and leaving her alone with heavenly pity in her throbbing human heart.

How the days dragged after that! No more looking forward to a happy home, to a charmed future. As mistress of Mr. Dunn's house she would have all that heart could wish—nay, nothing that her heart could wish, but all that pride might demand; she could roll in her carriage, and wear fine laces and splendid jewels, and sweep the tufted carpets with shimmering silks; her bed-ridden father should have the newly patented reclining chair, and be wheeled over velvet lawns and through perfumed gardens; there would be flowers in her vases every day the year round—in great vases of costly Japanese workmanship. She hated herself for these thoughts, that gave her no comfort, no delight. She was well enough, happy enough, in her cottage, with its woodbine porch, and her window, wreathed with prairie roses, in her hard work and pleasant thoughts; she needed nothing from the store of another—she needed nobody but Mark.

What she answered when Mr. Dunn came again to press his suit she could never tell; she only knew that when he went away Mark was free, and she was in bonds; that nothing was left her but the quaint engraved seal, which had been the first to admonish her of "many crosses in life."

When Jacqueline stood at the side of Mr. Dunn, and the bishop married them for better or worse, she was but a child in the ways of the world. She had known poverty and care and sickness as familiars; but she had simply heard of treachery and fraud as one hears of ghouls and vampires. They were things belonging to the Dark Ages, when a barbarous baron could serve up his rival's heart at a feast to his lady love. Wolves in sheeps' clothes did not belong to civilized life. So she became Mrs. Dunn; but she soon found that her crosses were not to end here. She was no longer mistress of her own movements or tastes. If she wished for quiet, Mr. Dunn insisted upon society; if she would ride, he preferred to go afoot; if she would work, he demanded idleness; if she made a friendship he forbade it; when she found pleasure in a guest, the invitation was never repeated. These were little things, but they make up the sum of life. When their first child was born, she would have given it some silvery, sweet name, that should seem to reflect a little of her love; but he chose to call it by some harsh family name, and to put it out to nurse. Jacqueline almost lived at the nurse's house for the first few days; then he said to her, "You may go there twice a week, and no more; I will not have you faded or preoccupied for any child." And then the sad mother, with her poor forlorn heart, condescended to her first underhand work, and stole out to her child at odd moments, when she fancied it safe; but he detected her, as she might have been assured he would, and had the baby sent to town, leaving Jacqueline ignorant of its whereabouts. One day it was brought home dead, from some infant disorder. She fancied that it might have recovered had she been near to cherish and care for it. She would have given worlds to have heard about its last baby hours—how it begun to smile, to coo over its playthings. It harrowed her to think that perhaps no tender, longing eyes took its last dying look, no gentle hand ministered to it; she wept to think that all had happened precisely as if the child had been motherless.

After this affairs moved less smoothly than before; there seemed a blight upon the household. Mr. Dunn often came home now out of temper; indeed, he seemed to have used that attribute so generously as to be always in the vocative; but now he sat late at table, drinking deeply, finding fault with the viands, with the weather, the market—with Jacqueline, her voice, her words, her manners—relenting at nothing.

"Why did you marry me?" she once asked him, timidly enough. "I am sure you did not love me."

"I married you, madam," he replied, "in order to make two miserable."

"I congratulate you on your success," she retorted. Crosses were her daily portion now; and if she did not always bear them heroically, who can cast the first stone? She would have parted from her tormentor long ago, but what assurance had she that the proof of Mark's wrong-doing had been destroyed? Perhaps it was in his power to ruin Mark yet. Should she faint by the way, and make her sacrifice of none effect? As her husband's character developed, she began to fear that circumstances had been against Mark Stretton, to see how easy it had been to hoodwink and mislead her unsuspecting mind. Why had she not insisted upon seeing Mark, and hearing the case from his own lips? Why, but because she was then innocent and guileless, and this man had only been able to teach her suspicion. But nothing of this helped her now; however much she was growing to dispise this man, she was now his wife, she bore his name, she had promised to love and obey him. If she had not kept that promise altogether, was it her fault? She had begun well; she had meant to ignore the past; to be scrupulous in her duties: but one never begins well without love. The grandest housekeeping results in chaos without that vital element, and this case surely offered no exception. Besides, in a material view, things were becoming less opulent in this household than before. The table was not so bounteously spread, the linen was looking thin, the carpets were less tufted, and even the shimmering silks of the mistress were wearing rusty. The servant, whose chief task it had been to attend the bedridden father, had long since been dismissed. Jacqueline looked after him herself now, and found a pleasure in returning to the duties of her old free life; but it was only a sort of make-believe, for if Mr. Dunn returned home and observed her at any time in such attendance, he would threaten to send the useless old fellow, as he called him, to the hospital or the alms-house. She had not so much pocket-money now at her command as would buy a plaster for the rheumatic back, or a little fruit for the dainty palate. The house of Call & Dunn had failed some time ago, and the junior partner was making a precarious living by gambling, and otherwise swindling the public. But Jacqueline knew nothing of this. She only knew that they had left their fine house, and gone into lodgings; that sometimes there was nothing in the larder for a whole day; that her husband often let himself in at midnight, sometimes stumbling upstairs to his room, and sometimes overtaken by heavy sleep in the hall below. And he was no saint next morning, boxing and frightening children on the slightest pretext; taunting his wife with having squandered his patrimony; taunting her with wearing fine clothes unpaid for; with the support of her beggarly father; with marrying him, George Dunn, for his money.

"You know better than that, George Dunn," she once said, in reply.

"Why did you marry me, then? Come, give me a reason. You married me to get rid of me, perhaps! Capital! What a success! Do you want to know why I married you?"

"It doesn't signify now," she returned.

"Zounds! but it does signify, let me tell you. I married you because I hated Mark Stretton!"

And so Jacqueline sat in her black gown, and looked at the panorama of her past, counting the crosses on the quaint carnelian seal. "Many crosses in life." Did they end here? Ah, no! The bitterest, perhaps, but not all. A widow, with four mouths to feed, and as many backs to clothe, and as many greedy minds to satisfy, was not likely to have an easy time of it—a widow without friends, without money, without a vocation. She tried sewing, but it hardly paid her rent; she entered a mill, but the noise and heat took away strength, and threw her upon a sick bed. The tenement she had rented looked out upon the rear of a beautiful garden, the entrance to which was a whole square distant, where the finer mansions of the city were clustering upon an upper street.

Jacqueline had been used to let her gaze wander through this delightful place as she sat at work. She had watched the grapes cluster and bow the trellises, the speckled pears redden to the sun, the peaches hand like velvet tassels on the overburdened trees, the plums gather bloom and sweetness with every hour. When the gale had played roughly among the boughs, she had looked at the windfalls of golden pippins, and thought what a repast they would furnish for her hungry brood. All their intoxicating odors, mingling together like a bouquet of flowers, came floating in at her open windows, till it seemed as though the very spirit of the fruitage had exhaled into the atmosphere merely to make Jacqueline covetous and the children's mouths water with longing. But now, as she laid upon her sick-bed, the beauty of this fair neighborhood returned to her like a picture; sometimes she dropped asleep to find herself walking under those fragrant boughs, with the dazzling blue breaking through the netted limbs, and the sunshine like a presence beside her. On such occasions little Bert waked her to ask:

"Wus you seeing angels, mamma, like the baby used to did? You smiled all over your face just now." And since her eyes are open to the fact that Bert has her guard about his neck, and her dear old engraved seal in his apron pocket, he finds grace to ask further: "Mamma, Bert will wear this putty seal till you wakes up." But mamma is too sleepy to do more than shake her head, and Bert walks off in triumph, walks down stairs and out into the street, and stops to look between the pickets into the fruit garden, where every blushing peach of them, every clustering grape, every nodding plum, seems to cry, "Come, and let us drop into your mouth," so temptingly that it is too much for the little rogue, with mamma's seal in his calico pocket, and a good deal of hunger in his capacious stomach. So, in an adventurous frame of mind, he trots round the square and opens the garden gate, which moves to the silver chime of a bell, and causes a gentleman, who is giving some orders to the gardener, to turn about and give Master Bert the benefit of a pair of deep, unsmiling eyes shining out of a handsome face, which has the effect of disconcerting the little intruder for the instant, till the deep eyes melt somewhat as they fall upon the rosy, perplexed face, the rings of snarly gold hair.

"Good morning, little one," says the gentleman, with his clear, tuneful voice, that reminds Bert of the wind blowing through the trees. "What have you got for me there in your pocket?" for Bert is holding the seal with great care in that nook, both plump hands engaged in the service.

"It's mine," says he, equivocally.

"Ah! And what will you take for it?" laughing. "Can't we strike a bargain?"

"Take peaches!" returns Bert, sharp at a bargain, as his father had been before him: "ripe peaches; sound too. See!" and he holds up the seal and lets the sunlight winnowing down through the leaves overhead, flash upon it and light up the old engraving. The words the gentleman is about to speak, the laugh that is upon his lips, all dissolve into a profound sigh. Bert is beginning to fancy that he has done wrongly, that the gentleman is going to tell mamma how he was selling her pretty seal for peaches, as he tries to read the grave face before him growing graver every moment, and wrinkled with strange expression; he fancies, too, that there is a tear in the unsmiling eyes regarding the precious seal; and then the gentleman sits down in a garden chair, and holds the seal in his white palm, and seems to have forgotten Bert and the peaches and the waiting gardener, and to have gone a long, long way off, quite out of the sight and hearing of to-day. But by-and-by he comes back again, and calls Bert to his side, and asks gently, with the sound of tears in his voice:

"Where did you find this, my child?"

Bert is sure now that he understands all about it, and is ready to drop with shame.

"Mamma," he begins, "she went to sleep with the headache, and let Bert put it on, and didn't say nothing."

"Where did mamma get it?"

Bert knows nothing about that. "Mamma has worn it forever," he declares.

"Will you take me to see your mamma?"

Feeling as though he had been over reached, Bert consents, and together they pass out of the gate and walk round the square, and pass in at the open tenement-house door, and up the worn staircase up to Jacqueline's room, where grandpa lies all day and counts the flies on the ceiling, and scolds the children for amusement, and watches the clouds flit across the sky, within sight of his window. But it is grandpa who is asleep now, and mamma has staggered up to make the porridge for supper, and to look after the children. She opens the room door at the sound of steps, and naughty Bert rushes into her arms, crying, "Dear mamma, Bert's real sorry;" and then she grows faint and white, for perhaps Bert has broken a window, and the funds are so very low!

The stranger, with his handsome, serious face and fine attire, pauses on the threshold and looks about him. So poor a home just at the foot of his own garden, within a stone's throw of his princely estate; why had he not thought about it? Had his own sorrows blunted him to those of his neighbors? Had he so pitied himself that there was no pity left for others? Had prosperity blinded him to adversity? Then his eyes rested upon Jacqueline, in her shabby gown, with her worn, tired face, her faded eyes; what were those eyes saying to him—what had they said, over and over again, years ago?

"Jacqueline, is it you to whom the seal belongs?" he cries.

"Yes, Mark," she answers, sadly.

"And why did you keep it, Jacqueline, when you had the heart to part with so much that was precious?"

"Because—because I could not part with it, Mark."

"And yet you could forsake the giver in his trouble!"

"I did it for the best. They—he lied to me, Mark; he said if I would, I could purchase your release by marrying him. I was his dupe, and I have suffered for it. But I deserved it for believing that you could write the letter I received, beseeching me to accept the terms of Mr. Dunn, and save you. I was a fool to believe it, but I was young, Mark. After hearing that you were accused I could believe almost anything. I was crazed with trouble. But it was all a forgery on his part to ruin you. He confessed to all on his dying bed—the forged check laid to your charge, the letter to me. But the mischief was done, Mark; still I forgave him. I promised to try and think as kindly as I could of him. I have tried; but it is hard. 'When you see Mark Stretton,' he said, with his last breath, 'tell him I forgive him the debt.' What debt was it, Mark?"

"The debt of your love, Jacqueline. He hated me because I won you—because you loved me. He can afford to forgive me now."

"Yes," said Jacqueline; "but you—will give me back my seal."

"What! do you prize it still!"

"I cannot do without it. I have worn it all these years. It is like a dear friend."

"Is it so precious to you? And I—who love you—so worthless?"

"You? You love me?"

"Yes, Jacqueline, I love you."

"Then give me back my seal," she said, with a charming smile irradiating her worn features—a smile beside which that of youth is prosaic and cold. "If I did not love you, I should not care for it!"

On his wedding morning Mark Stretton took the guard from Jacqueline's neck, and unfastening the old engraved seal, attached in its place a little sphere of wrought gold.

"You have worn 'many crosses in life' long enough, dear love; wear this for the rest of the way, for my sake;" and the pretty charm, opening with a spring, revealed a Cupid of gold-work, his wings like gold vapor spread for flight, bearing a heart-shaped shield of pink topaz, on which was engraved, "Je t'aime."

But with the seal, do you think that Jacqueline has cast away all her crosses? Ah, no; there are crosses in every sphere; and though love may not always be able to turn them aside with his precious shield, yet "Je t'aime" will lighten many a burden.—Bazar.

The Military Election Bill.

The military election bill passed the Senate on Saturday, just as it came from the House. Shortly after midnight Senator Blair closed the debate in a speech of half an hour's duration, remarkable no less for the forcible manner of its delivery than for the forcible points it presented. He made a fierce attack on the carpet-baggers in Congress, and brought to his feet Ames, of Mississippi, whom he charged with electing himself by the bayonets he commanded, and even signing his own certificate of election as military commander. Gen. Blair said that this bill, instead of being a bill to protect the right of suffrage, was a bill to deprive the people of that right. He inquired what was the urgent haste for passing this bill. It is two years in advance of the time when it can possibly be needed. Two sessions of Congress will intervene before it can be put into operation, and why is it urged now, if not because the majority are afraid to meet the Representatives fresh from the people? This bill, like the other, is intended, he said, to enforce the fraudulent Fifteenth amendment, which, as he showed the other day, was carried by the most outrageous fraud and deceit. Senators and Representatives, the people of whose States had overwhelmingly voted down negro suffrage, voted for this amendment, and now sit here and vote for these bills to enforce it. While he recognized the Fifteenth amendment as valid, notwithstanding the manner of its adoption, he could not regard these bills to enforce it as constitutional or valid. While the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Bayard) had spoken of the use of the troops at the elections in New York and Philadelphia, nothing had been said about the use of troops at the South during elections. We had become so used to the bayonet in the South at elections that it seemed to be regarded as a matter of course. The elections were carried by the bayonet, and, said Gen. Blair, the President elected himself by the bayonet, and his military commanders in the South had, by the use of their troops, elected themselves to high offices. One of them is in the Senate now, and it is said another is on his way here.

Mr. Ames, for the first time since he has taken a seat in the Senate, jumped to his feet. "I desire to know, sir," said he, "if the Senator means to intimate that the troops were not used according to law."

Gen. Blair replied promptly: "Oh, I suppose you used them according to the law, but the law had no right or authority under the constitution." He added that the order issued by the United States Attorney and United States Marshal in New York was withdrawn, but it would not have been withdrawn if there had been a Presidential election. He believed that the design now was to pass this bill to give the President power to re-elect himself by the bayonet, as he elected himself by the bayonet before, and to carry the State of New York by driving the Democratic voters from the polls at the point of the bayonet. He looked upon Senator Conkling as the proper person to have charge of the bill in the Senate, for that Senator, he declared, while misrepresenting the voice of his people, voted to fasten negro suffrage upon them, and other Senators did as that Senator did, stained their hands. They talk about "purifying the ballot-box." They purified it in the South with a vengeance. The men whom Congress had set up as rulers there have robbed the people. They are responsible to no one but to Congress. Every one of those Southern States is now on the verge of bankruptcy. One Governor who, when he went down there, had not money enough to buy his breakfast, now lives in a magnificent house and dines a hundred men at a time. They proposed to confer the ballot upon the people of the South, and yet they had disfranchised the very best men of that section. In his own State of Missouri they had felt this thing as keenly as they had in the South, if not more so. These radical plunderers had control of the State, and had made away with its most valuable franchises. They had excluded from the ballot a large majority of the citizens of the State. Gen. Blair said he would much sooner that a military commander had represented Missouri in the Senate than the man who had represented her, and who elected himself through the aid of a few liberal Republicans. Last fall the State of Missouri was rescued from the clutches of the parties who had so long held it, and at the next election it would give 100,000 Democratic majority. That the State had not been ruined by the way in which it had been plundered was because it was a thriving and growing Western country.

The bill has been enrolled, and will be presented to the President on Monday. On its passage Senators Trumbull, Ross, and Tipton voted with the Democrats against it.

PRESIDENT GRANT, since he has attained his present high position, has frequently taken needless pains to show his contempt for the people to whom he owes his elevation. The Washington Patriot says that at the late carnival in that city, right in the midst of the wheelbarrow race, when the presence of carriages was positively prohibited, when the crowd was surging across the avenue in dense throngs, and at a time when it was positively dangerous to the multitude, the President, with the ladies of his family, drove rapidly up the street, followed by another carriage, containing his father-in-law and a lot of juvenile Dents, the two vehicles dashing among the people, scattering them in all directions, and imperiling a number of lives.

Civil Service Reform.

A joint resolution has been reported in the Senate respecting the manner of making appointments to office in the civil service. It authorizes the President to prescribe such rules and regulations for the admission of persons to the civil service of the United States as in his judgment will best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability. The President is also authorized to employ suitable persons to conduct inquiries upon these subjects, and to establish regulations for the conduct of those who may receive appointments. He is likewise empowered to prescribe fees to be paid by all persons applying for appointments, except such classes of honorably discharged soldiers as he may exempt. These fees are to applied to pay the expenses of making such inquiries.

This joint resolution is very good, and we trust that it will be passed by both Houses, and become one of the laws of the land. We hope also that in devising the proposed rules and regulations, the President will pay due attention to two or three principles which are of primary importance, but which, unless his attention should be earnestly called to the subject, might by accident be overlooked and omitted. These principles are briefly as follows:

I. All relations of the President, or of any member of his family, or of his wife's family, should be considered as fit, qualified and suitable for any branch of the public service, and should be regarded as perfectly entitled to any place or places which they may prefer or desire, in preference to all other persons. No examination whatever should be required from any relation of the President, or from any relation of any of his relations. In order to avoid accidents, however, all applicants for office who expect to be appointed by reason of their relationship to the President, or to any member of his or his wife's family, should be required to file documentary evidence that they are in reality related to him or them either by birth or marriage or spiritual affinity. Relations should be preferred in proportion to the nearness of their relationship.

II. Persons who give presents to the President should be entitled to appointments without examination, or any other evidence that they are qualified beyond proof of the fact that they have given presents. So far as possible the offices conferred should be proportioned to the magnitude and value of the presents given. This class of applicants should always have the preference next after the relations of the President or of his or of his wife's relations.

III. As evidence of knowledge, ability and character, testimony may be submitted that the applicant has succeeded in making money out of any confidential position he may have previously held; as, for instance, if he has been a railway director, by betraying the interests of the stockholders, or if he has been employed as a legal adviser, by selling his clients to the opposite parties. Proofs of talent and success in this direction should be regarded as of the first consequence, and as commending the candidate to the most valuable and confidential offices.

IV. No person not a relation of the President, or who has not given him presents, should be appointed to any office unless he belongs to the Temperance Society.

By observing these fundamental principles and giving them due prominence and weight in the rules and regulations to be prescribed, there can be no doubt that the President will soon be able to bring about a thorough reform in the civil service, and to elevate it to a wholesome and satisfactory condition.—*N. PUTTING IT ROUND.—The "smiting," which was in vogue long ago in the land, (Egypt,) is a habit which does not appear so shocking to us, perhaps, as it must to other foreigners. There is much more use of the hand among Anglo-Saxon populations—of the argument called a "blow"—than on the Continent. But in Egypt, whoever can hit, cuff, or kick, does it freely. Sir Anthony Absolute's mode of ruling a household, and its results, may be seen any day in the streets.

There was a curious illustration of this rule the other morning near Shepherd's Hotel. Two men had a dispute over a matter of sale, and from words one of them, the larger and stronger, resorted to a sound boxing on the ears of his antagonist. The latter put his hands to his face, looked round with one glaring eye at the crowd which had been collected by the controversy, and, singling out a laughing donkey-boy, administered to him a tremendous cuff on the side of the head. A few yards away there sat a child of eight or nine years of age against the wall of a house, innocently sucking a piece of sugar-cane. The donkey-boy at once charged him, and kicked him in the ribs. The little fellow looked up, uttered a cry of rage, and seizing a large paving stone which lay close at hand, flung it—at the donkey-boy?—oh, certainly not! but at a poor street dog which lay asleep close at hand.—Russell's Diary in the East.

THE GUANAPE ISLANDS.—The Panama Star states that in removing the guano from the northern island of Guanape, curious objects have been discovered at a depth of forty feet. The most interesting are rudely cut wooden idols, evidently the household gods of the ancient Peruvians, who must have inhabited the islands before they were taken possession of by the birds, many hundred years ago. On the northern portion of the island, after removing the guano, a passage way, leading down to the sea, was laid open, together with a cave, where were found fragments of earthenware vases, two gold ear-rings, and other articles. The vases were in the shape of fruit, and had carvings upon them.

COST OF RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—It is some small satisfaction, says the London Lancet, to know that railway companies do not maim, mutilate and kill their passengers gratuitously. During the past year a total sum of £333,715 was expended by railway companies in the United Kingdom as compensation for personal injury, of which the Great Northern paid £28,000; the Great Western, £20,000; the Lancashire and Yorkshire, £19,380; the Midland, $24,988; the London and Northwestern, £73,803; and the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, $47,437.

Auburn - Courier.

AUBURN IND......MARCH 2. 1871

THE Democratic gains thus far in the United States Senate, are: George Goldthwaite, of Alabama; F. P. Blair, of Missiouri; Z. B. Vance, of North Carolina; Joseph P. Kelley, of Oregon; Henry Cooper, of Tennessee; and H. G Davis, of West Verginia.

Mr. Sarnighausen, according to the Ligonier Banner and Angola Republican was unjustly ousted from his seat as a Senator, by the Republicans. He went back on the regular Democratic ticket, and was elected by the Republicans, on the people's ticket. We think his punishment only equalled by his faithlessness. Served him right.

L. D. Britton, Esq., the Representative from DeKalb County is also a farmer, though, from his circumspect, deportment and physical niceness, with many he would pass for a minister. Born in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, in 1820, and raised and educated in Wayne County, Ohio, he did not become a citizen of Indiana until the year 1850. In his county the political elements are very equally divided, having been nearly a tie for the last ten or twelve years. His majority only ranges at about sixty and therefore the contest is always a hot one, and compells each party to be on the alert and to guard the corners with watchful care and diligence. Mr. Britton has carried the last three elections, having gone through the ordeal like many others of 1868, 1869 and 1870. Plain and temperate, sensible and inteligent, and concientiously scrupulous withal, it is not a matter of wonder that he is successful. Such a man is hard to beat in any part. We learn that he makes an excellent Representative.

IN a brief letter to us yesterday, Mr. B. describes the cowardly action of the Radical members, in their attempt to defeat the Appportment Bill. He says: The Radicals done this, thinking that they would probably compell is to follow in their footsteps of two years ago, and legislate with there being two-thirds of the whole number elected present, but I think we will not endorse Morton and Baker's opinion in that case. The real cause of their resignation is because they could not have every bill to suit them, as they have had for a long time past.

IT is mentioned as a curious circumstance that Blair and Logan each commanded an army corps in the late bloody strife betweed the sections that Blair entered the army a Republican and has just been elected a democratic senator, and Logan entered he waa a democrat, and has just been elected a republican senator.

Address of a Joint Committee Appointed by the Democratic Senators and Representatives in the General Assembly to the People of Indiana.

The forty-seventh session of the General Assembly was abruptly terminated on the 23d instant by the resignation of thirty-four members of the House. The ostensible cause for this revolutionary course was to prevent the passage of the amendment to the apportionment law; but they are without justification. We insist this was a fair, just and necessary bill, and that we had the clear constitutional right to pass it, and considering the opposition it was likely to meet in the Senate, and the fact that but few working days remained, it was deferred as long as prudence would dictate. But conceding it to be unconstitutional, unjust and iniquitous, and that it was pressed with unwarranted haste in the House, the question then arises: Was it a sufficient ground for this revolutionary faction to end the business of the Legislature? If the bill had been passed in the House on the 23d and had gone to the Senate, it could hardly have been taken up in that body before Friday, the 24th. Then as it requires two-thirds to suspend the constitutional rule, which requires bills to be read on three several days, and as that could not be done, and if it had been treated in the Senate as a favored bill it would not have been ready for passage till Monday, when, if important to defeat it, seventeen Senators could have resigned. This would have given three days more time. But if the bill is unconstitutional as it is claimed, when it went to the Governor, he could have kept it three days and vetoed it. This would have been six days more, and then if these members had desired to defeat it they could have resigned, which would have been effectual in defeating the bill, and would have given six days more of legislation, in which time important measures could have been disposed of, or they might have remainded and voted on it after the veto, and then let the Senators have resigned and defeated the bill in the last ditch.

The early days of the session had been taken up in perfecting measures of importance, some of which have already been acted upon. We can not enumerate all, but will briefly allude to the most important. A fee and salary bill passed after great opposition from persons in office, which cuts off constructive fees and county allowances, and saves thousands, of dollars to the people. Also, an act distributing to the several counties of the State, to be loaned out for the use of schools, $600,000 which we found in hands of the State Auditor, yielding no interest for the benefit of the fund, but from which that officer has been realizing anually from twenty to thirty thousand dollars for his own use. Also, an act reducing the tax levy for State purposes from twenty-five cents to five cents on the $100 valuation. Other measures of equal importance had been matured, and could have been passed but for this unwarranted and revolutionary course. We desire to call attention to some that were defeated by this action, and for which the Republican members who resigned, and their advisers, are solely responsible.

First—an act to tax the stock of banks for municipal purposes, had passed the House by a large majority, and would have passed the Senate. Heretofore, the stock in banks, which are all located in cities and towns, and share the protection and reap the benefits of municipal authority, are exempt from any of the expense necessary for their support. It was a measure that Governor Baker called attention to his message as follows:

TAXATION OF BANK STOCK.

"I repeat the recommendation made at the opening of the last General Assembly, that provision be made for taxing the shares of stock in the National and other banks for municipal purposes, as other property is taxable.

The opinions then expressed as to the power and duty of thus legislating remain unchanged."

Second—As act regulating insurance companies which would, according to the statement of Hon. O. M. Wilson, our of the members who resigned, made on the floor of the House, have brought into the State Treasury from eighty to one hundred thousand dollars per annum without any burden to the peeple, and would also have entirely protected the people from wild cat and irresponsible insurance companies of every kind.

Third—An act reducing the governor's house rent from $5,000 to $2,000 per annum, which is the rent actually paid by him, together with $500 for the use of his furniture, thus saving the tax payers of the State $3,000 per annum. Whether this had anything to do with inducing Governor Baker to go into the Republican caucus and urge and entreat reluctant members to resign, we will not say, but leave the people to determine. But this we will say, that some members who have stated that under no circumstnces would they have done it had not Governor Baker personally solicited them to do so.

Fourth—A carefully prepared act to remedy the existing divorce laws of the State to which the attention of the General Assembly had been specially directed by the Governor, in his message, in which the defects of the existing laws were stated at length, and said by him to have "brought reproach upon the State," and recommends certain tamendments where by "Indiana divorces would soon cease to be advertised in any of the Atlantic cities as marketable commodities, and that refugees and fugitives from the justice of other States would no longer come to Indiana in quest of divorces, to be used on their return to their homes as licenses to violate the laws of our sister States," and which act was in accordance with the recommendations of the Governor on the subject, and had passed the Senate, and in a day or two would have passed the House.

Fifth—Tax on Railroads.—In his message the Governor says:

"At the last special session, I called attention in a message, which will be found at page 122 of the Senate Journal, to some very glaring defects in the present law for the assessment and taxation of railroads, through which great injustice is done to the State and to the owners of other kinds of property subject to taxtation."

"I now respectfully call attention to that communication, and renew the recommendation."

A joint committee of both Houses aided by the Governor examined the question and were astonished at the result. As an example, a road running through the northern part of Ohio and this State was found to be assessed in Ohio at $25,000 per mile, which was not near its value, while in Indiana the same road is assessed at $8,000 per mile. In this case there should be added $2,500,000 to the assessment of a single road. A bill was introduced by Mr. Stone (since resigned), which would have passed and remedied these "glaring defects."

Sixth—Railroads.—There was a general demand for a law regulating local freights on railroads. A bill for this purpose had been printed and was made the special order of the House for to morrow. It would have conformed to the Constitution, and would have passed both houses next week, and would have ended the unjust discrimination which railroads have made for years against local frieght.

Seventh—Patent Right Swindlers.—A bill of the House would have passed almost without opposition, giving to the person who signs a note for a patent the right to make full defense to it, notwithstanding it had been assigned and required suit to be brought in the county where the maker of the note resides. This was a necessary law.

Eight—Barnabas Hobbs.—A special committee was inquiring into the question why the printing of the present Superintendent's report cost about eleven thousand dollars, while the printing of Professor Hoss' report cost but about $1,800. The committee had found an overpayment of $2,000 and had not completed their investigations.

Ninth—The Insane—From every county and township in the State come up an appeal for provision for the poor and unfortunate insane. Governor Baker in his message states that not more than one-third of the insane can be cared for at the Hospital, and it is a disgraceful fact that our jails and poor houses are filled with incurable insane, who aught to be in the Asylum.

The Committee of the House on Benevolent Institutions all signed a report, of which the following is an extract:

"We find one ward not fit for a horse stable. It is an old dilapidatea and dungeon like room, with low ceilings and no ventilation, which together with the hissing steam pipes and about twenty-five insane persons, very readily makes visitors apprehensive that they are near the infernal regions. Mr. Speaker, this ward should be abandoned and condemed as an improper place to put human beings, however insane. But this can not be done until room is prepared for the patients who occupy it."

Within the next five days a law would have been passed making provision for additional buildings, so as to meet the demands of the unfortunate and save the honor of the State. As the matter now stands, these poor women must remain in their pandemonium, or be sent home for confinement in jails with criminals.

All the Democratic members, except those who were absent on account of sickness, were in their seats ready to discharge their duty and pass the laws demanded by the people. But they were prevented from doing so by the Republican members in the House resigning their seats and breaking a quorum. Upon whom the responsibility rests for this, we leave to the judgement of a candid people.

CHANGED.—We made brief mention, last week, of the recent change that has taken place in the Sentinel establishment, at Fort Wayne, Messrs. Dumm & Henderson having sold their interest to Burt & Tucker. Mr. Dumm remains as editor of the paper, and now that his entire attention can be given to this department we look for the Sentinel to rapidly rise in favor and prestige with the people.

We regard Mr. Dumm as one of the ablest and most brillant writers in the State, possessing a rare faculty for that spice, humor and originality of expression that has already made him popular as a journalist. Honorable and dignified, with a true comprehension of merit and excellence, we gladly accede to him that position which his accomplishments and scholarly attainments most surly entitle him to hold, and wish him the same proportionate degree of success in the future that has marked his course in the past.

Messrs. Burt & Tucker are gentlemen of large practical experience,—financial ability combined with a long career in the newspaper service, and with these requisites the Sentinel is destined to be the leading paper of the State.

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Wood.—Will some of our subscribers who have already promised, bring us some good dry wood?

The weather yesterday was quite lamb like, but according to the old tradition, the lion will come in for his share at the end of the month.

Mothers used to provide switches for their daughters from the nearest bush; now the daughters get their own switches, from the milliner.

Our excellent friend, J. H. F. Hollinger wants his patrons to come down with the stamps, as will be seen in another column. Can't get along without money, you know and J. means business.

Commissioners' Court.—The Board of Commissioners of this county met in regular session next Monday, to transact any business that may come before them. All matters within their jurisdiction should be presented early in the week.

J. Woodburn & Co., are publishing a fine illustrated story paper, at Bellefontaine O. at the small sum of $1 per year. They have already gained a large circulation and offer some very handsome prizes for getting up clubs. See advertisement.

A young married lady being applied to for a situation by a servant girl asked. "Why, you see, ma'am," replied the girl. "I was too good-looking, and when I opened the door the gentlemen always took me for the missis."

Advice to the Ladies.—If ladies will raise their skirts when they cross a street or if they will promenade the sidewalks when the wind blows a gale, they ought to be sufficiently considerate of the men's feelings to wear nice, clean, tidy, good-fitting white stockings.

Plants in Bedrooms.—It should be known to all persons that have plants in a close bedroom at night is a practice detrimental to health. Even plants not in flower and without smell injure air during the night, and in the absence of the sun, by impregnating it with nitrogen and carbonic acid gas.

One of our city pastors on being asked to preach from the text, "There is a time to dance," replied: "When I have become satisfied that the important duty of dancing is neglected in my congregation, rest assured I will give all needed admonition on the subject."

Burglary.—Baum & Walter's safe at Avilla was broken into and robbed of $500 on the 16 th inst., and the safe at the depot served the same way. There were two dogs in the store at the time, and a family living within twenty feet of the building, and yet no one heard the burglars at work.

Sales of Books at the West.—The entire book trade of Chicago, including that small portion of the stationery trade which is done by the book houses, nearly reaches $3.000.000 per year. Of the unabridged dictionaries, Griggs & Co., sell annually, 1000 copies of Webster, and about 25 of Worcester.—Chicago Evening Post.

John Sass and Kate Green were licensed to marry last week. We suppose a supply of green "sass" the year around will be the result.—South Bend Union.

John is somewhat sassy, but Katie ain't so green as she was. No doubt sass will be plenty in that family.

Binding.—Those of our citizens who desire to have their magazines, books, music &c., bound can have it neatly attended to by leaving them at this office. We have arrangements made at Fort Wayne for this class of work and can get it done at a reasonable figure. Bring your books to the Courier office.

Shade Trees.—What adds more to property than a few thrifty vigorous shade trees? Nothing, and yet a great many pay too much indifference to the matter. There are many places yet that might be beautified and adorned by a few maples, or other shade trees, with but very little trouble and no expense. Yet there seems to be a want of them in our midst.

Scribner's Monthly.—The March number of this excellent magazine is before us and is usually full of that class of literature, as instructing as it is interesting. There, are many of our readers who have never seen this magazine as it is only a half year old as yet, and we would advise them to obtain a copy and examine it carefully. Address, Scribner & Co., 654 Broadway N. Y.

A little boy, at Warsaw, by the name of Williams who attends school was asked by his teacher to pronounce the word g-r-a-c-e He gave it up, and the teacher, to fresh his memory, asked him: "What did your father say this morning before eating breakfast? The boy thought a moment, and finally said: "Pa said d—n these eggs, they are all rotten.

Stop It.—We have noticed that the Court yard is used as a general rendevous, by the boys, who do not stop at doing all the injury they can, unintentionally perhaps, to the trees and fence on the premises. This should be stopped at once, as it will always be attended with more or less damage to the property.

Fire Cistern.—We hope a fire cistern will be constructed near the public square during the present spring. In case of fire, there is at present, no facilities for obtaining water, in any quantity, in order to subdue it, as can be done in many cases. This will be of great public benefit, and should be attended to at the earliest moment, as there is no telling when it may be needed.

Livery.—Our enterprising friend J. Rainier is increasing his livery facilities and is always ready to accommodate his friends and patrons. After the roads get settled and in good condition a buggy ride will no doubt be one of the greatest luxuries to many, especially in good rigs, and Joe has 'em.

Doors, Sash &c.—As many of our citizens intend building this year, we would respectfully call attention to Col. O. D. Hurd, in another column. The Colonel has a large factory at Fort Wayne, for the manufacture of doors, Sash, blinds, mouldings &c., and we can from personal acquaintance recommend the Colonel as an obliging, accommodating and gentlemanly follow, and a correct and prompt business man.

Dorean Tableaux.—This beautiful work of art, will be exhibited at the M. E. Church, in this place, to-morrow (Friday) evening. It consists of fifty-six scenes of the Bible, painted on canvass, from the life like representations of Gustave Dore, the great French artist. It will prove very entertaining and instructive to our citizens and we hope all will give it their liberal patronage. Admission tickets 25 cents, children 15 cts.

Stephen T. Lutz to Catharine E. Meor.
John Eckhart to Olive McClure.
A. K. Stephens to Adaline Roby.
John Yents to Ellen Morrigan.
Joseph Kinsely to Minerva Cobbler.
James Campbell to Olive Aldrich.
John Robison to Nancy Casebeer.
Thomas Stafford to Sarah Coulter.
Geo. B. Thompson to E. A. Murry.
Jacob A. Sheffer to Amanda Coburn.

Terrible Accident.—An infant, son of Mr. C. Baker, was accidently scalded the other week by running against a tea-kettle, containing hot water, which had been placed upon the floor for a moment. We stepped in to see the little sufferer, the other day, and beheld a sight that was truly pitiable. The little fellow seemed very patient though suffering agonies. His abdomen, sides, hips thighs and back are completely raw from the effects of the scald. Immediately after it was scalded peritonitis set in, but through the excellent management of Dr. Ford, this gave way, and the child is in a fair way to recover. Another warning to parents to be more careful.

Improvements.—It has been said that there is no such a thing as standing still, in this world,—we must be on the move, either forward or backward, and we believe it. Then we must be improving and adding to the wealth and attractions of our place, or detracting therefrom. Which is it? The present year will tell. In that time there is a great deal to accomplish, and hard work is in store for every one. Let us all put our shoulder to the wheel, and manfully, by one united effort, show the world that we have energy and enterprise, and will develope ourselves into a thriving and prosperous town.

Interesting to Farmers.—We are informed that there is a good time surely coming for our farmers, on accout of the foreign demand for grain promising to be greater than for many years. The war having consumed home supplies, the draught on foreign supplies must be greatly increased. Moreover, the war has greatly interfered with fall sewing in Germany and France, and the next aggregate of crops in these countries must be much smaller than heretofore. The probability of an increased demand for American wheat is strengthened by the immense falling off in the supply on hand in the four chief grain markets of the world since January 1st, 1870. Between the comparative smallness of the stock on hand and the certain diminution of the European crop, a brisk demand upon America is inevitable, and an increase of prices will follow as a matter of course.

The Court House Square.—The general attractiveness of this enclosure is mainly confined to the excellent site it occupies, and the fine building which graces its center How much more beautiful it could be made by the introduction of shade trees, can at present only be conjectured. The question which we wish to propound is, shall it remain in this barren state, or shall it be productive of a beautiful grove? Have we not enterprise enough about us to see it improved and beautified in this way? If we do not exhibit it before long, the impression will go out against us, and the uninviting aspect of things generally will injure us in the sight of all who may wish to cast their lot with us.

There is one thing certain, we must throw of this spirit of indifference, and inactivity in a public way, and bring ourselves to a higher standard of taste and order, or suffer the consequences. Already the effects of this can be traced to various results that have been antagonestic to the welfare of our town. A stranger entering a new place would scarcely be induced to remain, if indolency and a lack of tidiness were the crowning features, and we shall certainly merge into something like that very soon, unless we awaken from our stupor, and go to work toward improving what we have got.

The time is near at hand when this work should begin, and we look for an upheavel of things generally, old styles and notions pushed out of the way to the back ground, and order taste and refinement taking their place. We have no doubt that this will be done, now that our future prospects are so bright and promising. We have a suggestion to make in regard to furnishing the court yard with shade trees. Let ever farmer within easy distance select a nice maple tree, or any other kind that will answer, and when coming to town, bring it along with him. The citizens here would gladly plant it, and thus without expense, and but little trouble, we would have a beautiful grove, each tree being the representation of some enterprising farmer.—Let it be done.

Horrible Crime Discovered.

Just as we go to press. we are informed by a gentleman whose reputation for truth and varacity is 'unexceptionable,' that a horrible crime supposed to have been committed some time last year, has come to light, the particulars of which are enough to blanch the cheek of the bravest, and cause each particular hair to stand on end. The shocking affair is said to have occurred only a short distance from town, on the west road, and is only another corroboration of that trite saying "murder will out."

It was just at the close of an autumal day, that a solitary horseman might have been seen wending his way to his quiet and peaceful home, unconscious of the terrible affray in which he was soon to participate. As he disappeared beyond the western horizen, which brought him in full view of his happy home, he was suddenly attacked from behind by a notorious villain, named Amos Keeter, who seemed intent upon shedding blood. The rider turned and prepared to defend himself, fully aware that a desperate struggle was about to ensue. Being a powerful man he sought to frighten his adversary away, but all in vain. Self preservation being the first law of nature, he then determined to settle the matter and after a desperate struggle, he had the satisfaction of seeing his enemy tumble forward to the ground a bleeding lifeless corpse. What became of the body he never knew, and from that day to this not a word has passed his lips, in regard to the affair. He has requested us not to mention his name, but we informed him that should the matter ever be orought before the authorities, we were in duty bound to disclose all we knew of the affair. And so the matter rests.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

Things have assumed a somewhat different shape in regard to the Eel River Railroad, within the last few days, and matters have been so arranged that we may know definitely in the next ten days what is to be the fate of this road. We are informed by Mr. Ensley, one of the directors of the road, that a meeting of that Board was held at Columbia City, during the latter part of last week, to adopt some plan, and take such measures for the speedy completion of the road. There is a strong desire prevailing among the Directors for the construction of the road to Butler, and they will adopt any plan that will secure this result. But they see the necessity of prompt action, as the charter of the rord will expire at the end of the present year, and it must be completed before that time arrives. The Union Construction Co., who have the contract for the construction of this road, having become seriously embarrassed for the want of money, were forced to suspend operation a few weeks ago, and since then have been trying to regain their feet again. The meeting of the Board was called to see what this company intended to do, and after hearing several propositions an executive Committee was appointed by the Directors and the above company allowed ten days more to secure assistance from those who, they claimed, they were already in communication with, for this purpose. This executive committee and Union Construction Co., departed last Monday for New York, where they expect to effect a loan, inside of the specified ten days. If they should fail here they intend applying to a prominent railroad corporation of Canada. Should this last resort fail we may settle down to the fact, however unpleasant it may be, that the road will only be constructed to this place, under the auspices of the Central Michigan. A majority of the stockholers and Directors will do their utmost to have it completed this year, and would rather see it in the hands of the Central Michigan, than to see it remain in its present condition. We most earnestly hope that the mission to New York will be a fruitful one and that the necessary assistance will be given, and the road constructed according to the orignal plan and charter.

In regard to the Baltimore & Chicago R. R. there has nothing occurred of a recent date to change the impression already prevalent as to its construction, through this place. The towns east of us are strenuously endeavoring to get up a rivalry as to the most practical route, but we have the inside track and we propose to dictate terms to these aspirants. We can come to the conclusion that this road will be built on this line, and everyone should go to work, and encourage it by every possible means in their power.

The Veil Lifted.

Heathen mythology in its boundless and imperial sophistry, could not rival in deep and complicated problems, such metaphysical research as is required by the philosopher of the present time, to make plain the truths before wayward fancies of this generation. Yet here and there our country is enlightened, and the ponderous and illimitable pressure which bears down with mountain weight, assumed by a single individual.

It is scarcely necessary to name the gifted orator and philosopher, whose words, like the lightning's clear flashing over the dark peaks of the Alpine ranges, come down into the troubled atmosphere of our contentions and distracted country, showing beyond a question the true and only true position for all parties. We refer to that patriot and statesman, "J. N."—the Immortal "J N." He asks no one to take the pressure, but takes it all upon himself, and shows how viewing it from their stand point both parties are right and both are wrong. Thus, the light breaks. Go on "J. N."

From every hill and vail,
Proclaim the true and lasting tale,
Till all shall own the might of right,
And peace come home with saving light.

From a letter we learn that the Professor will break forth in a gushing master piece of oratory, to the bewildered citizens of this locality soon.

Tribute of Respect.

Hall of Auburn Lodge No. 116 I. O. O. F.

Fire.—Kendallville has again been visited with a destructive fire. Last Saturday eve., about 7 o'clock, the alarm was given, and it was soon ascertained that the Air Line House a large building near the Railroad on Main street, formerly used as a hotel, was on fire. It was first discovered in the third story, which was narrower than the other portions of the building, and evidently caught from sparks from the chimney. The flames spread so rapidly, there being a high wind at the time, that it soon became evident that the building must burn, and the efforts of our citizens were turned to rescuing its contents. A part of the building was occupied by Mrs. Bicknell, as a residence, and her household goods were deposited in the street in short order, and without much formality. The building was about 40 by 70 feet a massive structure, timber frame and burned slowly. No other building was injured by the fire. The actual value of the building is hard to estimate, but it had changed hands frequently of late at from six to seven thousand dollars, in trade. It was owned, we believed, by George Adee, not a residence of this place, and there was a policy of insurance on the building for $1,500 in the Putnam, and one for $500 in the Phœnix.—Kendallville Standard.

An eccentric sample of humanity named Sample, lives at Topeka, Kan. He quarreled with a neighbor the other day, and the same night suddenly sprang up in bed, drew a big knife from under his pillow, yelled "D—n you, I'll kill you," and cut his wife's throat from ear to ear. The wound was not deep enough to cause immediate death, and it is thought the woman may recover. Sample asserts that he was asleep at the time, and dreaming of his quarrel; but the circumstances of his knowing where the knife was is not wholly consistent with this story; and his wife naturally objects, after the alarming sample of his way of "fighting his battles o'er again," to having any more Samples of the same sort in her sleeping apartment.

Correspondence.

New Era, March 1st, 1871.

Mr. Editor.—The first day of Spring has dawned upon us, without the necessary accompaniments, the Robin and Blue-bird.—The winter has been pleasant and profitable for this place.

Our school has been continued another month by subscription, and the citizens take a lively interest in education. In connection with the day school, our teacher has had an evening class, for parents, and young folks generally, who could not attend the day school. Prominent, among the members of this class. may be mentioned, the names of Mr. Houser our popular Trustee, Gorden, Dr. Larimore, Bacon, Easly, Hoffman, Gettel, Millikan, Buchanan and host of others, with their wives and sweethearts, all attentive and efficient students. We venture to assert, that Butler Township is second to none in the county, with reference to education.

We have quite an acquisition to our society here recently, in the person of Mr. Spake, of Auburn, who, not only keeps our pedal extremities well protected, but fills our hearts with music.

He is about to open a school here for instruction in the principles of music, of which, he is a thorough and proficient teacher.

Our quiet little village was recently visited with quite an excitement. Our active and good looking sewing machine agent, whose head quarters are at this place, on arriving home late one evening, left a machine in his wagon; but before retiring for the night, he bethought of his neglect, and hastened to put it in its accustomed place, of safety and securiety. On reaching the wagon, no machine was there. As he started to tell his loss, and procure assistance, he encountered a neighbor, who informed him, that he saw two men carrying something towards a piece of woods about a mile from town. Our now almost frantic Agent, aroused from their slumbers some half dozen of his companions, of undaunted courage, and after procuring all the revolvers the place afforded, which consisted of two, all told, one of which, could only be discharged, our brave boys started in pursuit of the theives. It was a bright moon light night, and it was a glorious sight to see that brave little band, rush across the fields and scale the fences with coat tails streaming out behind, led by the excited Agent. No fox hunt, or horse race, could exceed it in grandeur. One somewhat corpulent man having eaten too many buckwheat cakes for supper was considerably in the rear, but pushed on bravely to the rescue. After searching the woods in every direction, and being exceedingly fatigued, a council of war was held, and it was determined that they should return, and in the morning advertise the thieves at the railroad stations. As our tired and nearly exhausted party arrived in town the first thing that met their vision was the machine, standing in its accustomed place in the wagon. Some mischievous boys, whose moustaches are past the aid of warm ginger cakes, had removed it, and during the absence of the party had placed it in statu quo.

We need only say that our Agent took it like a philosopher, and "set it up," not benzine, for it is no where to be found in all this region round, but the peanuts and candy.

Richland Center Feb. 27th 1870.

Editor Courier.—The winter term of the Richland Center School closed last Thursday. It has been quite successfully managed by A. P. Goetschius, a competent teacher, and a gentleman who ignores mediocrity, and is determined to become one of the best in the profession. May he ever meet with success in the field of usefulness to which he has aspired.

The exercises of the forenoon were mainly recitations, all of which gave ample evidence of the proficiency which all had made during the term. After the enjoyment of an hour of so at noon the school was called to order, by the teacher. The afternoon exercises consisted in declamations, rehearsals, dialogues and vocal music all of which made a pleasant entertainment. The exercises were closed with a brief but appropriate address to the pupils, by the teacher, and all returned to their respective homes.

A Spectator.

Wednesday, March 1st, 1870.

Editor Courier.—It happened to be my good fortune to attend the closing exercises of the Britton School, which took place on the 17th. The school for the last five months has been under the care of C. P. Houser, teacher, and the closing exercises proved his ability as an efficient teacher.—The last three days of the school were devoted to examination. The nature of the questions showed Mr. Houser's skill in selecting what the lawyers call "leading questions," and the result of the examination indicated a thorough drill of the pupils. The forenoon of the last day was devoted to the recitation of small classes. It was indeed pleasing to hear those read who have been trained by the "word method," they observed so closely the emphasis and inflection, avoiding altogether the "common school tone." All the exercises showed that, the teacher's object has been to teach the "young idea how to shoot." The first exercise in the afternoon was reading, conducted on the analytical method, this exercise was attended with much interest. The next exercise was in map drawing, quite a number of pupils were engaged in drawing the States east of the Mississippi river. We think Mr. Houser's method of teaching Geography very commendable and worthy of imitation by all our teachers. Next came the declamations which were recited with credit to the school The teacher then made a few very appropriate remarks. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather there was quite a number in attendance. The exercises were concluded by the singing of a few very beautiful songs by the school.

Tuesday, February 28, 1871.

Editor Courier.—I promised you an article for your paper this week, but being very busy, and in order to get it to you in time for publication, this week, I must be brief. While at Butler last week I visited the school under the supervision of Examiner McIntosh, found a lively interest throughout all the departments. The last two days, Thursday and Friday were devoted to examinations excepting on Friday afternoon the closing exercises consisted of songs declamations and dialogues, and an address by McIntosh, subject retrospective and prospective views. At the close of this address the pupils of the high school presented a beautiful Album containing the pictures of most of the students of that department to their teacher Mr. McIntosh, who on receiving it made a very interesting speech, which concluded the exercises.

"That Little Church Around the Corner" the latest popular Song, written by Dexter Smith, music by C. A. White, (authors of "Put Me in My Little Bed!") is published entire in the Folio for March, which also contains 'The Sleigh-ride,' a charming piece of piano music, by H. J. Bennett. A beautiful, full-page Portrait of Ole Bull, the great Violinist, is also given as a Supplement. The Folio contains a communication from Mr. P. S. Gilmore, of Boston Peace Jubilee Fame; a Story, entitled, "How Grace Morgan became Famous," "Valuable Hints to Piano-Forte Owners" thirty columns of original Sketches, Poems, News, etc. The Music, alone, is worth ten times the cost of the Folio, which is only one dollar a year! Specimen copies of the Folio, containing one dollar's worth of music, are sent free to all applicants. Address White, Smith and Perry, Boston.

With due reverence for the cause of religion, and feeling that it is our duty to defend the broad principles which tend to elevate mankind and make them better, we protest against the operations of those who make themselves profaners of sacred things that they thereby advance their pecuniary interests at the expense of honest people. Our town has been visited quite recently by a man who claims to have in his possession an original picture of Christ, which he sells for whatever he can get, and thus takes advantage of those who are disposed to be credulous. The bare-faced impudence of this charlatan is astonishing, and the smooth tongued story he tells to make his deception appear plausible, is really surprising. We hope that he will be spurned from every door, as he is too poor and contemptible to be allowed within the corporation of any city. Such men are unprincipled sevengers, and ought to be passed around by every journal in the country.—Columbia City Post.

Marriage and Death.

John E. Bilbrough, of Dubuque, Iowa, and Mary Trowbridge, of Chicago, to gratify a pleasant whim, came to this place last Saturday to be married on the ensuing Sabbath. Every preparation that money could procure was made for the pleasure and comfort of the enthusiastic and happy couple. On Sunday afternoon, at half past two o'clock, Rev. J. W. Welch united them in marriage at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a large and very respectable portion of our citizens assembled to witness the ceremony. It was a matter of common remark among our citizens that a very happy future ought to follow such a promising beginning, and the rich and tasteful wardrobe of the bride and groom furnished a prolific theme for conversation. That preparation, and that ceremony, cost the bride her life. The excitement incidental to the occasion was too severe for a system not possessed of the strongest nerves, and on Monday, just before noon, she was attacked with convulsions, which terminated her life about six o'clock in the evening. She was unable to communicate with her friends after the first attack, with the exception of an occasional presure of the hand.—LaGrange Standard.

Early Rising.

A young farmer found he was getting reduced in circumstances. He went to a friend to ask his advice. This friend, with a grave face, said, "I know of a charm that will cure that: take this little cup, and drink from it every morning of, the water you must get at such a spring. But remember, you must draw it yourself at five o'clock, or the charm will be broken." The next morning he walked across his fields. for the spring was at the farther end of his estate. and spying a neighbor's cows which had broken through his fence, and were feeding on his pasture, he turned them out and mended the fence. The laborers were not yet at work; when they came loitering along after their proper time, they were startled at seeing their master so early. "Oh!" said he, "I see how it is; it comes of my not getting up in time." This early rising soon became a pleasant habit; his walk and cup of water gave him an appetite for breakfast; and the people were, like him, early at work. He soon acknowledged that the advice his friend had given was as good as it was simple.

Only a stray sunbeam! Yet perchance it has cheered some wretched abode, gladdened some stricken heart, or its golden light has found its way through the leafy branches of some wild wood, kissed the moss covered bank where the tiny violets grow, and shades of beauty to adorn its lovely form. Only a gentle breeze! But how many aching brows hath it fanned, how many hearts have been cheered with its gentle touch! Only a frown. But it left a sad, dreary ache in that child's heart, and the quivering lips and tearful eyes told how keenly he felt it. Only a smile! But, ah, it cheered the broken heart, engendered a ray of hope, and cast a halo of light around the unhappy patient; made the bed-riden one forget his present agony for a moment in the warmth of the sunshine. Only a word of encouragement—a single word! It gives to the drooping spirit new life, and the steps press on to victory.

To Nebraska, California, Kansas, and The B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is Burlington, on the Mississippi, It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western termini.

Its northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing to Omaha, it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the intra continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and trade choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincolo, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the South Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season, rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg, it makes close connections twice a day, for St. Joseph. Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to no other in speed, safety, or any Pullman luxury of Modern travel; and while on your way, survey the garden of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then before the people bound westward, "to take the Burlington Route."

The next new novel will be entitled. "Naughty, Awful Naughty; But so Nice!" Patience is the only thing that keeps us up until that book is published. What the dence can it be about? If it is so nice we shall go and be naughty some.

—Experts have been appointed to examine into the affairs and accounts of the Methodist Book Concern.

—At Pittsburgh recently, Abram Shaffer was sentenced to the Penitentiary for seven years for passing counterfeit money.

—In the case of the New Hamburg railroad disaster, the Coroner's jury exonerated every one. The massacre was purely accidental, and could not be foreseen.

—George Clark, employed as a telegraph operator for the past eight years by the Western Union Company, at No. 145 Broadway, fell from a train near West Point, Ga., recently, and was killed.

—On the 23d, seven firemen on the steamship Ismalia, at Pier 10, North River, were suffocated by burning charcoal in a close room. Five are dead, and the others were taken to the hospital. There is little hope of their recovery. All were natives of Scotland.

—The boiler of Kern & Tillinghast's establishment at Twilight Well, near Parker's Landing, Pa., exploded at 4 o'clock, Sunday, instantly killing Charles Tillinghast and John Trax, a pumper, and severely scalding W. H. Kern. Tillinghast's body was thrown two hundred feet down the hill. Portions of the boiler were thrown two hundred yards. The explosion was caused by a too high pressure of steam.

—A frightful accident occurred on the 23d, at the Brookfield coal bank in Brookfield township, O., owned by the Westerman Iron Company and others. Fifteen men were descending the slope in two cars, and through the carelessness of the man whose duty it was to attach the chain, he failed to do so, and the car with the men descended at a fearful rate with nothing to check them. A man named Redmond was killed, and five others so badly injured that they cannot recover. The rest, with the exception of one, were more or less injured.

A couple were married at Kelly's house in the evening, and after they had retired a party of youngsters, mostly relatives of the bride, assembled to charavari them. Mr. Kelly, hearing the noise, arose, and, taking an unused gun, snapped it at the crowd, when it went off, instantly killing a brother of the bride, named Garton, and seriously wounding two others. Mr. Kelly did not discover what he had done till next morning, as the boys carried away their comrades. He came into town and surrendered himself to the Sheriff, and claims that he thought the gun was not loaded, and only intended to frighten the boys.

Nevertheless, said Thiers, the terms of peace will be courageously discussed with the Prussians, and will only be accepted if consistent with the honor of France. "The task of the administration is to pacify and reorganize the country, restore its credit, and reorganize labor. When this is accomplished the country itself will decide its destinies."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate, on the 21st, bills were introduced to increase the internal revenue derived from lotteries and for other purposes.——Anthony submitted a letter from the proprietors of the Congressional Globe, stating that their contract for printing Congressional debates would expire on the 3d of March next, and asking for a new contract.——The unfinished business being the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, it was then proceeded with. An amendment by Williams to increase the salaries of the Comptrollers and Auditors of the Treasury and Interior Departments, and the Assistant Postmaster General and Commissioners of Customs and Pensions to $4,000 per annum, was adopted.——Adjourned.

The only work of moment of the House was the passage of an act to incorporate the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of the road and for other purposes.——Churchill, from the Committee on Elections, made report in the Missouri contested election case, Shields against Van Horn, with resolutions declaring that Shields, the contestant, is not entitled to the seat, and that Van Horn, the sitting member, is, and that Shields shall be paid $5,000 for expenses. The resolutions were adopted.——Adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 22d, a petition was presented praying for protection against Ku-Klux outrages in Alabama. Referred.——The Indian appropriation bill came up, and several amendments were disposed of.——The Post Route bill was called up, considered and passed.——At the evening session the Indian appropriation bill was again discussed, but without coming to any final action on the subject, the Senate adjourned.

The House had a stormy debate on the deficiency bill, and after a good many sarcastic speeches and personal explanations, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was carried, and the bill passed by a vote of 96 to 44.——The morning hour having expired, the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 23d, the McGarrahan claim was laid upon the table.——A bill providing for the punishment of embezzling bank officers was passed.——The Senate bill to amend the bounty laws was passed. It provides that all soldiers who were mustered into the service of the United States for three years, between May 4 and July 22, 1861, and who were honorably discharged before serving two years by reason of disability contracted in the service, are entitled to receive $100 bounty.——A bill incorporating the Asiatic Commercial Company was reported.——The bill for the relief of distillers was indefinitely postponed.——The bill to increase internal revenue arising from lotteries and other purposes was also postponed.——The remainder of the session was spent in considering the Indian Appropriation bill, which was finally passed.

The House passed the bill relative to taking depositions in courts of the United States.——Also the bill for an extension of time for the completion of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior canal.——Also the Senate resolution prescribing the oath to be taken by Senator-elect Miller, of Georgia.——The bill making appropriations for the construction, preservation and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense, passed.——The River and Harbor bill next came up, and after several hours had been spent in offering and debating amendments, some of which were agreed to, the rules were suspended, and the bill passed by a vote of 149 to 39.——Adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 24th, the Judiciary Committee reported favorably the bill repealing the test oath, and were discharged from further consideration of the President's message.——The bill relating to bridges across the Mississippi was passed.——The Texas Pacific bill was called up, debated, and finally went over.——A large number of bills here came up, but were indefinitely postponed.——A message was received from the President, announcing that he had signed the bill prescribing the form of the oath to be taken by Miller, claiming a seat as Senator from Georgia. Upon invitation of the Vice-President, Miller, who was present, came forward and took the oath prescribed, and entered upon his duties.——The bill to guard the purity of elections was then taken up, and a stormy debate ensued, which lasted until 1:30 a. m., when the bill passed by a strictly party vote. The most exciting session of the season was upon this bill.——Adjourned.

In the House a motion was made to repeal the duty on coal, but it was tabled.——The House then took up the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, and after disposing of 25 pages of the bill, adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 25th, the bill to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copy rights was passed.——The House bill providing for celebrating the 100th anniversary of American independence at Philadelphia was also passed.——A conference committee was appointed on the Southern Pacific Railroad bill.——The Post Office appropriation bill next came up, and the remainder of the morning hour was spent upon it without coming to vote on the question.——Adjourned.

In the House, a letter was read from Gen. Pleasanton, urging the repeal of the income tax.——The Senate bill to amend the act to establish the railroad and bridges of the New Orleans, Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad Company as a post road, passed.——The House then again took up the appropriation bill, which consumed the morning hour, when an adjournment was ordered without action on the bill.

The Peace Treaty.

A dispatch from Paris, dated Sunday, the 26th of February, says: The conclusion of peace is now certain. Thiers and Favre and the Consultative Commission have accepted the following conditions:

First—The cession of Alsace and Metz, but Belfort to be restored to France.

Second—The payment of war indemnity of five milliards francs.

Third—A portion of French territory, with some fortified towns like Sedan, to remain in the possession of the Germans until the conditions of the treaty are fulfilled.

Fourth—The German army to enter Paris Monday, and occupy the Champs Elysees.

Fifth—Peace to be proclaimed when the French Assembly ratifies these conditions.

San Domingo—Professor Blake's Report.

Prof. Blake made a most interesting report of his expedition to the mouths of Yuna and the supposed coal beds. He visited all the places mentioned by McClellan in his report. He took bearing and names, so that his report is topographical as well as geological. He found that the peninsula of Samana was practically an island, a branch of Yuna river in high water, severing it from the mainland. At other times, the part connecting the peninsula with the mainland is low and swampy. It is reported that there are but two feet of water on the bar at the mouth of the Yuna, which is gradually filling up with sand. Prof. Blake found no coal, but immense seams of lignite, which may be defined to be impure coal. It belongs, geologically, to a later formation, and contains less carbon and more water and volatile products than coal. Lignite is not good for ocean steamers, but can be profitably used in manufactories and for river steamboats. Locomotives have been constructed to burn it.

We left Samana early Monday morning, the 30th, and steamed slowly along the bold headlands, with the wind and sea against us, and on Tuesday afternoon came in sight of San Domingo. We cast anchor in the roadstead, where we were tossed by a heavy sea and made extremely uncomfortable. San Domingo can never be a place of commercial importance, for it has no harbor for vessels drawing over ten feet. They are compelled to remain outside at anchor, and are cheered by the pithy remark of West India pilots, "In case of a storm or strong south wind be prepared to slip your cable and put to sea, for your anchor will not hold, or if it holds, the cable will part, and you will drift on rocks."

—The London Standard of the 24th ult. has a special from Versailles announcing that the treaty of peace has been signed by Thiers and Bismarck. Some of the details are unarranged, but all will be finally settled soon. France pays to Germany 320,000,000 thalers. Alsace and Lorraine, including the cities of Metz and Nancy, are ceded to the Germans.

WHAT Columbus did—a notion crossed him, and he crossed an ocean.

Boys at Play.

BY W. O. C.

I sometimes see the boys at play,
Or hear them shouting along the street;
And thoughts flow back for many a day,
When youth and springtime buds were sweet.

My father's house was old and brown;
Old orchard trees stood on the lea,
The brook ran like a silver thread,
Down through the meadows to the sea.

Across the brook a plank was laid;
Our timid feet went creeping o'er;
We seemed, sometimes, almost afraid
To venture on so strange a shore.

The cows came home at fall of night,
And waited in the grassy lane;
Then, in the rosy morning's light,
We drove them to the meads again.

The Sabbath days were cool and sweet;
There came a murmur from the sea;
I heard the distant bells repeat,
Afar their praiseful melody.

We loved the springtime sweet and bloom;
The wild rose wet with morning dew;
I love them yet, and still have room
For all the joys my boyhood knew.

Success in Farming.

At a late meeting of the Farmers' Club at St. Louis, Mo., "Success in Farming" was discussed. Rev. Mr. Peabody related his experience, and then said:

The principles on which farming can be made successful are, first, a man must take hold and work, and see that those around him do the same. At that time if a farmer said to his men, "Come, boys, and work," the thing was done and done well. It was not apt to be done at all if he said, "Go to work, boys," and sat in the house doing nothing. To farm a large number of acres successfully, a man must be up as early and retire as late as any one on the farm, at the same time keeping his eyes on everything. He must have the same carefulness and frugality that a man must possess to go on 'Change and succeed there, and it requires as much talent.

I suppose that 500,000 live in towns, and 1,200,000 live by the soil, of whom not more than 50,000 have wealth, but the majority have their farms. The farmer is more successful as a general thing than any other man. He is deprived of some luxuries, but compensated by the absence of the anxiety and ups-and-downs of those who live in the city. So when you strike a balance, the man who owns and cultivates his own farm is better off in the things of this life and the concern of a future life than almost any other. There is no occupation that stands on a higher level with regard to a future life than his; and his is almost free from the misfortunes that sweep over the mercantile world.

Mr. Sigerson said that all over the country the profit of farming is much greater than is supposed, but the farming interests of the country were far from being fully developed. They have not made corresponding advance and improvement with other occupations. Their dwellings were not as attractive as they ought to be. He was convinced that it could be made to treble its present profit if improvements were made corresponding with those of other departments of industry.

Mr. Porter—As to the profit and loss in farming the one grand defective is that there is no system among them. They are defective in keeping a strict account of their purchases, crops, etc. If a man comes out even at the end of the year that is considered sufficient. If they would keep a strict and detailed account of every field and every crop, they would be able to tell at the end of the year where the loss was. As it is now, there are so many little leaks that they are unable to assign the cause of the balance against them at the end of the year, and remedy it. There is also a want of co-operation among them. In other occupations the members continue together, and a price for everything is established. A few days ago he met a man who had just sold his hogs for $5.70, when the published price the day before was $5.80 to $6.10, and they ought to have brought $5.90 at least. Why do not farmers combine and establish prices for their products as merchants do? There is where the loss comes in—a want of systematic co-operation among them.

Mr. J. M. Hibbard, of Champaign City, Ill., being called upon, said that farmers had to pay one and two hundred per cent. more for their implements than they ought, from the fact that they have to buy on time; they also pay twenty-five and thirty dollars a day to cut down grain which, when cut and brought to market, entails a loss on the owners. Farmers also make a great mistake in using small plows. A fifteen-inch plow is better than a twelve inch one. They should use more system in harvesting their crops, if they don't wish to see the profit on the wrong side of the account.

After-Feeding Meadows.

The Little Falls New York Farmers' Club lately discussed the propriety of after-feeding meadows:

Mr. Whitman said that the question when and how much we can tax our meadows by cropping without injury to succeeding crops, possibly has failed of receiving deserved attention. Some farmers, who overstock their farms, turn their cows on their meadows immediately after getting the hay crop off, hoping to increase the dairy product sufficiently to balance the damage, if any, to the meadows. In this way the meadows are kept gnawed down to the very roots of the grass, and but little or no chance given for it to recuperate, and nothing left to shield it from the effects of a winter like the present. The practice of some farmers is different. They choose to keep the stock off the meadows much later in the season—let the second crop of grass grow till well grown, and if pastured at all, allow but a portion to be eaten off, leaving enough to make a good protection for winter, and mulch to assist an early start in spring. Some choose to mow the harvest growth. This may be admissible if done in season for a third crop to start with the aid of a good top dressing of manure, after the removal of the second crop, and then not allow cropping in the spring for even a day. Some, though but few, prefer to let the crop remain on the ground. This may do for our meadows that have been starved or produce light crops, but for well-fed meadows, there would be danger of a too heavy mulch, and too good protection for mice.

Mr. Davis thought that soiling with corn or lucerne until the meadows presented a large after-growth, would be advisable; but as he wished to convert all the grass into butter and cheese after frost, he would throw open the entire farm to free usage, when the cows will take with relish clumps and swales of grass that they rejected during summer.

Mr. Brown thought the frosts had the effect to make old grass more palatable. Manures for dressing are much better after fermentation than in a raw state.

PEAT AS FUEL.—The question of manufacturing peat for fuel has, for some three years past, been put into practical shape in some parts of Canada where the raw material has been found to exist in quantities greater or less. Montreal papers now contain the prospectus of the Huntington Peat Company, lately organized for the pursuit of the business referred to. These projectors claim that, by a new process of theirs, the best qualities of the peat are preserved, and that with their improved machinery they can turn out one hundred tons of dry peat per day. In many parts of this country—even in the neighborhood of New York—peat abounds, and it will, doubtless, come in very handy some time or another as fuel. The Grand Trunk Railway of Canada has been using it in very large quantities for the last four years, for driving its locomotives, in the Quebec section.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE.—Louis Rita has an article, commenced in the Ruralist and Ohio Valley Cultivator for February, on strawberry culture, from which we take the following extracts:

In planting more care should be given than is now usually done; the roots of plants must be shortened one-third to one-half, and all decayed foliage taken off. Put your roots in water until they are planted, or better, make a compound of one-third cow manure and two-thirds clay, render thin enough by the addition of water, and dip your roots in this mixture. The holes must be made large enough that the roots may be spread all around (not stuck in one place as is only done too often), fill partially up, press the soil down firmly, then fill up with loose dirt and without further pressure; it is material that the heart of the plant be not covered up and no soil pressed around it.

In the fruiting season liquid manure, applied once or twice but well diluted, will prove ever beneficial in increasing the size and number of berries. Guano, hen, or cow manure will do very well. When extra-sized berries are desired, the number of the settings or set fruit should be reduced. In this age of cables and balloons the eye wants to be gratified by the size and color of fruit, though the amateur should not forget that the increase in size is generally produced by a decrease in flavor, and the largest berries are in many varieties watery and insipid.

ICE-HOUSES.—It is a wonder (says a correspondent of the Western Farmer) that so few farmers have ice-houses. The saving in time where ice is used in the field; a cool, refreshing drink in the harvest field, or upon the marsh while haying, a mile from home; but how difficult to obtain it, unless there is an ice-house upon the farm. Many will say that it is injurious; but, after an experience of six years, using it in the house from May till September, I am well satisfied that we have not had one-tenth of the sickness we formerly had in the field, caused by drinking so much warm water; two or three cupfuls are drank, but the thirst is not quenched. On the contrary, the chore boy comes to the harvest field with a pail of water; a small square of ice is floating upon the surface; a look, it is so cool and refreshing, almost satisfies you; two or three swallows are taken, and your thirst is quenched.

An ice-house ten by twelve feet will supply a large family. Put up scantling ten or twelve inches in width, line up on each side, and fill with saw-dust. Chaff, or finely cut straw, may be substituted; but, being less perfect non-conductors, should be in thicker layers. A common board roof, shingled, and a small window in each gable end, which should be kept open for ventilation, are essential.

In filling the house, cut the blocks of ice as square and even as possible, so that they will pack compactly. Use freely sawdust or chaff in filling all interstices, and putting on top of the ice. Try it, and you will wonder how you existed without it, especially when two or three days in the winter will secure you the luxury.

POULTRY KEEPING.—The deficiency of our own poultry supply mainly arises from a want of systematic enterprise. Many people "go in" for fancy poultry, and even for ordinary descriptions, with an eye to prizes at a poultry show. Farmers' wives and daughters have the poultry for pin money; and hundreds of people "keep fowls," utterly ignoring the consideration that fowls might be made to keep them. But as to poultry keeping on a large scale, with an eye to meeting an ever-increasing demand, that is quite an exceptional state of things. Fowls—using the word generally—should receive attention like sheep or pigs, or even more, for they are more delicate and susceptible to diseases; but many of these are preventable and the result of bad management, or of no management at all.—Food Journal.

ALICE CARY.—This gifted Western poetess died at her residence in East Twentieth street on Sunday, at the age of fifty. She was the daughter of Robert Cary, a plain, substantial old farmer of Hamilton county, Ohio, who died only so late as February 12, 1866, the same day of the year as that upon which his gifted daughter has taken her departure. Alice was a promising poetess at eighteen, but was known only by little fugitive pieces, which she flung here and there into out of the way corners of country newspapers. The Louisville Journal, we believe, was the first to call attention to the rising promise of the young poetess. Her first volume of poems was undertaken in conjunction with her younger sister Phœbe, and was heartily welcomed by the public. She next published alone a series of "Clovemook papers," prose sketches, which which won decided popularity. In 1853 she published a volume of verses entitled "Lyra and other poems." In late years she wrote numerous novels, all of which were warmly received by the public. She has written very copiously, although she has long been an invalid. She was in the habit for several years past of giving pleasant little Sunday tea-parties to her literary friends at her and her sister Phœbe's cosy home in Twentieth street, and the select and exclusive litterateurs of the city usually gathered about her on these occasions. She and her sister were both believers in Spiritualism. The fact is related by Horace Greeley that once they saw with their material eyes the form and figure of a little sister, standing on a house some distance away, when she was in fact sleeping very quietly in a room above them, and that she died soon after. From this incident they took their belief in Spiritualism, professing the Swedenborgian branch of it. Alice Cary never married. She leaves by her death her sister Phœbe to mourn her loss, and the love between the two lone sisters was a strong tie that has bound them closely together all their lives.—N. Y. Herald.

THE SUBSISTENCE OF ARMIES.—It is stated that during every twenty-four hours each army corps of the German forces consumes 54,000 pounds of bread, 13,440 pounds of rice or barley, 70 oxen or 13,440 pounds of bacon, 2,016 pounds of salt, 3,360 pounds of coffee, 1,344 pounds of oats, 336 pounds of hay, 3,500 quarts of ardent spirits, and 3,500 fluid ounces of orange bitters, or some similar tincture, to be taken with the spirits. In addition, there are supplied for every day's consumption 675 pounds of tobacco, 110,000 common cigars, and 5,000 officers' cigars. The total daily consumption of the German troops in the field, it is computed, is twenty-five times as great as the figures given above.

THE FIRES IN LONDON.—From the report of the Superintendent of the London Fire Brigade for 1870, it appears that the extinction of 276 serious and 1,970 slight fires in that year, took 11,161.445 gallons of water, or an average of about 5,000 gallons to each fire. This is an insignificant amount of water considering the work done, and shows that the members of the Fire Brigade in London do all they can to prevent "damage by water." Were the firemen of the United States as particular on this point, it would add greatly to the value of their services.

AN ARTICLE OF TRUE MERIT.—"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are the most popular article in this country or Europe for Throat Diseases and Coughs, and this popularity is based upon real merit, which cannot be said of many other preparations in the market which are really but weak imitations of the genuine Troches.

THE purest and sweetest Cod-Liver Oil in the world is HAZARD & CASWELL's, made on the sea-shore, from fresh, selected livers, by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

The Mutual Life of Chicago does a safe and reliable business, receives its premiums in cash and promptly pays its losses in cash.

Burning and Shaking.

By a ridiculous misapplication of language, invalids are sometimes said to "enjoy very poor health;" but it is not on record that any human being was ever spoken of as enjoying chills and fever. And yet there are thousands, at this moment, in one or the other of the two stages of the disorder, who might just as well have avoided it as not. If there is anything demonstrable in therapeutics, it is that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an antidote to intermittent fevers. No instance can be cited in which it has been taken, either as a safeguard against this class of diseases or as a remedy for them, and failed to produce the desired effect. The season when malarious fevers are rife has commenced, and no inhabitant of any district subject to their visitations should be without this great preventive and remedy. Indeed, it is a most potent protection against all the ailments which prevail in the spring months. From marsh and pool, and from all moist soils are now rising the mephitic elements which give birth to fever, indigestion, billousness, colics, and a whole host of epidemic and other maladies. Aid the system to resist them. Energize and regulate all the animal functions with this reinforcing agent. This precaution is as necessary in cities as in new settlements, for malarious fevers are now almost as common in the great centers of population as on the borders of the Southern bayous and marshes and the rich agricultural regions of the West. The preventive and remedy is accessible to all. Who will be unwise enough to brave recklessly the danger it would avert?

WALTHAM WATCHES.

The extensive use of these watches for the last fifteen years by Railway Conductors, Engineers and Expressmen, the most exacting of watch-wearers, has thoroughly demonstrated the strength, steadiness, durability and accuracy of the Waltham Watch. To satisfy that class in all these respects, is to decide the question as to the real value of these time-keepers.

More than 500,000 of these watches are now speaking for themselves in the pockets of the people—a proof and a guarantee of their superiority over all others.

The superior organization and great extent of the Company's Works at Waltham, enables them to produce watches at a price which renders competition futile, and those who buy any other watch merely pay from 25 to 50 per cent. more for their watches than is necessary.

Those time-pieces combine every improvement that a long experience has proved of real practical use. Having had the refusal of nearly every invention in watch-making originating in this country or in Europe, only those were finally adopted which severe testing by the most skillful artisans in our works, and long use on the part of the public, demonstrated to be essential to correct and enduring time-keeping.

Among the many improvements we would particularize:

The invention and use of a centre-pinion of peculiar construction to prevent damage to the train by the breakage of main-springs, is original with the American Watch Company, who, having had the refusal of all other contrivances, adopted Fogg's patent pinion as being the best and faultless.

Hardened and tempered hair-springs, now universally admitted by watchmakers to be the best, are used in all grades of Waltham Watches.

All Waltham Watches have dust-proof caps, protecting the movement from dust, and lessening the necessity of the frequent cleaning necessary to other watches.

Our new patent stem-winder, or keyless watch, is already a decided success, and a great improvement on any stem-winding watch in the American market, and by far the cheapest watch of its quality now offered to the public. To those living in portions of the United States where watchmakers do not abound, watches with the above mentioned improvements which tend to insure accuracy, cleanliness, durability and convenience, must prove invaluable.

The trademarks of the various styles made by the Company are as follows:

$23,500 IN CURRENCY,

AND THE BOOKS, PAPERS, SILVER AND VALUABLES OF THE SPOTTSWOOD HOTEL AND THE ADAMS SOUTHERN EXPRESS COMPANY ARE SAVED IN HERRING'S SAFES.

I. C. BABCOCK'S LETTER.

OFFICE OF ADAMS EXPRESS COMPANY,
No. 59 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Dec. 31, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:—Our agent at Richmond writes: "We got through to-night drying and fixing up the money from the late fire. The contents of the safe, $23,530 in bills, we recovered. It was a Herring's Safe, and a good one, certain."

LETTER FROM J. M. SUBLITT & CO.,
Proprietors of the Spottswood.
RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 29, 1870.

Messrs. Herring, Farrel & Sherman:

GENTS:—On the morning of the 25th inst., we were so unfortunate as to have our hotel burned, with contents. Yet, we were fortunate enough to have one of your Herring's Patent Champion Safes, which fell into the cellar among a burning mass of ruins. After the fire abated, we tried all means to extricate it, but found it impossible on account of the bricks, mortar, and burning rubbish lying thereon and about it, and we employed a mechanic and cut it open through the bottom, and, to our utmost surprise, we found the contents, consisting of valuable papers, money and some silverware, all in good order. Had it not been for your Herring's Safe we would have lost everything.

A GREAT MEDICAL DISCOVERY
MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

They are not a vile FANCY DRINK, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effect.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.

FOR LIVER COMPLAINTS, JAUNDICE, BILIOUS AFFECTIONS, SICK OR NERVOUS HEADACHE, COSTIVENESS, Etc. PURELY VEGETABLE, CONTAINING NO MERCURY, MINERALS OR DELETERIOUS DRUGS.

H

These Pills are the most delightfully pleasant purgative, superseding castor oil, salts, magnesia, etc. There is nothing more acceptable to the stomach. They give tone, and cause neither nausea nor griping pains. They are composed of the finest ingredients. After a few days' use of them, such an invigoration of the entire system takes place as to appear miraculous to the weak and enervated, whether arising from imprudence or disease. H. T. Helmbold's Compound Fluid Extract Catawba Grape Pills are not sugar-coated, from the fact that sugar-coated Pills do not dissolve, but pass through the stomach without dissolving, consequently do not produce the desired effect. THE CATAWBA GRAPE PILLS, being pleasant in taste and odor, do not necessitate their being sugar-coated. PRICE FIFTY CENTS PER BOX.

Used by persons from the ages of eighteen to twenty-five, and from thirty-five to fifty-five or in the decline or change of life; after confinement or labor pains; bed-wetting in children.

B

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU is Diuretic and Blood-Purifying, and Cures all Diseases arising from habits of dissipation, and excesses and imprudences in life, impurities of the Blood, &c., superseding Copaiba in affections for which it is used, and Syphilitic affections—in these diseases used in connection with Helmbold's Rose Wash.

LADIES.

In many affections peculiar to Ladies, the Extract Buchu is unequalled by any other remedy—as in Chlorosis or retention, irregularity, painfulness or suppression of customary evacuations, ulcerated or schirrus state of the uterus, leucorrhœa or whites, sterility, and for all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from indiscretion or habits of dissipation. It is prescribed extensively by the most eminent physicians and midwives for enfeebled and delicate constitutions, of both sexes and all ages (attended with any of the above diseases or symptoms).

O

H. T. HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU CURES DISEASES ARISING FROM IMPRUDENCES, HABITS OF DISSIPATION, ETC., in all their stages, at little expense, little or no change in diet, no inconvenience, and no exposure. It causes a frequent desire, and gives strength to Urinate, thereby removing Obstructions, Preventing and Curing Strictures of the Urethra, Allaying Pain and Inflammation, so frequent in this class of diseases, and expelling all Poisonous matter.

Thousands who have been the victims of incompetent persons, and who have paid heavy fees to be cured in a short time, have found they have been deceived, and that the "Poison" has, by the use of "powerful astringents," been dried up in the system, to break out in a more aggravated form, and perhaps after Marriage.

Use HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT BUCHU for all Affections and Diseases of the Urinary Organs, whether existing in Male or Female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing. PRICE, ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTY CENTS PER BOTTLE.

L

But however valuable as a remedy for existing defects of the skin, H. T. Helmbold's Rose Wash has long sustained its principal claim to unbounded patronage, by possessing qualities which render it a TOILET APPENDAGE of the most Superlative and Congenial character, combining in an elegant formula those prominent requisites, SAFETY and EFFICACY—the invariable accompaniments of its use—as a Preserver and Refresher of the Complexion. It is an excellent Lotion for diseases of a Syphilitic Nature, and as an injection for diseases of the Urinary Organs, arising from habits of dissipation, used in connection with the EXTRACTS BUCHU, SARSAPARILLA, AND CATAWBA GRAPE PILLS, in such diseases as recommended, cannot be surpassed. A Remarkable Instance of Canine Sagacity.

A correspondent in France says: "Here again I met two or three wounded, but in a fair state of convalescence, limping about slowly. One of these men had a little dog—an iron-gray terrier, unmistakably English—following at his heels, but only on three legs. If the story the man told me is to be believed,—and for my part I have not the slightest hesitation in the matter, his manner of telling it was so simple and earnest,—the dog had been the means, under Providence, of saving his master's life. He had been struck by a ball in the chest, near Ham, and lay on the ground for six hours when the fighting was over. He had not lost consciousness, but the blood was flowing freely, and he was gradually getting weaker and weaker. There was none but the dead near him, and his only living companion was the English terrier, who prowled restlessly about him, with his master's kepi in his mouth. At last the dog set off at a trot, and the wounded soldier made sure his only friend had deserted him. The night grew dark, the cold was intense, and he had not even the strength to touch his wounds, which every instant grew more and more painful. At length his limbs grew cold, and, feeling a sickening faintness steal upon him, he gave up all hope of life, and recommended himself to God. Suddenly, and when it had come to the worst, he hard a bark, which he knew belonged to only one litle dog in the world, felt something lick his face, and saw the glare of lanterns. The dog had wandered for miles till he arrived at a roadside caberet. The people had heard the cannonading all day, and seeing the kepi in the dog's mouth, and noticing his restless movements, decided to follow him. He took them straight to the spot—too straight for a little cart they had brought with them, to crose fields and hedges,—but just in time. When the friendly help arrived, the man fainted, but he was saved. There were honest tears in the man's eyes when he was telling me, and I fully believed him. The dog, too, had been [illegible] touched in the leg by a ball in the same battle, and had since been lame. He got him, when a puppy, from an English sailor at Dunkirk, and called him 'Beel;' very probably the French for Bill."

A LOUISVILLE paper, after consulting its exchanges, tells what it knows of Olive Logan, as follows:—She is "a witty Irishman" in Philadelphia; "The descendant of an Indian chief," "a native of Philadelphia," "an English-woman with French manners," and "General John A. Logan's cousin in New York," "born in Elmira," in Columbus, Ohio; "Hon. John A. Logan's sister" in Washington, and "no relation to John A. Logan" in Illinois.

The Musical Family.

From Punch.

I belong to a musical lot,
I've sisters, and brothers, and cousins,
I've grandpas and grandmammas got,
And uncles, like oysters, in dozens.
We all of us instruments play,
We practice night, morning and noon;
My father at six every day,
Gets up to awake the bassoon.

My grandmother, ninety about,
A widow was left all alone,
'Cos grandfather blew himself out,
One night on the gentle trombone.
My Uncle Sam plays on the harp,
In a wild and inspirited manner;
And my Aunt plays three tunes in F sharp,
On a strong-minded Broadwood pianner.

My Great Aunt's composed (she's a "Sim"),
Oratorios—one is called Noe,
And on Sundays she plays us a hymn
Arranged for the cheerful oboe.
My sister's attached to the flute,
And brings out most wonderful tones;
My nephew—a vulgar young brute—
Prefers nigger airs on the bones.

My youngest, who says "dat" for "that,"
In fact he's of five the last comer,
Performs with two spoons on my hat,
And cries out, "Papa, I'm a dummer!"
My baby in arms has a way
Of playing the fife on its coral;
And my twins play the bagpipes all day,
With a loyalty worthy Balmoral.

Through life we've in harmony passed
With a stock of twenty or more tunes,
And a sum we've together amassed,
Which is equal to two or three fortunes.
Wherever our musical tribe
Took a house 'twas our aim, I admit it—
To make all the neighbors subscribe
A sum to induce us to quit it.

So all the great cities we've seen,
From the Thames to the banks of the Tiber;
And every one in 'em has been
A heartily willing subscriber.
As thus Europe we've done, the word's sharp
To Jericho; thither we'll hie,
To learn the neglected Jew's harp
From native professors. Good-bye!

TWICE MISTAKEN.

A Leaf from a Bacheler's Diary.

From London Society.

Christmas Eve. Half-past nine. Crumms comes into my room to clear away tea.

"I suppose, sir," he says, as though it were a subject not admitting of a doubt. "I suppose you don't dine home tomorrow."

Both the tone and the remark are unfortunate. I have not an invitation to dine out, and I cannot insist upon dining at home, as my arrangement with the Crummses provides for dinner on Sundays only. I had intended to put my difficulty to my landlady, who is good-natured and easily persuaded. I find, instead, I have her husband to deal with, so I close my book slowly and say, "Well," as if I were thinking and not quite certain.

"Most gentlemen dine out on Christmas day," he says, staring at the wall some feet above my head; "and Mrs. Crumms always expects a holiday on that day."

I feel, after that statement, the only thing to be done is to surrender gracefully.

"Of course; quite right. Oh yes! I shall dine out, Crumms."

I ring the bell for some hot water, and Crumms answers it in full waiter's dress, white tie, dress coat, and a low-cut waistcoat, showing a large amount of shirt front with an elaborate frill. He walks into the room as if he is very proud of himself, and is more waiter-like in his manner than usual.

"Why, Crumms," I ask, "where are you going?"

"Out waiting, sir." He pauses for a minute, then becomes less majestic and more confidential. "I always go out waiting on Christmas day," he adds, "and I have been to the same house for the last fourteen years. The gentleman and lady are a couple as came to Crown at Newford the year I married Mrs. Crumms. We were both at the hotel, you know, and were just leaving to come up here. The lady took a great liking to Mrs. Crumms, and one day she said to me, "So you and your wife are going up to London, Crumms. Now you must come and wait at my house when we want help." And I have been there every Christmas day since then—not missed one. I go on other days"—he says this quickly, in an off-hand manner, as if the other days were of no importance—"but they ain't regular."

"You go there and help wait, I suppose?"

"Well, I do most of the waiting; all of it, you may say," he replies. "They don't keep a man, and there are only the female servants. They ain't much good, not like Mrs. Crumms. She could wait, she could. She was wonderful handy. That's what first made me look at her!"

"And where do you go to?" I inquire.

"Bedford Square. Domville is the gentleman's name."

On the spur of the moment, just to see what Crumms will say, I ask, "Will you take me with you to-day?"

"You, sir!" he replies, in surprise. "Well—really, sir, I don't think Mr. Domville would—though I have known him these fourteen years, I am afraid he'd think it rather presumptuous of me to introduce a gentleman into his house!"

"I suppose so," I answer; the idea of the waiter introducing a friend as a guest at dinner being very absurd. "But I didn't mean that. Take me with you to wait."

"You! you go out waiting?" said Crumms, holding his breath.

"Yes; if you will take me."

"Well, I do call that a good joke," he gasped out. "Lord, sir, what an idea!" Then dropping his waiter-like manner altogether, and becoming thoroughly human, he burst out laughing.

I had only intended to chaff Crumms, but it strikes me that going out with him will be more lively than spending Christmas day by myself, and I begin to hope that he will take me.

"I dare say Mr. Domville would have no objection to an extra hand," I urge, "and I could go as a young friend of yours, who is just beginning and wants to learn his business."

"Lord, sir," pants Crumms again, "you ain't serious."

"By Jove, I am, though, I say. I don't know what to do with myself all day. I should like to go out waiting."

"But you will be careful, sir, won't you?" says Crumms, yielding. "You won't let Mr. Domville know. There isn't any one likely to be there as will recognize you, I hope."

Three o'clock.—Crumms and I are in the cab on our way to Bedford Square. The whole time he is either laughing at my going out with him or nervous as to the result. In the latter mood he is almost piteous in his entreaties to me to be careful, and repeats over and over again his directions how to wait. We stop the cab at the corner of the street leading to the square, and walk on to the house.

It is a big house with a large hall. There are three servants going about with trays and piles of plates, busy laying out the table. They stare at me as I stand by the side of Crumms, and he introduces me as a young friend who wants to see a little genteel waiting, and whom he has made bold onough to bring. Then, as if that settled the matter, he goes off into business, and asks several questions as to the number and names of the guests. I notice that the servants all treat him with great respect, and he, in return, is condescending and polite to them. With me, when they are in the room, he assumes an authoritative air, and all the time he is very grave, and looks as if the cares of his position were too much for him. He smiles once, when we are alone, as I hand him a jelly; and then, his muscles being relaxed, his old fit of laughing suddenly broke out again. He cannot laugh loud, but laughs inwardly, and shakes so tremendously that the jelly rolls and trembles to an alarming degree; and it is only by the means of promptly taking it under my own protection, that I save it from being shaken on the the floor.

"O Lor'! to think of you being here," he mutters; and the next instant is gravity itself, as Mrs. Domville's voice is heard on the stairs.

She is a middle-aged lady, and speaks in a friendly manner to Crumms, and is particular in his inquiries after his wife and children. He points me out as a young friend of his, who has come to help him; and Mrs. Domville seems quite satisfied, and goes up stairs again to the drawing-room.

Four o'clock.—The dinner is ready and all the guests have arrived. Crumms stations me behind the door, and goes himself to the head of the table, and I watch the people as they come into the room and take their places.

They are mostly middle-aged, like their host and hostess, and evidently old friends; for several nod to Crumms, and one gentleman is quite hearty in his greeting, and says it would not seem like a Christmas dinner without him. Mr. Domville laughs, and asks after Mrs. Crumms; but Crumms refuses to be thawed, and replies in a tone as if such trifling questions interfered with the responsibility.

So far everything has gone right. Then comes a slight mishap. Just as everybody is seated and silent, and Mr. Domville going to say grace, Crumms gives me a signal, and I step forward quietly to close the door. The movement attracts the attention of a young lady, who is sitting with her back to me, and she turns round. She evidently has not noticed me before, and her laughing gray eyes scan me with surprise. My face is a new one to her among the many well-known faces round the table. I suppose she thinks I am a guest who has arrived late and just come into the room, and, seeing me standing there and no one taking any notice of me, she says, courteously:

"Isn't there a chair for you?" Then turning round to Mrs. Domville, "O, aunt! here is a gentleman left outside in the cold."

Mr. Domville, instead of saying grace, looks up, stares, and half rises from his chair, while the company all turn toward me. It is certainly an embarrassing moment; but Mrs. Domville comes to the rescue, and says quietly, "It is quite right, Helen." The young lady looks a little confused, and Crumms, in his nervousness, spoils everything by rushing up to her and calling out:

"He's come to help me wait, Miss Linton."

My fair champion thereupon blushes very deeply, and begs my pardon; several of the guests have simultaneous twitchings of the mouth; Crumms looks half angry, half apologetically, at me; and at last Mr. Domville, in a husky voice, says grace, while Miss Linton bends her head very low and hides her face. The next minute Crumms, serious and imperturbable as ever, removes the cover off the soup, and dinner begins.

I believe I acquitted myself creditably. Crumms declared that I did wonderfully well, and is inclined to think, I believe, that I have wasted natural talent by not being a waiter. At any rate, I don't spill anything over anybody's dress, or knock anybody on the head. I carefully watch Crumms for his signals, and, thanks to having been at a dinner before, though not in the capacity of a waiter. I have some idea of what ought to be done, and so remove the right covers, and hand round such dishes as ought to be handed at the proper time. The difficulty I have is to keep my countenance, particularly when I hand anything to Miss Linton. She is so bright-looking, and it is such fun to see the sparkle in her eyes, and the way they drop if they meet mine, and a little repressed smile steal over her lips, that it taxes my powers to the utmost to keep from laughing. I feel that I should very much like to change places with the young fellow sitting by her side. He does not seem to have much to say for himself, and he examines every dish, as it is handed to him, through an eye-glass. His inspection is so long, and his nose is so close, that I have a growing inclination each time to bob the dish up in his face. For more than half the dinner he is silent, then he talks a little politics—staunch Conservatism—and Miss Linton immediately enunciates the strongest radical principles, upholds woman's suffrage, and their having seats in Parliament. This seems to overwhelm him, and he retires from the contest with a sigh.

Later on, he tries again, when the mince-pies are being handed round.

"Will you have a happy month?" he asks, with a faint smile, which disturbs his eye-glass and brings it down in his lap. He readjusts it slowly, and not trusting himself to repeat the joke, asks her to have some mince-pie.

"No, thank you; I never eat them," she replies.

"Have you never tasted them?" he says, frowning as if he were a barrister cross-examining a witness, but probably because his glass give a premonitory slip.

"O, yes; I have tasted them, but I don't care about them," she answered.

He has no comment to make upon her reply, so he helps himself in silence.

Six o'clock.—Crumms and I solemnly put on the wine and the glasses, put the dessert dishes a little one way or the other, and leave the room.

"Bravo!" whispers Crumms when we are in the hall. "Bravo, sir! With a little teaching you'd make a capital waiter. And Miss Linton mistaking you for a gentleman, too! What a joke! At least," he adds, as if he suddenly feels that he had made rather a mistake himself, "of course, that is what you are, and a gent is always a gent, I say. But you understand, sir. It was so ludicrous. There ain't anything more for you to do, and I can say you've got an appointment to keep, you know."

Acting upon his advice, we go up stairs to the hall, and Crumms lets me out, shutting the door very quietly behind me.

It is a fine clear night, and I turn my face homeward, and stroll slowly along the deserted square. I go all up the long, straight Gower street without meeting any one. By the University I see a figure advancing quickly. We pass under a gas lamp, and both pull up.

"Herbert, by Jove!"

"Why, Roche, what are you doing here? Going out to dinner?"

"Just had it," he replies; "been to see an old lady home."

He then naturally wonders what I am doing strolling along the streets on Christmas night. I tell him I have been out to dinner.

"They have broken up very early," he says; and then asks suddenly, "You haven't sneaked off to read, surely?"

This is said in a tone as if it were a mortal sin for a man to read for an examination on Christmas day.

"That's right," he says, when I had disclaimed any idea of reading. "Well, you come home with me. My people will be very glad to see you. We always have a carpet dance or something in the evening?"

I accept readily, and go back with Roche to his house.

Nine o'clock.—We have cleared the room for dancing, and the first quadrille has just commenced. Not being able to get a partner, I am standing on the landing, when a carriage rolls up to the street door, and there is a loud knock, announcing the arrival of new comers.

Mrs. Roche hurries down and meets them in the hall. I hear her say, as they come up stairs, "You are just too late for the first dance, Helen."

The name quite makes me start.

"By Jove, if it should be Miss Linton!" is my muttered thought.

I half hope it may be; I half hope it may not be; and I haven't time to decide which half is the stronger, before Miss Linton herself comes laughing up the stairs.

At the very first glimpse of her, I instinctively drew back into the shade, and she and her mamma pass by without noticing me.

It seems very ridiculous to meet the same young lady twice in one evening, first as a waiter, and then as a guest; but there—it is done, it is fait accompli; and Miss Linton and I are once more under the same roof. I wonder if she will recognize me, and I watch her with interest as she goes round the room. Sooner or later we must meet face to face; and the awkward moment comes sooner than I expect.

When Miss Linton reaches the door where Roche is standing with his partner, she stops there and talks to them when they are not dancing.

"Is there any lemonade, Edward?" she asks presently. "I want some if there is."

"There's a bad sign, Nelly, after dining out," he answers with a laugh. "There is some down stairs. I would get you a glass, but you see it is my turn. If you don't mind you will find somebody outside, I think."

Roche leads off with the third figure; Miss Linton comes out upon the landing; and I move from the shadow o the wall into the light.

She gives a quick start with her head and opens her eyes in surprise as she sees me. There is just a little tightening of her lips, a faint blush rises to her lips, and then she asks me quietly to fetch her a glass of lemonade.

Roche had said it was down stairs, and I find it in the dining room. I am rather glad of the excuse to get away and have my laugh out; for the whole thing is more and more absurd, since Miss Linton has made a second mistake, and thinks I am a waiter. It is a very natural error, of course; and to keep up the deception, I put the glass on a tray and go gravely up stairs.

She is quite composed now, and thanks me unconcernedly as I hand her the lemonade. Then we stand side by side—I holding the tray in both hands—till the dance finishes, and Roche comes out to us.

"Have you got your lemonade?" he asks. "That's right." Now you want a partner for the next dance. Who shall it be? I am engaged till after supper, unfortunately. O, here! Let me introduce you. Miss Linton, Mr. ——!

Instead of waiting to hear my name, the young lady puts down the glass quickly and looks indignant.

"Don't be absurd, Edward!" she says, as she walks off.

They are so close I can hear what they say.

"What is the matter, Nelly?" he asks.

"How could you be so ridiculous as to introduce me to him?" she replies.

"Why shouldn't I?"

"Why shouldn't you? He is a waiter; I know that. He was waiting at Mrs. Domville's."

Instead of looking contrite, Roche goes off into a roar of laughter.

"It was very stupid of you," she says, half crossly. "It forced me to be rude to him."

"What nonsense, Nelly! I shouldn't play you such a trick as that, of course. That is Herbert; he is in the same office as I am."

"You are not joking, Edward, are you?" she asks him quite seriously.

"No; upon my word, I am not."

"O, I am so sorry, then," she says, immediately. "But there was somebody just like him at the Domvilles'. What shall I do?"

"Come and be introduced, that's all. I'll put it right." And they came together onto the landing.

"My cousin made a mistake, Herbert," he says, while she stands by him, blushing deeply. Then he adds, laughing, "She mistook you for a—"

"I made a mistake," she breaks in, very quickly, coming a step nearer. "I beg your pardon."

To save her from farther embarrassment, I ask her at once for the next dance; and it is immediately granted.

"By the bye, Miss Linton," I say, when the dance is over, and we are standing on the landing, "you have never told me what you took me for. An ogre?"

"No."

"What, then?"

Her laughing eyes look up with their old merry sparkle into my face. They seem at the same time to question me whether I shall be annoyed if she speaks the truth. She pauses for a moment, and then says, "A waiter," and presses her lips closely together.

"Thank you."

"But it was quite excusable," she begins hurriedly.

"Thank you again," I remark, interrupting her.

"You won't listen," she says, plaintively. "I want to explain—"

"That I look so much like a waiter," I add, breaking in again, "that it was quite excusable taking me for one."

"O, no; I didn't mean that, of course," she says, forced to laugh. "But when I was dining there was a waiter like you—so exactly like you,"—she emphasizes the word "exactly," and glances quickly up at me as she does so,—"and I mistook him for a gentleman, and thought he was one of the guests."

"So you make up for it by taking me for a waiter," I answer. "Well, I think the waiter had the best of it."

"But it was excusable, was it not," she asks, "you two being so much alike?"

"Your mistaking the waiter for a gentleman? If he was like me, certainly."

"No," with a little stamp of her foot; "my mistaking you for a waiter."

"I can't grant that," I answer.

"Very well," she says, with a laugh. Then she adds mischievously over her shoulder, as her partner comes for the next dance: "I think my first mistake was the more excusable of the two."

"And I think the last by far the worst," I reply.

"Do you? Well, I am very sorry," she answers; but her eyes belie her as she goes off laughing into the drawing-room.

Fortunately I secure the dance before supper, and take her down.

"You don't wait so well as your double," she says, as I hand her some mince pies I had just put them before her for a minute, and then taken them away.

"I am sorry for that," I answer, "but then, you see, I know you never eat mince pies."

"How do you know that?" she asks, turning round quickly.

"Your cousin has told me a great deal about you," I reply.

"Did he tell you, pray, that I never eat mince-pies?"

"How should I know, if he did not?" I say, with amazed simplicity.

She looks very incredulous. "He didn't tell you that, I know; though I believe you men talk a great deal of nonsense; as much nonsense as women do."

"You own that about women, then, and yet you want them to have seats in Parliament?"

"O now I am certain you must have been at Mr. Domville's," she cries; "for I never said so until to-day at dinner, and then only in opposition to my neighbor. If you were not there, how could you have known what I said?"

"Do you believe in the theory, Miss Linton," I begin, with a grave face, "of a person knowing, by a sort of affinity, the thoughts and actions of another person whom he has never seen, but whom, when is permitted to see, he is at once, by fate, most deeply interested in?"

"No, I don't," she replies, laughing. "How nonsensical you are!"

Before I can go on expounding my impromptu theory, Roche comes up and claps me on the shoulder.

"Well, Herbert, how's Crumms?"

Roche has often been to my rooms, and knows my landlord, of course; but what demon possessed him to come at this moment and pronounce that fatal name, I can't imagine.

"Bravo!" cries Miss Linton, clapping her hands. "Now I know; you went there with Crumms."

"Went where?" asks Roche in surprise.

"To the Domvilles'," she answers. "Mr. Herbert was there with Crumms, waiting. Now, weren't you?" she asks, turning to me.

So, driven up in a corner, at last I make my confession.

"What fun!" she says. "Won't I laugh at mamma! She read me such a lecture as I came here. And I have not made a mistake, after all."

"Except when you took me for a waiter, Miss Linton."

"O, that was your own fault. I am not a bit sorry for that now."

What Miss Linton did say to her mamma, of course I don't know. If she did laugh at her, Mrs. Linton must have taken it very good-naturedly; for when I go up stairs, after supper, she calls me "Mr. Waiter," and the name sticks to me for the rest of the evening. Just as we are all leaving, she comes to me and invites me to a party at her house on the following week.

"How shall I come, Miss Linton?" I ask, as I put on her cloak; "as a waiter or a guest?"

"In the capacity you think suits you the best," she answers. Then she adds, more softly, "We shall be glad to see you in either."

There is a farther note in my diary for that Christmas day—something about Miss Linton—which, perhaps, it will be as well to let remain private. But about two years afterward, and not so very long ago, there was a wedding at Dumville's. Crumms was there to wait, and Crumms' feelings had overpowered him, and required soothing. From being usually calm, Crumms became unusually excited, and was with difficulty prevented from solemnly blessing the happy couple, and making a speech to the effect that the occasion was brought about by him taking the bridegroom out waiting on a certain Christmas day.

THE emigrants from Liverpool, during 1870, according to the report of the Government agent at that port, amounted to 163,002 persons, of whom 153,735 sailed in vessels under the control of the Government, and 9,267 in vessels not under Government supervision. Of these 153,735 emigrants, there were 79,949 English, 4,621 Scotch, 29,591 Irish, and 39,564 from the continent of Europe. The destinations of these emigrants were as follows: To the United States, 131,735; Canada, 19,984; Victoria, 1,298; Queensland, 613; Cape of Good Hope, 79; New Brunswick, 27. Of the 153,735, there were 13,771 cabin and 139,964 steerage passengers. The vessels with emigrants aboard sailing from Liverpool were 378 in number, of which 326 were bound for the United States. Of the 9,267 persons who sailed in ships not under Government supervision, there were 5,582 who came to the United States. The emigration of 1870 shows an increase of 10,649 persons coming from England, and a decrease of 18,124 persons coming from the continent of Europe.

After Apples.

BY A. E. D.

"These apples are ripe," said young Benjamin Strong;
"There are bushels and bushels, and no one can see;
I'm sure from so many, 'tis not very wrong
To take just a few that lie under the tree.

"The farmer has gone to the village to-day,
And, if I take fifty, he never will know;
I'd just as soon ask, if I came in his way;
He would give some to me, for he gave some to Joe."

Then foolish and wicked young Benjamin Strong
Climbed up on the fence, but a nail caught his boot.
He could not get free, and he hung there so long,
That the farmer discovered him after his fruit.

Finger Nails.

BY NORMAN BRIDGE, M. D.

Everything was made for something, and finger nails were made for scratching. Yes, and for something else besides; they were made for protection to the fingers, and to furnish the ends of them more strength and solidity. Our fingers can stub along better for having these nails, and we can stub along through life much easier for having such stiff, stout back-splints at the tips of our digits; for having such weapons at our finger ends.

But what concerns us most in this article is the anatomy and growth of the nail. What is it made of, and how does it grow? Some people—some boys and girls—are so stupid as never to ask the reason why and the how of anything. They always take things for granted, and if asked how the finger nail is formed they would say it grows, and that is all.

I once knew a foolish young fellow to be asked who made him, and he said, "Nobody, I grow'd I s'pose." Some people imagine that all things simply grow—not how they grow.

Now the finger nail is made up of nearly the same elements as the skin; it is much harder of course, and more dense. So is a cheese more dense than the soft curd from which it is made, but they differ only in one being harder than the other, and in having lost some of the watery element that is a part of its substance; the skin and nail differ in the same way.

If you take a piece of the hard part of the nail, no bigger than a speck, and put it under a high-power microscope, you will discover that it is made up of a multitude of little scales packed together as closely as they can be made to lie, and so firm and solid that they give the horny character to the nail. They are laid flatwise with the surface, and are squeezed closely against each other like the figs that come to our markets packed and pressed down in boxes. Examine next, a part very near the bottom or under surface of the nail, and it will be seen to have scales like the first, but they are less flattened; in shape, they more closely resemble the figs referred to. Go a little deeper and magnify a particle from near the bed of the nail, and instead of scales you will find little roundish bodies—almost spherical, but flattened in spots where they press against each other; they are translucent, if not transparent, and are softer than the scales near the surface. These little bodies are called cells. They are so exceedingly small that it would take 15,000 laid side by side in a row to reach an inch.

Investigations with the microscope have demonstrated that these cells are continually being manufacturod at the base of the nail, that is, beneath it, and its root. They are continuing up from the "quick," and each cell or layer of full grown cells is lifted up on the backs of those that are just forming. This is necessary to make room for the newer bodies; layer after layer of these cells are created, each to be displaced by those that come after it; as soon as one is formed it is pushed—not aside, but pushed upward to make room for others. As the cells mount upward toward the surface of the nail they become flattened by degrees and grow harder; the farther they get from the place of their birth the more "crusty" they become. The soft rounded cell of the "quick" becomes after a while the hard substance we put to a thousand uses, and scratch with.

The popular notion, then, that the nail grows wholly from its root, from the part next the joint, is a mistaken one. It is formed as well from the whole surface beneath it; it grows from both parts. Now, it is plain that if the cells were continually growing and being piled upon each other, there would soon become a very thick heap, if they were not removed. How, then, is the nail prevented from becoming thick and unseemly? Just in this wise: We have said it grows both from its root and beneath its body; while from its under surface it is being made thicker by its growth, the new nail substance that is forming at the root keeps sliding it little by little forward toward the end of the finger; hence it cannot become thick; it would if let alone, but it is moved along and prevented. Any one who fully understands this process will readily see why the hard part of the nail is always thicker at the end than far back, toward the root.

But it seems that from the smooth surface whence these cells originate, there is not room enough for as many of them to grow as are needed. When the cells are young they are much larger than when old; they are rounded in contour and contain more water. This fact makes it absolutely necessary that they have more space to stand upon and to grow from when young, than they need later in life; pack them never so tightly side by side, and you cannot make enough of them grow from a surface no larger than the nail, so that when they become hard there will not be too few.

See how beautiful is the provision of nature for this need!

The principle is clear that in a hilly country there are more square feet of surface than in one that is level, just as it is farther over a mountain than it is through it. Make a series of little ridges on the ground, as tall as they are thick, and so near that the gutters between them are no wider than they, and you have about double the area you had to start with. Now, this is exactly what occurs in the growing of the finger nail; running lengthwise of it are a multitude of little ridges and ditches, hills and valleys so small that when cut across, you can with the naked eye only just perceive them. On the whole of this uneven surface the little cells are growing as thickly as they can be placed, and nearly twice as many can be accommodated as would be possible were the surface smooth.

As the cells are lifted up and approach the serface they usually fall into perfectly even layers, although on the surface of the nail we often have little ridges running lengthwise of the finger. Look at your own fingers and see!

These ridges, furthermore, add to the strength of the nail; it can with more difficulty be torn from its bed.

All these provisions and this arrangement for the growth of the nail, most happily adapts it to our needs. The nail is made always a little faster than, with good usage, we need to wear it off; hence we may always have an abundant supply; if destroyed by accident it is replaced in a few weeks or months, and if its beauty is marred, unlike our noses and ears, we have in a little while a nice new and clean one to please us.

Verdict of a Jury of Boys.

When Dr. Nathaniel Prentice taught a public school in Roxbury, he was very much of a favorite, but his patience at times would get nearly exhausted by the infraction of school rules by the scholars. On one occasion, in a rather wrathy way, he threatened to punish, with six blows of a heavy ferule, the first boy detected in whispering, and appointed some detectors. Shortly after, one of these detectors shouted:

"Master, John Zeigler is whispering."

John was called up and asked if it was a fact. (John, by the way, was a favorite, both of the teacher and his school-mates.)

"Yes," answered John, "I was not aware what I was about. I was intent on working out a sum and requested the one who sat next to reach me the arithmetic that contained the rule which I wished to see."

The doctor regretted his hasty threat, but told John he could not suffer him to whisper and escape the punishment, and continued:

"I wish I could avoid it, but I cannot without a forfeiture of my word, and a consequent loss of my authority. I will leave it," continued he, "to any three scholars you may choose to say whether or not I remit the punishment."

John said he would agree to that, and immediately called out G. S., T. D., D. P. D. The doctor told them to return a verdict; this they soon did, after consultation, as follows:

"The master's word must be kept inviolate—John must receive the threatened punishment of six blows of the ferule; but it must be inflicted on volunteer proxies, and we, the arbitrators, will share the punishment by receiving, each of us, two of the blows."

John, who had listened to the verdict, steps up to the doctor, and with outstretched hands exclaims:

"Master, here is my hand, they shan't be struck a blow; I will receive the punishment."

The doctor, under pretence of wiping his face, shielded his eyes, and, telling the boys to go to their seats, said he would think of it. I believe he did think of it to his dying day, but the punishment was never inflicted.

An Esthetic View of Swearing.

One of the young ladies in a Brook Farm story in the Overland Monthly says:

"There is profane swearing where the heart is filled with vindictive passions—with malice; but most of the swearing indulged in by young people and uncultivated people is only so much emphasis to back up their sentences with. It shows that those who indulge in it are wanting in intelligent respect for their own statements; or are doubtful if they will be accepted as true by those they address. I do not deny that it is extremely bad taste, that it is vulgar and disagreeable; and yet a great deal of informal swearing is indulged in by the really reverent and kind-hearted."

To which a sailor present responds: "I am sure, Miss, it's not language that's so wicked; it's the way one feels in the heart. I was thinking all the time you were talking, of once when I was out at sea—leagues from land in the Pacific, and we fell in with a water-logged ship, with nine starving men on her. They begged to be taken on board. Now, our captain was one of your pious sort. Well, when the mate, with his hands on the ropes ready to lower the boat, heard the captain's cold-blooded decision—'Tell them we can't take them; we have only provisions enough to take ourselves to port'—why, the mate swore an oath (I should not dare to repeat it to you, Miss; in a bad cause it were enough to sink a ship), and wished that he might be hung beside, at the yard-arm, if he did not fetch these poor souls on board. And down went the boat, in spite of the captain, and on board they came; and we all arrived safe and sound in port. Now, Miss, I ask you, who swore—the mate or the captain?"

PARIS, during the siege, was lighted by the regular Gas Company, but instead of gas, lamps burning petroleum were placed inside the lanterns of the ordinary street lamp-posts, only one out of every four being used. About 35,000 small petroleum lamps were employed, and the daily consumption of coal oil was about sixteen thousand kilogrammes, or 15.7 tons. The city allowed one cent an hour for the service, and as the lamps were kept lighted for fifteen hours out of the twenty-four, the total cost of lighting Paris was $5,250 a day. The oil used was the same that the city had seized at the commencement of the siege, in order to fill the ditches round the ramparts in case of assault. On January 19th, it was stated that 3,000 tons of petroleum had been used in Paris, and on that date 7,000 tons were still on hand. The shops and restaurants of Paris were also lighted with coal oil, and every place was filled with the odor of horseflesh and petroleum.

A HERMIT MISER.—A singular old man was lately burned to death near Utica, Ill., in a cave where he had lived thirty-eight years. His name was Ira Mills, and he had once been a clergyman, but for some reason best known to himself he had retired from the world to meditate upon five old coffee pots, seven lanterns, three axes, skillets, pans, hoes, scythes, horse-shoes, nails, hammers, and scraps of old iron, with which he decorated his cave, which lay at the top of a hill near the lovely village of Utica. He was a great reader of the Bible, and took remarkable views of human life and transactions. He was a miser, and gave one of the most remarkable reasons on record for not collecting $1,000 that were due to him. He said he was afraid to collect them, as he might receive counterfeit money. It is thought that he had secreted a good deal of money somewhere in the neighborhood of his cave, and of course the people of Utica will search as diligently and futilely for it as ever man searched for Captain Kidd's treasures. He was burned in the seventy-sixth year of his age, and died lamented by nobody who knew him.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, the artist, has written a letter, in which he claims that the story of "Oliver Twist" was entirely his own idea and suggestion, and that he originated all the characters in that work. THE Liberal Christian gives us this description of Elder Jacob Knapp, the celebrated revivalist: "He is a well-preserved old gentleman, though he has endured much hardship for the Lord's sake. His hair and beard are as white as snow; but his face is red, his voice is clear, and he is good for many years yet of tussels with the Prince of Darkness. It is interesting to listen to an evangelist who can tell of hell as confidently as if he had been born and brought up within its limits, and speak of the devil as naturally and familiarly as if he were an old acquaintance. The tone of the Elder's voice, and the quiet of his eyes, as he unrolls his panorama and illustrates the startling theme, quite subdue the otherwise alarming expression."

A CURIOUS mistake took place one morning last week in the ringing of the bells of the Catholic churches at Zanesville, Ohio. As is well known, says a local paper, the bells of these churches are rung every morning at six o'clock, and so punctually is it performed, that they answer the purpose of a clock to families and persons residing within hearing. On the morning in question the sexton of St. Thomas Church, who is an old man, either deceived by his cloak or mistaking the hands of the dial, rang his bell at the hour of three o'clock in the morning, three hours before the usual time. The loud-voiced peals of the bell rang out and trembled away, caught the ear of many a sleeper and waked them from their slumbers. Among these was the sexton of St. Nicholas Church, who hurriedly rushed to the bell ropes, and soon the chimes from the belfry of that church rang out into the stilly night. Breakfast was hurriedly prepared in different parts of the city, and workmen in several instances started to the streets on their way to the scene of their daily toil. Clocks, in the greater number of instances where mistakes occurred, corrected the error.

AUBURN IND......MARCH 9. 1871

There is a design to carry the next Presidential election by intimidation and violence. It crops out in the last reconstruction bill drawn by Benjamin F. Butler. This he copies from English acts of Parliament, passed three hundred years ago, and leveled at the heads of the Irish people to punish them for trying to be free. Commissioners are to execute it, supported by the army and navy. Such is Radicalism.

◆

Frank Blair is giving the Republicans in the Senate considerable uneasiness. They can't go back on Blair with the cry of "Copperhead," as he was a brave and distinguished Union General. He was also at one time a high card in their party, and when he opens his mouth, and Blair is not a modest man by any means, he compels them to listen. The last noticeable broadside from this gentleman created considerable consternation, and it was in declaring the fact, that every member of Mr Lincon's Cabinet, except the Postmaster-General, Montgomery Blair, was in favor of surrendering the public forts and property to the rebels. No member of the Senate had the temerity to deny this assertion in presence of the new Missouri Senator.

We find the following tit-bit in an exchange, credited to the Toledo Blade. That journal is understood to be "Republican." and therefore a confession from that quarter may be considered reliable. Here it is:

> "The great instrumentality through which Democracy attains place and power is Mind, with a little assistance from Money; the great instrumentality through which Radicalism attains the same ends, is Ignorance. Where Democracy pevails, there Learning lifts her classic head, and from her ambrosial locks scatters intellectual light and loveliness abroad; wherever Radicalism obtains foot hold there Ignorance erects her shrines and her altars, before which her blind and ragged votaries prostrate themselves in the dust and sing pæans in her praise. It is not strange then, that the Repiublican who is true to his principels and his party never approaches a school-house without instinctively feeling in his pockets to see if he has such a thing about him as a box of matches or a can of nitro-glycerine. It is to the Republican party the English poet refers when he tells us that where Ignorance is bliss it is folly to be wise."

"Land for the Landless."

This was one of the promises of Radical party when it first got control of Congress in 1860. To a certain extent it has made good that promise. It has given "land to the landless," but not the "landless" it pretended to favor—the honest, toiling, poor men of the country. The "landless" it provided with lands were the thieving contractors of "New England"—the carpet-bag scalawags of the South, and the Radical rascals who loaf round the lobbies of Congress, getting up railroad companies, asking the government to build the roads, and allow them to have the profits.

Here is the amount of land they have given to these "landless" corporation—the number of broad acres they have taken from the people—the working, tax-cursed masses—and given to corrupt corporations. To railroad companies it has given as follows:

Union Pacific,	35,000,000
Northern Pacific,	67,000,000
Chicago and Northwestern,	188,800
Baylde Noque and Marquette,	128,000
St. Paul and Pacific,	500,000
Branch St. Paul and Pacific,	750,000
Minnesota Central,	290,000
Winona and St. Peter,	690,000
Memphis and Little Rock,	365,536
Cairo and Fulton,	965,631
Little Rock and Fort Smith,	458,771
Iron Mountain Railroad,	866,000
Cairo and Fulton,	188,708
Iron Mountain,	1,400,000
Jackson, Lansing and Sagina,	1,052,469
Flint and Permerquette,	586,822
Lake Superior and Mississippi,	800,000
Minnesota Southern,	735,000
Hastings and Dacotah,	550,000
St. Joseph and Denver City,	1,700,000
Kansas and Neosho Valley,	2,350,000
South. Branch Union Pacific,	1,202,000
Placerville and Sacramento,	200,000
California and Oregon,	1,540,000
Atlantic and Pacific,	42,000,000
Stockington and Copperolis,	320,000
Total	171,287,748

This is the amount of lands the Radical party has taken from you, laboring men, of the country, and given to "landless" corporations—to moneyed speculators and mammoth monopolies. It has taken one hundred and seventy-one millions two hundred and eighty-seven thousand, seven hundred and forty-eight acres of land that belonged to you and your children, and given them away. Moreover, there and now pending in the State thirty-two measures of a similar character, and all but five of these grants are for the benefit of railroad companies. What is known as the Fremont road calls for 26,000,000 acres: the rest for 22,000,000 being an aggregate of 48,000,000 acres of public lands now about being stolen from their rightful owners, the people and given to hungry corporations having neither bodies to be kicked nor souls to be damned. Protests against this monstrous wrong are of corse utterly useless, but we intend that the victims shall at least know what they are plundered of, and who are the robbers.

Not a German solider remains in Paris. The Saxons passed out at 10 o'clock Friday morning, marching in front of the Arc de Triumphe amid the profound silence of a few spectators.

Hon. L. D Britton.

The revolutionary conduct of the Radical members of the House having caused the adjournment of the Legislature last week, we are pleased to notice the emminent services rendered by the above gentleman in that body.

Mr. Britton has served us in an efficient and faithful manner, and comes home only to receive the hearty endorsement of the majority of his constituents for the fearless discharge of his duty as Representutive. He was a practical hard working man, always to be found where his duties called him. Nor did he manifest an indifference to even the most unimportant question, which were brought to the notice of that body and with that careful scrutiny, and painstaking, always knew how to vote without relying upon the opinions, or influenced by the favor of others. With a high sense of what is right and honest—with a clear judgement and marked integrity, he was often appealed to for his decision upon important bills, and always gave a clear and candid expression of his views. In short, Mr. B. has made an able and influential legislator, a worthy representative, and a powerful adversary against the extravagance and corruption of the party that has been plundering the taxpayers for the last ten years, and we but express the sentiments of Democrats all over the county, when we say, "well done thou good and faithful servant."

Important to Taxpayers.

At a meeting of the Editors and Publishers' Association of the State of Indiana, held at Indianapolis, on the 19th of January, 1871, a proposition to ask the legislature to pass a law requiring the publication of the proceedings and allowances of boards and county commissioners, the allowances of courts, and an anunal statement of the receipts and expenditures of township trustees, was discussed and a dopted, and a committee consisting of T. H. B. McCain, J. C. Cope J. T. Brayer, J. B. Stoll, and Dr. Thomas of Winnemac, appointed to memorialize the legislature on the subject. In compliance with this resolution, the committee have prepared a bill for the publication of "an abstract of the proceedings and allowances had and made at each session of the several boards of county commissioners," for "a full itemized account of all allowances" of courts and for a corresponding statement of township trustees. They are to be published in papers of each political party (where there may be one of each in the county,) for ten cents per line of medium type. Section second declares that the abstract of proceedings allowances provided in this act shall be sufficiently full and explicit to convey satisfatcory information of all the act of boards of county commissioners, but nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the publication of information, papers, documents or any other thing not essential to the proper understanding of the proceedings and allowances.

A law to this effect would certainly be beneficial to the tax-payers, as affording them an opportunity of ascertaining whether their funds are judiciously and properly expended and for what purpose. We feel confident that an overwhelming majority of tax-payers are favorable to the passage of such a bill.—Laport Argus.

Dutch Drolleries,

"Good morning, Schneider." "We gech tis den," "Do you know what church that is?" "Yaw, dot is der Drinity Church." "You see the steeple and that little cross w-a-a-y up there?" "Yaw, I saw him." "Well how is that, for high?" The German looked pleased, scratched his head, and said: "Dot is goot! Der best I hear dese six weeks; yaw, dot is very goot!" The wag went his way, leaving the German smiling, scratching his head, and gazing abstractedly at the little cross so high in the air.

While thusstanding, a smile over his face, a friend camealong, and he thought to give him the same good thing and have another laugh, and said: "Hollo, Fritz; how you was, eh?" "Goot. How was it going to be mit yourself?" "Goot all der vile. Do you know what church am ders?" "Yaw, dere am der Drinity; I know dese church more as a dozen years already." May Christians Go to the Theater.—Rev. J. F. W. Ware, of the Church of Our Saviour, Baltimore, delivered a very sensible and broad-spirited sermon recently, on the subject, "May I Go to the Thea ter?" Among other things he said: "The more Christians go to the theater the more Christian will it be. If we all endeavor to raise the social tone, to encourage a grand art and make its noblest impersonations welcome and desirable, we shall be doing the best thing we can for it, for ourselves, for the public, make it sure that in the incoming future the theater shall stand side by side, hand in hand with the press and the pulpit in the elevation of popular tatte and the teaching of christian morality." Silly Sabine should make a note of such excellent views on the stage.

The Terms of Peace.—The conditions of peace settled between Germany and France are much more moderate that the public have been led to expect. The pecuniary indemnity exacted is but three hundred and twenty millions of thalers, or two hundred and fifty millions in our money. On the other hand, the territorial indemnity also is no larger than that which the Germans have from the first required, namely, the whole of of Alsace and Lorraine, including the important fortresses of Metz, Nancy, and Strasburg. The pride of the French is also spared the humiliation of the march of the German army through Paris, and the Germans will at once return to their own country by the most convenient rontes.

What Talent, Energy and Skill Can Do in America.

To the general effect and splendid success of the late Carnival no small contribution was made by the Napoleon of Druggists, the famous Dr. H. T. Helmbold, of New York, who at great expense came to Washington, bringing with him the finest and most valuable horses and carriage ever driven on Pennsylvania Avenue. A special description of his establishment cannot fail of being interesting. The Doctor brought with him five horses, two Hambletonians, and three Kentucky ones. They were driven together, two at the wheel, and the others tandem. Their graceful action, perfect docility, admirable training and great speed, became the theme of praise. Many of the most distinguished gentlemen of the nation's capitol, by the invitation and kindness of Dr. Helmbold, enjoyed the rare treat of riding over the finest avenue in America, in the handsomest team, and after the five best horses, now driven together, the world can produce,

JUPITER AND PRINCE.

These are the wheel horses, two large, powerful, and bright bays, and while they are as mettlesome and proud as the historical horse of Alexander, they are gentle and obedient to the slightest movement of the rein. They are very fast, and singly, have frequently trotted a mile in two minutes and forty seconds.

MAGENTA.

He is a Kentucky horse, six years old. and a bright bay—a full blooded animal, and capable of making a mile in two minutes and thirty seconds. He is as tractable and kind as a horse possibly can be.

AUGUSTUS.

The next horse, appropriately bearing the grand old Roman name of Augustus, and fully sustaining its meaning, follows Magnta, and like him is a native of Kentucky. He is a bright bay, seven years old, and makes his mile with ease in two minutes and forty seconds.

VOLANT.

Like the other four, Volant is of a bright bay, eight years old, a Kentuckian, and trots with ease a mile in two minutes and fifty seconds. So to speak he controls the lead horses and balance, the whole team. When put to his full speed he presents a vivid picture of the meaning of his name. The five horses together can trot a mile in four minutes. This is fast, very fast for a team of this size. Five Dexters could not trot it together without long and careful training.

The harness worn by these horses is in perfect keeping with their beauty and value. It is made of the finest leather, gold mounted, elaborately ornamented, and bears the monogram H. T. H. The reins are of French buckskin. The martaingales are made of fine scales of gold, and they flash their purity of mental in the sunlight with every movement of the horses' necks. The whip cost one hundred and fifty dollars, and is heavily mounted with gold.

THE CARRIAGE.

It was built by Brewster in New York, and it is a most magnificent specimen of taste, strength, ease and convenience. It may be used either as a landeau or as a close carriage, and with two, four or six footmen. Its first cost was twenty-eight hundred dol'ars in gold, and it is consid ered the finest carriage ever built in America. It is longer than other landeaus, hence the hack look or appearance is entirely avoided.

All this is quite sufficient to indicate that Dr. Helmbold lives like a princely gentleman. However, he has other carriages, among them an American drag, the most stylish and elegant one in the country. It is heavily trimmed with gold and fitted for two coachmen and two footmen. The hubbins are of gold and the tires of the finest steel. It cost a large sum of money and will exceed in its rich effect any carriage he has ever driven at Saratoga, Long Branch, and other noted watering places.

The Doctor also has a top phæton, used with two or four horses, and it is often seen and admired in the pleasure drives of the Park and Harlem lane.

The citizens of the old world might regard with amazement the rich and abundant life of a citizen of a new republic, vieing with their own lives in power and adornments, after a few years of strong effort and the successful application of talent, energy and skill.

A Pugilist's Love-Letter.

Dearest Emma: Your last reached me the day after the milk. Blessing on the darling bunch of fives that scribbled it. I kissed the signature for the dear little girl that will one day make me the happiest fellow going. I can't begin to describe my feelings on reading it. I had been auctioneered on my knowledge-box, couldn't have been more completely grassed. Any boy might have floored me by a tap on my snuffer-trap. And the sight of the photograph of your lovely mug almost knocked me out of time. How I recall those features! Those ogles, as blue as the sky; that conk, with its aquiline curve; that rosy-lipped tatter-trap; those ivories; that fair skin, where the claret blushes. Oh! would that the original were present, her nut reclining on my bread-basket, her oration trap murmuring in my lugs, and her mauley clasped in the flipper of her adorer. Ah! love has got my pimple in chancery, and is fibbing away. I can't counter on his nob, and care not how soon the sponge is thrown up.

A prominent New York paper exhumes a few figures which may prove interesting. Here they are: "The great crisis of 1857 showed failures to the extent of $265,818,000. Since that period we have had only two years, 1861 and 1867. which recorded so great a degree of commercial disaster as 1870 shows. From 1863 to 1867, we steadily increased in failures, reaching, in in the latter period, $96,665,000. In 1868, there was a little apparent recuperation; but 1867 and 1870 proved it to be merely apparent, as we have to day almost reached the extent of the embarrassment of 1867. And yet, in the face of all this, the people are told that the country is "bounding upward and onward!"

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Lost Cow—see advertisement.

We are in receipt of a very fine poetic production, which we leave out for the benefit of our readers.

Another Democractic paper has been started in this State.

We are under obligations to the officers of the L. S. & M. S. Railroad for late favors.—Thanks, gentlemen.

Another poor girl has died in Virginia from the use of tobacco, at the age of 100. She was an orphan.

Ready made clothing down to the lowest notch, at the Red Front, Keystone Block, Calhoun Street, Fort Wayne.

Hire home mechanics, patronize home manufacturers and home merchants, build up home interests, take a home paper, and all will go well.

The Waterloo House, at Waterloo, under the able management of Mr. Dickinson, is becoming quite popular, and is meeting with good success. We return thanks for courtesies extended by the gentlemanly proprietor.

We learn that our farmers are taking advantage of the fine weather, by reaping the first crop of the season—maple sugar and molasses. The camps are quite numerous, and the yield generally very large We would be pleased to receive a quantity of this article from some of our enterprising farmers.

Don't forget the Red Front, Keystone Block, when you go to Fort Wayne. Ready made clothing in great abundance, at awfully low prices.

We made a mistake in the name of the fellow who was murderded some time ago, as described in last weeks paper. It should have been Amos Krat.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern road will put the atmospheric brakes on their passenger trains shortly. These brakes place the train entirely under control of the engineer.

Large Eggs.—Our friend, Cooper Ralston, has just shown us three large hen eggs, two of which measured, 6¾ inches in diameter, and 7¼ inches long, and the other 7x8.—How's that for big?

Godey's Lady's Book for March has been received. We trust it will be a regular visitor as we regard it as containing more good things, than any other we know of. A Club should be raised here immediately.

Rotchild Bros., at the Red Front, Keystone Block, can sell you a suit of clothes cheaper than any other place in Fort Wayne. Try them.

Tom Taylor says there is a proposition before the city Council of Fort Wayne, for impounding swine. If they succeed in that what will become of the Journal? Tom'll go, sure.

The Fruit House, at Fort Wayne, is still reducing its prices on all articles of daily consumption, and at the same time keeps the best qualities to be found in the city.—See the change in prices in another column.

George Francis Train, America's greatest orator and next President of the United States, delivers a lecture before the Irish association, on the 17th of this month, at Ft. Wayne.

A newly married couple blew out the gas at a hotel in Fort Wayne, the other day. The funeral did not come off, because the porter interfered.

New York ladies are again slandered. They are now said to be partial to "lemonade with a fringe," which compound corresponds to the article prepared for masculine use "with a stick in it." No gallant man will believe the story.

A man stopping his paper, wrote to the editor: "I think folks ottent to spend their munny for papers mi dadda diden't and everybody sed he was the intelligentist man in the country and had the smartest family of boiz that ever duged taters."

Lindman & Rubin, the popular tobacconists, on the corner of Main & Calhoun Sts, have just received a large stock of smoking and chewing tobaccos and cigars, which they are selling very low. Don't fail to call and examine their stock when you visit the city.

If anybody had met Christopher Columbus in the middle of the Atlantic, and told him that he was in the act of discovering a country that would untimately fall into the hands of such an administration as the present, he would have gone back home and stayed there."

Huestis & Hamilton, wholesale grocers of Fort Wayne, are enjoying a largely increased trade, and their facilites for supplying the country trade, are unsurpassed. They are perfect gentlemen, obliging and courteous, and we heartely recommend them to our merchants generally.

Best Book for Every Body.—The new illustrated edition of Webster's Dictionary containing three thousand engravings, is the best book for everybody that the press has produced in the preent century, and should be regarded as indispensible to the well-regulated home, reading-room, library, and place of business.—Golden Era.

Insane.—Mrs. Shrader, wife of Charles Shrader, who has given evidence of being insane for several years past, and especially during the last few months, was examined and decided non compus mentus, and sheriff Plum had another trip to Indianapolis, this week. DeKalb will soon have her quota in the insane asylum. If this was Allen County we could tell who would be the next victim.—Tom Taylor.

Crowd around Church doors, on Sunday evenings, boys, when the people are going in, but more especially when they are coming out. Stare in the face of every young lady who comes near you in striving to get through. On such occasions if you see any young man act so ungentlemanly as to offer his company home to a young lady, cheer him with such exclamations as "Go in Hank!" "Look out for the old folks," "Don't break the gate hinges," etc. This will certainly attract attention to the ungentlemanly fellow, and stamp you as a member of good society."

A common political fever is raging fearfully, at Fort Wayne. Office seekers are as thick as June Bugs, and its lucky that they can't both exist at the same time. The second Tuesday in May acts as a blighting frost, and the next morning they are scarce as hen's teeth. Of course everybody is going to be elected. There is considerable "Shenanigan" about there spring elections, and as we are not interested we can stand off and see the fun.—Go in, boys, and may the best man win.

Moderwell & Fowler have just received a fine stock of Gents furnishing goods, which are unsurpassed in the city of Fort Wayne. Their establishment is situated on the corner of Calhoun Street, near the Aveline House, and those who wish to secure the spring styles of neckties, collars, or wanting a nice fiting shirt made to order, should give them a call. They are clever gentlemanly fellows, and will be pleased to show you anything in their line.

A western editor, on entering his office and seeing his apprentice boy cutting some queer capers, called out to him, "Jim, what are you doing on the floor?" "Why, sir," I have had a shock." "A shock?" "Yes sir." "What kind of a shock?" "Why, sir," said the lad, gasping, "one of your subscribers came in during your absence—said he owed for two years' subscription—paid it—and also paid another year in advance."

Personal.—Mr. V. E. Mayerhoffer, agent for the Phœnix Mutual Life Insurance Co., is in town establishing a local agency. Mr. M. informs us that he has not procured a great many applications up to this time, but as he intends remaining here for some days yet, we predict that he will do his share of the business, for he represents an old and reliable company, and is one of those that wish to inform the public of everything pertaining to Life Insurance, whether they wish to insure or not. The rates of the Phœnix are as low as safety will admit, and no extra charge for insuring the lives of females. We wish him success.

True as Preaching.—No young woman ever looks so well to a sensible man as when dressed in a plain, neat, modest attire, with but little ornament about her. She looks then as though she possessed worth in herself, and needed no artificial rigging to enhance her value. If a young woman would spend as much time in improving her mind, training her temper and cherishing kindness, mercy, and other good qualities, as most of them do in extra dress and ornaments to increase their personal charms, she would at least be recognized among a thousand—her character would be read in her countenance.

Dastardly Attack.—A man by the name of John Sommers, residing in this county, entered attorney Plum s office, in the Court House, last Tuesday, and seeing S. Cary Evans, Esq., sitting at the desk, asked him in regard to the right of way through some property. While Mr. Evans was answering him in a quiet, gentlemanly way, Sommers advanced upon him and struck him like a coward, twice above the eye. Such conduct is disgraceful and unmanly and we are sorry to know that we have a citizen in this county mean enough to do it. We are sufficiently acquainted with Mr. Evans to know that he would give no one a cause for such treatment, and especially from an individual physically twice his equal.

Some time, when in New York, if you want to see a man who is making a success of business, and making himself wealthy by using printers' ink, walk by his drug store, drop in, ask for H. T. Helmbold, and tell him you came out of curiosity to look at one of the smallest business men of New York, who is, at the same time, one of the greatest. If he should look just a little annoyed at the interruption, tell him that we sent you and in all probability he will ask you to the soda fountain, order a glass of tonic, bid you call again, and you will go on your way rejoicing, satisfied that Helmbold, the millionaire druggist of New York, is about as good a fellow as they make.

Train's Lecture.—Since hearing the lecture of George Francis, at Fort Wayne, last Monday evening, this paper is decidedly in favor of him for President. He explained the matter right there, and there's no use fighting against fate, while there is some advantage in being on the winning side, George give us your hand. We are one of that million votes you read and dream about so much. We want George to be President, not only because of his availability, (5,000,000 votes,) but because he says he will leave this country, if he don't get the position, and we would never recover from such a blow. "Don't go, George, don't go."

Geo. gathered together one of the largest and most respectable audiences we ever saw in Fort Wayne. He spoke for two hours and a quarter, holding the attention of the people just as easy as rolling off a log.—Some say that George Francis is incoherent, crazy, a charlatan, humbug. Why, that ain't no name for it. He is to be in the city again on the 17th inst., and those who can hear him, should do so, as they will be paid for their trouble.

Girls Don't Talk Slang.

Girls, dont talk slang! If it is necessary that any one in the family should do that, let it be your big brother, though we would advise him not to adopt "pigeon English" when there is an elegant, systematized language that he can just as well use. But don't you do it. You have no idea how it sounds to ears unused or averse to it, to hear a young lady, when she is asked if she will go with you some place, answer, "Not much!" or, if requested to do something she does not wish, to here her say, "Can't see it."

Not long ago we heard a young miss, who is educated and accomplished, in speaking of a young man, say that she intended to 'go for him!' and when her sister asked her assistance at some work, she answered, "Not for Joe!"

Now, young ladies of unexceptionable character and really good education fall into this habit, thinking it shows smartness to answer back in slang phrases; and they soon slip flippantly from their tongues with a saucy pertness that is neither lady-like nor becoming. "I bet" or "you bet" is well enough among men who are trading horses or land; but the contrast is startling and positively shocking, when a young man is holding the hand of his lady-love, to hear those words issue from her lips. They seem at once to surround her with the rougher associations of his daily life, and bring her downfrom the pedestal of her purity whereon he had placed her, to his own coarse level.

We know the bright-eyed girl who reads this will think the matter over, and do what is right, and discard slang and unlady-like phrases.

RAILROAD MATTERS.

In regard to the Baltimore & Chicago R. R., the indication still continues favorable, and the work of surveying has already commenced. We take the following from the Wooster Democrat, merely to give an idea of what they are doing in Wayne County. If Wooster happens to be on the line through this place she will get the road, and if otherwise, then she won't. We have no sympathy for any thing but the center line, and if any other is selected, we shall endeavor, in our humble way, to crush the enterprise.

"Since the return of the Committee that had an interview with Mr. Garrett touching the location of this proposed Railroad through Wooster, about $40,000 aditional stock has been subscribed. This is doing very well, and there should be no cessation in the good work until a sufficient amount is subscribed to make a good showing. There is no doubt that were this proposed road now in operation through Wooster from eight to ten cents a bushel more for wheat could be paid in this city by our grain buyers than is now paid. The road would bring to our city a first rate market that is much nearer than the one to which our dealers now ship. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance to our citizens that this road should be built through our city."

Baltimore & Ohio Extension.—A correspondent of the Toledo Blade, writing from Napoleon says:

"We have been somewhat excited (but in a quiet way) on Railroad matters here, in fact we have been quite confident of getting the "Baltimore & Ohio Extension," directly through this place, as we are immediately on the air line from Akron to Chicago, the proposed route. But I learn by a gentleman just from Defiance, Ohio, that the road will pass through that place."

Money is being provided for meeting the expenses of the preliminary survey of the Chicago route through Defiance. Engineers are expected to begin here within ten days if the weather is favorable. The report they make will determine the line and its location.

A rumor to the effect that the committee who went to New York, last week, to negotiate for the sale of bonds of the Eel River Railroad, have been successful, is generally credited here, though nothing definite has been learned. We can give more satisfactory news, perhaps, in our next.

The Fish Law.

The bill for the protection of fish has passed both branches of the Legislature, been approved by the Governor, and is there fore now in full force. We trust it may be executed with promptness, and that the full penalty may be inflicted for every violation.

We make a synopsis of the provisions of the bill: Section 1 provides that no person shall take any fish with a net, seine, gun or trap of any kind, or set a net or any apparatus to catch fish, or use a gig or spear in any of the lakes, ponds, rivers, or small streams in this State, except as provided by law, during the the months of March, April May, November and December, under a penalty of a fine in any sum not less than five dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars—The law permits the taking of minnows with a seine no more than fifteen feet long, fishing with a hook, line and pole and in the Ohio river.

Section 2 provides that no person shall place in any stream, lake or pond, lime or other substance deleterious to fish, or use any drug or medicated bait with the design of injuring or poisoning fish, and any person found violating these provisions shall be subject to a fine in any sum not less than $25 nor more than $50.

Section 3 provides that any person may bring prosecutions in the name of the State against any one violating this act in any of its provisions. Justices of the Peace in any county where the violation has taken place have jurisdiction. It is made the duty of the Prosecuting Attorneys to see that this act is enforced in the several counties.

Caution to Soldiers.

We notice in some of our exchanges a caution to soldiers not to sell their discharge papers, as sharpers and speculators are trying to buy them up with a view to swindling them and the government of the lands to which veterans will be entitled under the Soldiers' Homestead act when it shall become a law. The Cleveland Leader says that "two methods are apparently open by which these papers may be turned to a dishonest purpose. Many are in the possession of veterans, who have no intention of removing westward, and are therefore willing to sell their discharge certificates for a trifling price. These papers may be sold by the brokers to other men not veterans, who wish to acquire western lands, and may do so by assuming the name of the soldier whose discharge papers they have bought. In other cases it is believed that discharge papers are being bought up for the purpose of being sold back to their original posessors at a greatly advanced price when wanted."

This warning is well intended and veterans and their heirs would do well to take the warning not to sell or give away their discharge papers for any consideration what ever. No honest use can ever be made of these discharge papers by any one but the soldier or his lawful heirs. A man who proposes to buy one simply proposes a fraud and asks the veteran to become a party in that fraud, as well as to submit to one himself. But it may be well enough for conscienceless speculators to understand also that they have nothing to make by a traffic in discharge papers, as the homestead law requires that each applicant for lands must swear that he is the identical person who served in the army under the name embodied in the muster out papers. And if occupation and title were given by fraud become totally worthless when the deception should be brought out in the court. No title could be conveyed in that manner that would be worth one cent. To avoid wrong doing all around let no soldier sell or give away his discharge papers. On the contrary, let every true soldier regard them as his most precious possession while he shall live, and the most honorable heir-loom which he can possibly bequeath to his children.

The Horse.—There is, perhaps, no animal in the brute creation that is so susceptible of kindness, nor so capable of being taught to obey the will of his master, as the horse, and at the same time there is none so much abused and injured by ignorant and incapable attendants and drivers. The horse possesses remarkable inteligence, and if properly handled evinces his affection and gratitude in a most unmistakable manner. But we have seen them terribly ill treated and abused by those who did not seem to possess half as much sense as the animal. Only the other day a brustal fellow got fast in the mud, and because the poor half fed team could not draw out a load, that would been work for four horses, he seized a club and beat them in a terrible manner. So frequent and alarming has this abuse to the brute creature, become of late, that societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals have been organized all over the country.

A gentleman dying recently, in New York, bequeathed a large fortune to this noble object. No man of good common sense will treat animals in this way. Horses and beasts generally may be punished at times with good effect, but kindness often does more than anything else, to have them do as you want them. Be merciful and kind to dumb brutes then, and horses especially, and remember that they either know more or less than you do, to be determined on'y by the manner in which you treat them.

Correspondence.

An Outlook for the Future.

The larger portion of our schools have closed and those who have been busied in the work of instruction now enjoy vacation and begin to look about them for spring employment, while others, principally girls and young women, are considering the question to teach or not to teach during the summer and to both classes, we have a few words of kindly advice to offer.

Those who have taught have learned what difficulties teachers may expect to encounter, but there is but one to which your attention is especially called at this time.

In the various branches you have assumed to have a knowledge sufficient to instruct others, have you felt that you could do your work thoroughly, have you not felt like a blind man leading a troop of trusting blind children who suppose you to see and if you have not pervurted your calling and led them into error, is it not due more to the character of the youth than your ability to direct aright? Few will say "we were masters of the situation, we have nothing to learn."

Then, let experience be your teacher and whatever you may do between now and another winter, do not neglect your school books. Could the veterans of Sherman fall into line and march with the beautiful precision which marked their triumphal review at Washington after the lapse of half dozen years?

No more can teachers enter school rooms and conduct classes, as the cause of education demands, without regular faithful review of every branch. Therefore young men, let the honor which followed your success stimulate you to study both for your own good and that of those you may be called to instruct.

As the time for action approaches the urgency of the need to review increases.—Pictures fade from the canvas, marble columns are eaten by the corrosive tooth of time and the hard earned lore which we think is safely stored in the mind when called for, is found to our dismay, to have gradually waned to a dim untrusty remembrance.

We, therefore, urge every person whose eye may meet this to take "Time by the forelock" and review her studies.

Some of you have known the embarrassment of standing at a board and making a chidish display of ignorance of the elements of Grammar and with a pointer called Russia, Australia, the Missouri, the Mississippi, and other like blunders. Now is the time to guard against such errors. Geography is most sadly neglected by most teachers while it is one of the most useful branches.

Let Europe and North America become familiar to you. Recite evenings to a sister or a brother and with confidence you will meet others in the field of competition and will ingrade from the multitude of the lowest class at least one step higher and, in your school room, the old dirty map which has served in summers past for window curtains will possess a new intent to you, they will be found useful and helpful in conducting the school and, beneficial to yourself. "By teaching, we learn" is true. As the torch in the childish hand is lighted, the light of your own burns with a brighter flame.

Heed these words, if you care for success and honor, improve the hour of a portion of each day in real study.

W. H. M.

Corunna Indiana, March 3d, 1870.

T. C. Mays, Esq.

Sir:—The Republicans having broken quorum in the "House" to prevent the exposure of the frauds and peculations of their officers for the time during which they have had entire control of the affairs of the State, and to prevent the passage of good and wholesome laws which would tend to elevate the people, and relieve them in a great measure of the burdens of taxation, which have become too heavy to be longer borne, it became a necessity with the Democratic members to return to their respective homes without finishing the good work, so nobly begun. Hoping that at some future time we may be able to expose all their iniquitious schemes and acts, which are "Legion" and to show to the voters of our State how they have been imposed upon, and believing this must be done in a great measure by the Demcratic press, I wish you the greatest success in your paper. Please to send my paper to Corunna, as I do not wish to miss a single copy of it. May success attend your efforts.

Yours truly

November 19th, 1870.

We the undersigned citizens of Spencerville and vicinity, take pleasure in recommending Mr. Thomas Baldock, of Auburn, Ind., to the public as a good honest and reliable mechanic and builder, he having just completed a school edifice for our school district, thirty by fifty four feet, two stories high, brick material, and we unite in certifying that said work is done in a good substantial and workman like manner in every particular, and that said Baldock in his intercourse with us has been gentlemanly in his department, honest and fair in his business transactions, and that we freely give this recommendation without any solicitation on his part.

Geo. Umphy, Al. Dawson, H. W. Bowman David Butler, Ed. Fales E. Z. Kile, John Seighty & Son, O. W. Rummell, G. & S. Barney, George Bittinger, S. N. Olds, J. Rhodes, J. Emanuel, W. K. Simpson, Asa Hetcher, Jacob Hull, A. J. Zimmerman, Frederic Hinsey, Daniel Zahner, John Y. Davis, David Myers, Alex. Leighty, J. H. Murry, O. Maxfield, T. S. Murry, trustee.

The above certificate was handed me on the completion of the above work without solicitation, and I here testify to the extreme good usuage and gentlemanly treatment, which was manifested by all of the above gentleman, besides a host of others. Their uniform kindness I shall never forget. Their enterprise and liberality is also proverbial, and they now posess one of finest school buildings, according to the size of the town, in the State. Such institutions speak volumes for them and they will soon out strip their neighbors in the general features of a town.

Thomas Baldock.

Mary's little lamb has become a burden to one of our rural poets, and he disposes of it in this way:

"Mary has a little lamb!"
We've heard it o'er and o'er,
Until that little lamb's become
A perfect little bore!

So I propose there shall be dug
A grave both deep and wide,
In which that lamb and all its bards
Be buried side by side.

The celebrated little lamb owned and controlled by Mary has been hushed again. Hear—

Mary's got von little shepe;
His vleece vas white as vool;
And every blace vhere Mary's bin
Dat leetle schesps bin come too.

Another rustic says:

Mary had a little lamb
It cut up lots of capers,
And everything the critter did,
Has got into the papers.

To Nebraska, California, Kansas, and The B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is Burlington, on the Mississippi. It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western terminal.

Its northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing to Omaha, it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the intra continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and trafic choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the South Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg, it makes close connections, twice a day, for St. Joseph. Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to no other in speed, safety, or any Pullman luxury of Modern travel; and while on your way, survey the gardens of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then before the people bound westward, "to take the Burlington Route."

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO. of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—Thomas H. Burrows, President of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural College, died on Saturday last, aged 67 years.

—At Philadelphia, on Monday, John Ware, convicted of the murder of his father, was sentenced to be hung on the 10th of April.

—A man named Hoffman, who was working outside of the Workingmen's Union, was shot in his bed on Saturday night, at Mt. Carmel, Pa., and the end of his house afterward blown out with powder.

—Walter Brown, the famous oarsman, died at the residence of his mother, in Newburgh, N. Y., Saturday, from enlargement of the spleen, complicated with dropsy. The disease was contracted during the construction of his boat-house at Boston a few weeks ago.

—Dr. Jos. W. Palmer, whose connection with the Boston press extended further back than that of any person now living, died on the 2d inst. He had been attached to the Daily Advertiser for over 40 years, chiefly as commercial editor, and was well known as the compiler of the necrology of the graduates of Harvard College. Dr. Palmer was born in 1796, and graduated at Harvard in 1820.

The West.

—N. G. Hubbard was killed by lightning on the 2nd inst., in his barn near Springfield, Ill.

Franklin Bruner, well known at Chicago as the owner of Cruiskeen, Baffle, and King's Excuse, three running horses, died at his home near Ottawa, Ill., Saturday night, of disease of the kidneys, after a long and severe sickness.

—A San Francisco dispatch says a painful scandal has been developed through the discovery that there were $6,500 short in the accounts of the County Clerk, who had loaned the amount to Mrs. Mansfield Lawberry, of recent New York notoriety. The money not being returned, the Clerk raised half and paid it over to his bondsmen, who have been appointed to take charge of the receipts, pending a final adjustment of the affair.

—A private letter received from Florence, Arizona, says: "The Indians are worse in Arizona now than they ever have been before. Within the past two weeks they have attacked and killed or captured three different parties within 20 miles of this place. One party of four men, in charge of two five-mule teams with barley, was attacked, and one man killed, the others escaping after a vigorous fight. A day or two subsequently the Indians attacked a foraging party consisting of three men with a four-horse team. Two men were killed and the team captured. The next we heard of the Indians was that they killed two men who were passing on horseback from Sacatan to Salt river."

—A horrible murder occurred at Neenah, Wis., recently. A man named Hesse, who has been in jail at Oshkosh, escaped and returned to his home in Neenah. On arriving there, he dragged his wife from her bed, and with a large knife cut her throat from ear to ear. The murder soon became known, and a posse went in pursuit of the murderer, but were unable to find him. About 11 o'clock in the morning Hesse appeared on the street, heavily armed, and went to the Neenah Hotel. He ascended to the attic of the house, where he was pursued and shot, being killed instantly.

The South.

—Daniel B. Hill, a prominent citizen and one of the early settlers of St. Louis, died there on Tuesday, aged 81 years.

—The President has approved and signed the act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes. Also the joint resolution to extend the benefit of the act establishing the National Asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers to the disabled soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the Mexican war.

Foreign.

—A Paris correspondent writes: "The party of the Reds, immensely strong numerically, is yet more formidable by the compactness of its organization and unity of purpose. It is to a man in favor of war to the knife, and capable of the most desperate acts. It is composed of the very dregs of the population, and will have to be reckoned with sooner or later. It is quite possible for a conflict to arise between them and the Prussians, should the latter make a triumphant march through Paris."

EMPEROR'S REVIEW.—The New York Herald's correspondent gives the following account of the Emperor's review of the German troops at Long Champs: Exactly at half-past ten o'clock the Emperor drove up to the back of the grand stand in an open carriage, attended by dragoons and the great officers of his household. Alighting on the steps of the grand entrance, he took a horse and cantered across the field toward the general staff which had followed along the line. As the Emperor appeared the bands all struck up and all the troops saluted him. The Emperor looked exceedingly well, rode dashingly, despite his lingering indisposition. As he rode down the front of the line, the flags were dropped, and the men gave three ringing cheers. The Emperor kept his hand on his helmet, and smiled upon the soldiers. Passing Bismarck, he waved his hand in a friendly manner twice. Having passed up and down the lines, the Emperor galloped across the field to a point two hundred yards to the right, to the grand stand facing the troops, where he took up his position in front of the Crown Prince, sitting erect on his charger and surveying the troops for a moment with deep emotion. The bands struck up, and with splendid step the 30,000 men marched past in such a perfect manner that each battery presented profile as only one gun. The Emperor leaves for Germany on Saturday, instead of Monday.

Ratified by the Emperor.

"VERSAILLES, March 3.—I have just ratified the conditions of peace, which the Bordeaux Assembly have accepted. Thus far the work is complete which was through seven months' battles to be achieved, thanks to the valor, devotion, and endurance of our incomparable army and the sacrifices of the whole Fatherland. The Lord of Hosts has everywhere visibly blessed our enterprises, and by His mercy has permitted an honorable peace. To Him be the honor—to the Fatherland the thanks.

(Signed) "WILHELM."

The above was publicly read amid the booming of artillery, the ringing of bells, and the cheers of the people, wild with joy.

The commission is to exist for two years. After a brief explanation by Washburn in reply to some objections, the bill was passed.——The Senate amendments to the Army and Navy Appropriation bills were non-concurred in, and a committee of conference ordered.——Bingham, from the Judiciary Committee, reported the bill to divide the State of Illinois into three judicial districts, and it was passed under a suspension of the rules.——Townsend, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a resolution acquitting Gen. O. O. Howard of the charges against him as to his administration in the Freedman's Bureau. THE SITUATION AT PARIS.

The New York Herald has a special dispatch from Paris, dated March 3, from which we make the following extracts:

"The avenues are almost deserted. There is an extraordinary scene at the Arc de Triomphe. Two pieces of artillery have been unlimbered, and the gunners are near at hand, ready to sweep every avenue radiating from the Arch. There is also a strong guard of infantry, with their arms piled, bivouacked in the vicinity. The soldiers are singing from song-books, by the light of camp-fires. There is much difference in their temper, some fraternizing with the blouses, exchanging cigars and drinking wine, while others will not allow strangers near their fires. All are boasting of the conquest of Alsace and Lorraine, yet are glad that the war is over, that they may get back to the Fatherland. No one is allowed under the Arch. In the Place de la Concorde, there is a strong guard of Bavarians lying on the ground in front of the gates of the Tuileries. A Bavarian sentry was picking immortelles from the statue of Strasbourg, when a Frenchman who was passing cried, 'Beware!' At midnight I re-entered the French lines. Large bodies of guards were stationed around the watch-fires.

"As the Germans leave Paris this morning (3d), the papers reappear. The Debats says: 'In spite of the patriotism of Alsace, Lorraine and Metz, they must pass under the control of Germany. France cannot continue the war. The future does not belong to us, but following generations will take vengeance. We can only say three words: "Silence," "Patience," ——. The other we dare not pronounce; but we have no right to decide for future generations. They can act freely, and decide how to act.' The same paper blames the Parisians as fickle, with a feminine love of sight-seeing. 'They ought not,' it says, 'to gaze on the Prussians.'

"A lady friend says the German soldiers are quartered very cleanly, and, though awkward, are vastly superior to the French, and handsomer. They have been first-rate customers to the French shop-keepers for wines and cigars."

Another dispatch, dated Friday noon, says:

"The Prussian occupation of Paris has ended. The evacuation commenced last night, though it was not generally known at 6 this morning that it had begun. In regular order, with the cavalry and artillery in the advance, and on the sidewalk the Prussian and Bavarian infantry facing the roadway, at 8:30 the first men of the main body passed through the Arc de Triomphe, with bands playing and colors flying. Right straight under the Arch—the obstacles having been removed at the side of the column—Gen. Schackeer, commanding the Eleventh Corps, was stationed, and received the salutes of the men in passing. Many of the men wore evergreens in their helmets, and one regiment wore laurel. At 9 o'clock the Bavarian artillery and infantry, proceeding with full bands, arrived. A few minutes afterward the head of the Prussian column reached the Arch, marching in column sections. The morning had hitherto been foggy, but the sun now burst out gloriously, making everything appear grand. The troops cheered loudly, and the tattered appearance of their colors, borne proudly, attracted the attention of the French. Next came a crowd of princes and some dragoons; then the Eleventh Regiment of Jaeger Guards, and the Prussian artillery."

A dispatch from Amiens, dated the 3d, says:

"The greatest joy and enthusiasm at the announcement of the conclusion of peace have been manifested at the headquarters of and throughout the First Army Corps. The French commandant has requested the German General in command to give him arms for two companies, and also two cannon, to preserve the peace, as the workmen intend making a riotous demonstration when the German troops shall have evacuated Paris."

The Preliminaries of Peace.

The preliminaries of peace arranged by Bismarck and the other plenipotentiaries with Thiers and Favre, are as follows:

Article 1 specifies the line of demarcation. Article 2 provides that France will pay Germany five milliard francs—one milliard at least in 1871, and all the rest in the space of three years from the ratification. Article 3 provides that evacuation is to commence on the ratification of the treaty by the Assembly; that the German troops will then immediately quit Paris and the left bank of the Seine, and also the Departments of Indre, Loire, and the Seine-Inferieure. The French troops will remain behind the Loire until the signing of the definitive treaty of peace, except those in Paris, where the Government is not to have exceeding 40,000 troops. The Germans will evacuate the right bank of the Seine gradually after the signing of the definitive treaty and the payment of half a milliard francs. After the payment of two milliards, the Germans will only hold the Departments of Marne, Ardennes, Meuse, Vosges, Meurthe, and the town of Belfort. After the payment of three milliards, the Germans will only keep 50,000 troops in France; but if a sufficient money guarantee be given, the Germans will evacuate completely at once; otherwise, three milliards will carry interest at five per cent. from the ratification of the treaty. Article 4 provides that the German troops make no further requisitions; that the French Government will find food for the army in occupation of the ceded departments, that favorable arrangements will be made with the inhabitants, and time given them to move if they please; and that no obstacle will be placed in the way of emigration. Article 6 provides that the prisoners will be immediately liberated on the ratification of the treaty, and that the French railways will lend their carriages and engines at the same prices as to the French Government. Article 7 provides that the treaty will be definitely signed at Brussels immediately after the ratification. Article 8 provides that after the ratification the management of all the departments occupied will be handed over to the French officials, subject to German commanders, in the interest of German troops. Article 9 provides that it be well understood that the Germans have no authority over the departments not occupied by them.

CHAPPED HANDS, face, rough skin, pimples, ring-worm, salt-rheum, and other cutaneous affections, cured, and the skin made soft and smooth, by using the JUNIPER TAR SOAP, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York. It is more convenient and easily applied than other remedies, avoiding the trouble of the greasy compounds now in use.

HAMLIN, HALE & CO., Wholesale and Retail Dry Goods, now occupy the corner of the above splendid new block, their stores having a frontage of 120 feet on Wabash avenue. This firm is a combination of members of the two firms of F. N. Hamlin & Co., long known as a leading retail house, and of Hunt, Barbour & Hale, for five years a prominent wholesale firm. They use the first floor and basement for the retail branch, and the upper stories for the wholesale firm.

The magnificence of their building, and the requirements of their business, may be understood when we state that their principal floor is lighted in the day by 26 windows, each 15½ feet high, and in the evening by 28 chandeliers, each having 24 burners, making more than 650 gas lights for this floor alone.

JOHN V. FARWELL & CO., Wholesale Dealers in Dry Goods, Woolens, Notions, Fancy Goods, Hosiery and Gloves, have removed into their new store, 106, 108, 110 and 112 Wabash avenue, and have made the amplest preparations for the Spring trade. Their store—built and owned by themselves—contains seven floors, 72 by 165 feet, with extensions under sidewalk and alley, making 366 square rods—over two and a quarter acres of floor room—being the largest and most perfectly arranged store devoted exclusively to the wholesale dry goods trade in the Northwest. The south 112 feet of this block is one story higher, and 85 feet deeper, than the north 120 feet, though the perspective does not show it. They have four patent elevators working to thier full capacity, in receiving and shipping goods—one more, and running a third faster than those of any other store in the city. They are the oldest and most successful wholesale dry goods house in the Northwest, and sustain the same relation to the wholesale dry goods trade of Chicago that H. B. Claflin & Co. do to that of New York.

HOTCHKISS, EDDY & CO., successors to Whittemore, Carter & Brown, wholesale dealers in Hats, Caps, Furs and Straw Goods, occupy the second and third floors of the south 40 feet—167 feet deep—with a large and carefully selected stock of the best goods in their line, at the lowest prices, to be found in Chicago. Mr. Hotchkiss has had fifteen years' experience in the business in New York, and Mr. Eddy was seven years with John V. Farwell & Co., and had a confidential position in that great house. They are both live men, understand their business, and offer special inducements to the trade of the Northwest. They make a specialty of umbrellas and parasols.

BREAD and wine seems to have been the fare to which the people of Paris were reduced toward the end of the siege. The Government, about the middle of January, ordered every person to make a return of the quantity of flour he had on hand, and no person was allowed to hold more than ten pounds. A proclamation was next issued offering five dollars reward for every person who discovered two hundred pounds of wheat, barley or rye, the millers, according to general belief, having their cellars full to secure a monopoly. The Government ration was 300 grammes, or little over half a pound of bread per day for adults, and 150 grammes for children under five years of age. The bread was made of 50 parts wheat, 30 parts rice, and 20 parts oats. The greatest annoyance was the time taken up in waiting in the crowds at the butchers' every three days for a few ounces of meat, then waiting at the wood-yard for a few sticks, and again waiting at the bakers' for bread. At the restaurants, the customers were obliged to bring their own supply of bread, and one letter writer states that, not being able to eat his uninviting slice of oaten bread, it was thankfully accepted by two respectable persons dining at his table. The reason for cutting off the supply of bread to the restaurants, was to prevent persons of means from getting more than their share by buying a half pound at the baker's and then obtaining another half pound at the restaurant. As the supply of bread began to fall short, the Government ordered half a pint of wine to be distributed with the half a pound of bread by the baker. The health of the people rapidly gave way under this diet.

ON the six o'clock train from New York for Philadelphia, on Saturday evening before last Christmas, there was a group of West Point cadets, members of the class just censured by the House of Representatives, on their way to spend Christmas with their friends. The train was unlucky and suffered constant detentions, so that it arrived in Philadelphia fifteen minutes too late to make connections. One of the lads had sworn a good deal at the train, as if to accelerate its speed. On finding that the boys had lost their train, and were thus obliged to remain over Sunday in Philadelphia, a gentleman who had been appealed to by the young men, who had heard their conversation, gravely remarked to the lad whose profanity was so conspicuous that if he was in his place he would never utter another profane word. "Why?" asked the young man in some surpriese. "Because, replied the gentleman, "if with such swearing as you have indulged in you have not been able to increase the speed of the train, you had better never try again!" Then the young man found the laugh, at least, was against him.

A HUNDRED DISEASES may proceed from one source, a diseased or dibilitated stomach. No human being can be healthy when digestion is disordered. Tone the stomach and liver and regulate the bowels with DR. WALKER'S VEGETABLE VINEGAR BITTERS, and the work of assimilation and excretion will go bravely on. This vital elixir conquers the causes of all physical irregularities. By insuring perfect digestion and a proper flow of bile, it insures pure blood, a vigorous circulation, and the prompt discharge of all waste matter from the system.

POISONOUS CONFECTIONERY.—The official chemist of Dublin has recently made a report of 123 specimens of confectionery, purchased at thirteen establishments in that city. Those manufactured at three establishments were pure, and those obtained at the other ten shops contained poisonous pigments and other impurities. Out of forty articles tinted yellow, only two were colored with saffron, all the others containing chromate of lead. Some of the specimens contained sulphide of mercury, or vermilion. There seems to be no doubt, it is stated, that these mineral colors act as slow poisons.

NEGLECTED COUGHS AND COLDS.—Few are aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "Common Cold," in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to a mild remedy, if neglected, soon preys upon the Lungs. "Brown's Bronchial Troches," or COUGH LOZENGES, afford instant relief.

Owing to the good reputation and popularity of the Troches, many worthless and cheap imitations are offered, which are good for nothing. Be sure to obtain the true "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold everywhere.

WHY are candidates who fail to get elected like the world? Because they are depressed at the polls.

An Insalubrious Season.

Spring is welcome, but not its diseases. We should be glad to have its bloom without its fogs, its vapors, its sudden changes of temperature, and the agues, fits of indigestion, bilious attacks, and other harassing disorders which they engender. As this cannot be, it behooves all sensible people to do the best they can to escape such serious drawback on the poetry of the season. Ask any physician what the weak and delicate ought to do when miasma infects the air. The answer will be, "tone and regulate the system." But how? That is the important question. A dozen medical men would probably recommend as many different medicines. On the other hand, the thousands who have tested the virtues of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as an invigorant and alterative, will recommend but one, the wholesome preventive and restorative in which their own experience has taught them to trust. A course of this rare vegetable stimulant, commenced now, would save many a pang to the feeble and debilitated. It would be wise economy, too, for it would probably preclude the necessity for medical advice. Without disparagement to a profession which all intelligent men and women respect and honor, it is just as well, if possible, to keep out of the doctors' hands, and they would have comparatively few cases of fever and ague, dyspepsia, biliousness, nervousness, and general debility to attend to, if this agreeable and healthful specific were in universal use.

What is the Value of Money When Compared to Health.

Allen's Lung Balsam

Is warranted to break up the most troublesome Cough in an incredibly short time. There is no remedy that can show more evidence of real merit than this BALSAM for curing Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Croup, &c.

It is only about seven years since the Balsam was first offered to the public, and in this short time it has become known and appreciated in nearly every town and village throughout the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Hundreds of thousands of bottles are annually sold, and thousands of witnesses testify to its unequaled power in healing the diseases that it is recommended for.

TRY FIRST

Allen's Lung Balsam!

WHAT THE DOCTO SAY.

Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosciusca Co., Ind., says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."

Isaac A. Doran, M. D., of Logan Co., O., says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

It is Harmless to the most Delicate Child.

It Contains No Opium in Any Form.

It is Sold by Medicine Dealers generally.

CAUTION.

Call for "ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM," and shun the use of any other Balsam. Unprincipled men may deceive you with worthless preparations.

WALTHAM WATCHES.

The extensive use of these watches for the last fifteen years by Railway Conductors, Engineers and Expressmen, the most exacting of watch-wearers, has thoroughly demonstrated the strength, steadiness, durability and accuracy of the Waltham Watch. To satisfy that class in all these respects, is to decide the question as to the real value of these time-keepers.

More than 500,000 of these watches are now speaking for themselves in the pockets of the people—a proof and a guarantee of their superiority over all others.

The superior organization and great extent of the Company's Works at Waltham, enables them to produce watches at a price which renders competition futile, and those who buy any other watch merely pay from 25 to 50 per cent. more for their watches than is necessary.

These time-pieces combine every improvement that a long experience has proved of real practical use. Having had the refusal of nearly every invention in watchmaking originating in this country or in Europe, only those were finally adopted which severe testing by the most skillful artisans in our works, and long use on the part of the public, demonstrated to be essential to correct and enduring time-keeping.

Among the many improvements we would particularize:

The invention and use of a centre-pinion of peculiar construction to prevent damage to the train by the breakage of main-springs, is original with the American Watch Company, who, having had the refusal of all other contrivances, adopted Fogg's patent pinion as being the best and faultless.

Hardened and tempered hair-springs, now universally admitted by watchmakers to be the best, are used in all grades of Waltham Watches.

All Waltham Watches have dust-proof caps, protecting the movement from dust, and lessening the necessity of the frequent cleaning necessary to other watches.

Our new patent stem-winder, or keyless watch, is already a decided success, and a great improvement on any stem-winding watch in the American market, and by far the cheapest watch of its quality now offered to the public. To those living in portions of the United States where watchmakers do not abound, watches with the above mentioned improvements which tend to insure accuracy, cleanliness, durability and convenience, must prove invaluable.

The trademarks of the various styles made by the Company are as follows:

AMERICAN WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.
AMN. WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.
AMERICAN WATCH CO., Crescent St., Waltham, Mass.

AMERICAN WATCH CO., Adams St., Waltham, Mass.
WALTHAM WATCH CO., Waltham, Mass.
P. S. BARTLETT, Waltham, Mass.
WM. ELLERY, Waltham, Mass.

Examine the spelling of these names carefully before buying. Any variation even of a single letter, indicates a counterfeit.

For sale by all leading jewelers. No watches retailed by the Company.

A GREAT MEDICAL DISCOVERY

MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

They are not a vile FANCY DRINK. Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing, also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effect.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.

Victoria and the Populace.

A London correspondent of the World, describing how Queen Victoria proceeded to Westminister Palace to open Parliament, says:

"The weather this morning was lovely. For the second time in seven weeks the sun shone brilliantly, the clouds fled away and the heavens were serene. The crowds assembled to witness the grand show afforded by the royal procession were immense in number. Her Majesty arrived at Buckingham Palace from Windsor at eleven o'clock. Then she robed, and at 1:40 p. m. she entered an open carriage drawn by eight horses, preceded and followed by a mounted guard of honor, and by other state carriages, many of them more gorgeous than her own. The cortege proceeded through the mall of St. James's Park, passing from the Horse Guards into Parliament street, and thence to the House of Lords. All along this extended route the people were densely gathered, but a cordon of police, four deep, kept them back from too near approach to her Majesty. I took my own stati immediately in front of the Horse Guards, and when her Majesty emerged from the gate and came in view of the great crowd which filled the whole of Whitehall and Parliament streets, a remarkable and almost unprecedented scene occurred. A feeble cheer was raised, and a few hats waved in the air, and I am quite certain that these demonstrations were made almost altogether by Germans and other foreign spectators. But as the cheer died away, which it did almost as soon as it had been uttered, from thousands of lips came forth a loud and unmistakable hiss. I was quite close to her Majesty, and as the sound fell upon her ears, she ceased for a moment to continue the bows with which she had acknowledged the cheers; she drew herself up in the carriage, and I fancied that her color changed. In another moment she was out of sight."

LIVING BEYOND THEIR MEANS.—Bulwer says poverty is only an idea in nine cases out of ten. Some men with $10,000 a year suffer more for want of means than others with $500. The reason is, the richer man has artificial wants. His income is $10,000 a year, and he suffers enough for being dunned for unpaid debts to kill a sensitive man. A man who earns a dollar a day and does not go in debt, is the happiest of the two. Very few people who have never been rich will believe this; but it is true. There are thousands and thousands with princely incomes who never know a minute's peace, because they live beyond their means. There is really more happiness among the workingmen in the world than among those who are called rich.

ONE Owen Murphy has immortalized himself by selling coal for nine dollars, while other New York dealers charge fourteen a ton.

A Specimen of Homer in Blank Verse

ILLIAD, xxii: 437-515.

She, weeping, spake,—but Hector's wife as yet
Knew not the truth. No messenger had come
To explain her husband's stay outside the walls
But in the hall's recess she wove a web
With the cloth's texture brilliant flowers.
Her fair-haired maids throughout the house she bade
Place by the fire a cauldron huge to bathe
Hector's tired limbs,—when from the fight he came.
Foolish! who knew not then that far from baths
Pallas had slain him by Achilles' hands.
But when she heard the wailing from the tower;
Her limbs all shook,—she let her shuttle fall,
And thus addressed her fair-haired maids again:
"Come hither, follow, two of you with me;
I fain would see what deeds have here been wrought.
I heard my mother's words, and then my heart
Leaps to my mouth,—my knees with fear grow numb;
Some evil sure o'er Priam's sons impende.
Would that my ear might miss her speech, for now
I greatly fear that Peleus' son pursues
Brave Hector from the city towards the plain,
And makes an end of all that prowess sad
By which he dwelt not with the common herd,
But far out-ran them—like in might to none."
Thus saying, through the hall she rushed insane
With throbbing heart,—her handmaids with her went,
And when she reached the tower and throng of men,
With timorous glance she stood upon the wall
And saw her Hector dragged before the town
By reckless steeds swift to the Achaian ships.
Then gloomy night enveloped both her eyes,
Backward she fell and breathed out all her soul;
Far from her head she cast the shining ties,
The wreath, the head-dress with the woven net,
And vail which golden Aphrodite gave
The date when crested Hector wedded her,
Eetion's child, and countless gifts bestowed.
A train of sisters stand around to tend
Andromache brought nigh to death by fear.
But when her breath returned and sense came back,
With bursting sobs the matrons she addressed:
"Ah me, O Hector! So one fate we had.
We two—thou here in Priam's house in Troy
And I in Thebes,—neath Placos rich in woods
Within Eetion's walls who nurtured me,
Ill-fated daughter of a wretched sire.
Would that he never had begotten me!
But now thou goest underneath the earth
To Hades' realms and me bereft dost leave
To hateful sorrow in thy father's house.
Astyanax as yet is but a babe,
Whom thou and I of evil fate brought forth.
No profit, Hector, wilt thou be to him,
Nor he to thee; for should he now escape
This cruel Achaian war, still toil and woes
Hereafter shall be his, and other men
Shall rob him of his fields. The day that makes
The boy an orphan steals his friends away.
His head hangs down; his cheeks are wet with grief;
His father's comrades he in need accosts
Plucking the cloak of one,—the other's coat,
And one in pity offers him a cup
Which wets his lips but never slakes his thirst.
Some happier man shall thrust him from the meal
Smitten with blows, reviled with cutting words:
'Begone! Not e'en thy father feasts with us.'
Then to his mother, full of tears, returns
Astyanax, who once on Hector's knees
Ate marrow only and the fat of sheep;
And when sleep seized him and he ceased from play
Slept sound on couches in his nurse's arms,
On softest beds, filled in his heart with joy.
But now, bereft of thee, he suffers woes,—
Astyanax, so named, since thou alone
Didst Priam's city's gates and walls defend.

Far from thy parents, by the beaked ships,
Thee crawling worms shall eat, when dogs
Have had their fill. Naked thou art, although Robes, fine and graceful, in thy palace lie,
Which, wrought by woman's hands, I will consume
With blazing fire,—no profit now to thee,
Since thou shalt never lie on them,—but they Shall honor thee before the Trojan folk."

She weeping spake—the matrons with her mourned.

THE WORTH OF A WORN-OUT CLOAK.

BY FRANCES LEE.

Mabel stamped her foot and talked out of one corner of her mouth.

"Mother, don't ask me to wear that old dud again. I can't do it if you do. You stay here at home, and you don't know; but not one of the girls in my school would be seen in it. It has been cut over and made over and turned over till Julia Forbush told me she felt like shaking hands with it, it looked so like an old friend. O, mother! if you only knew how I felt, you wouldn't ask me to wear it!"

Mabel's pretty pink cheeks flamed up into angry crimson, and her shoulders looked stiff as a pillar of salt.

But Mrs. Merriweather laughed lightly.

"What a goose you are, Mabel!" said she, looking up from the ruffles she was binding. "Why don't you go to your father?"

"O mother dear! may I tell father you think I need a new cloak?" cried Mabel, changing as though a fairy had touched her with a wand. (It could not have been the work of a good angel.) "Or you tell him yourself. He will be more apt to mind about what you say, mother!"

So it was decided, and before the week was over Mabel had her new cloak, and went off to school in it, wrapped up and radiant as a moss-rose bud.

The next day Bridget appeared at the door of the sewing-room.

"If you please, mem," said she, "there's one of these high-talking old countrymen out here, and it bees hard to send him off without he has seen yourself. It is illegant vases and the like of that he is after selling, and anything comes handy to him that ye'll be ridding yourself of."

"The house is full of vases now, Bridget. I don't want anything of him, tell him so," replied Mrs. Merriweather.

"Wouldn't ye best take a look?" she asked. "A look is chape; and I'm thinking it is from across the say they came. Indade they is splendid, jist."

"O yes, I will look, Bridget. There is no harm in that," said Mrs. Merriweather, good-naturedly, putting down her work and going to the porch, where the handsome young Italian stood with his basket before him.

She saw at the first glance that Bridget was right; the vases were 'illegant' indeed, delicate as spring flowers, and graceful as frost-work. Mrs. Merriweather looked at one and another with real admiration.

"How much?" she asked at last, touching a crystal cup made of interlacing fern leaves.

"Ten dollars to you, my lady. So cheap," said the Italian, with a shrug.

"Ten dollars!" echoed Mrs. Merriweather, shaking her head and turning away.

"Wait, my lady—wait!" cried the vender, eagerly.

"No money I wants! Anyt'ing else; old coat, old dress, old cloak, old anyt'ing!"

Mrs. Merriweather stopped, irresolutely.

"I have nothing to sell worth ten dollars," said she.

Just then her eyes fell on Mabel's old school cloak hanging on the hat-tree in the hall, and the watchful Italian's eyes following hers, read out her hesitating thought.

"Nine dollars for that I give. Only one dollar for the vase, my lady," said he, in a fawning tone, holding it up in the clear sunlight, pure and glittering as though cut from the morning dew.

Mrs. Merriweather looked at the vase. How exquisite! Then she took down the cloak and looked at that. She had no idea it was so rusty. No wonder Mabel had been ashamed to wear it. Nine dollars! It was hardly worth half that.

"Only one dollar!" repeated the vase merchant, looking sharply at her face. "And I make myself the honor to add this for my lady," said he, taking up a little parian rabbit.

For a moment Mrs. Merriweather stood irresolute, glancing from the vase to the cloak and back to the vase again. Then her countenance cleared and settled itself.

"No, not to-day," said she, turning decidedly away. (She had been touched perhaps by the good angel.)

"It is the loss of my lady," answered the Italian, graciously enough. But his dark face grew darker still, and he went muttering away.

Mrs. Merriweather went back to her sewing, and straightway forgot both vase and cloak, until a day or two after she met a young lady on the street.

"O, Miss Anthony!" said she, holding out both hands, "Do any of your poor people need a cloak?"

Miss Anthony looked up with astonishment in her mild black eyes. She was accustomed to Mrs. Merriweather's abrupt, abstracted ways, but this question was so timely as well as unexpected!

"Because," pursued Mrs. Merriweather, "my Mabel has left off a cloak that is quite too good to throw away. I was within a dot of disposing of it to one of these traveling pack men for a vase, and then it occurred to me it was wicked to give for a bauble what somebody might be suffering for the want of."

"Somebody is," said Miss Anthony. "One of my Sabbath school scholars is staying at home because she has nothing warm enough to wear. So one of the girls told me. I have been ill and not able to go and see her. But I am going to-morrow, and I have been asking the Lord all the week to direct me to a cloak to carry her. I did not think it would come to me by the way, as the meat did to Elijah," continued the teacher, her eyes filling now with tears.

The same evening she went for the cloak. She sat a few minutes waiting in the parlor. It was a long, beautiful room, rich in pictures and flowers and quaint rare ornaments. In one corner, on a small velvet chair, sat a Paris doll with an open parasol and a handkerchief embroidered with her name in one hand, and a curly little spaniel under the other arm. This doll, which belonged to Mabel's youngest sister, had a stylish hat on the top of her chatelaine braids, she wore kid gloves, a gold watch and chain, and was dressed in a silk walking dress trimmed with flounces and real lace, and costing enough to be a real dress for two or three real children. She could open and shut her eyes; she could say mamma; she could stand, and even walk, on her bronze boots and silk stockings. She had a Saratoga trunk and a wardrobe full of still more costly dresses, with gloves and boots for every dress, and the loveliest little toilet case and perfumery set, and I don't know what all besides.

Mrs. Merriweather was dressing for a party, but presently sent down the cloak, and Miss Anthony went away, her eyes still dazzled by the bewildering charms of this French Victoire, and so came to the dingy tenement house where her poor scholar, Jane Pulsifer, lived.

There were three bells, one above another, but neither would ring.

"Can you tell me how I can find Mrs. Pulsifer's room?" she asked of a little girl who came out of the door with a shawl over her head and a pitcher in her hand.

The child turned about with shy pleasure and ran eagerly before through the unlighted hall and up the steep stairway into utter darkness. At last she opened a door at the end of the passage, and the smell of something frying came out along with the light and the sound of voices.

Miss Anthony stepped forward, and saw a low, square room, that seemed at first sight to be filled with children and a cook-stove.

"I came to see Jane Pulsifer," said she, "I am her Sabbath-school teacher."

Instantly a glow of gratified delight shone on every face; and the bright tin teakettle on the stove, as though it joined in the general gladness, broke into singing.

"Jane's teacher, granny!" shouted the little girl with the pitcher, close in the ear of an old woman who sat close beside the stove with a high-crowned cap with black strings on her head.

"Jane's teacher. I hope I see you well to-day. I am some thick of hearing, and you will have to speak up," said granny, coming forward with prime politeness. "You must excuse my ev'ryd'y dress. I would a' fixed up if I had known folks was coming," she added, smoothing the folds of her calico cape, and straightening herself with some lingering trace of the youth and beauty so long past and gone. "My daughter is gone out this afternoon making a few calls. She will be sorry to miss seeing you, but she had done some business that must be looked after. Where there is no man in a family there's more comes upon the women folks, you know, continued granny, drawing up her mouth genteelly.

"Ma sells egg beaters and needles and fancy soap, and to-day is her day for delivering them," put in one of the children.

"And where is Jane?" asked Miss Anthony, taking the youngest next to the baby on her lap.

The children had been standing by her, touching her curls and stroking her dress with admiring awe; but now she looked up in the lady's face with a sudden conflicting smile.

"Jane's gone way off up s'op. Do you want to see my dolly?" said she.

Then she slipped down, and running to the drawer of an old pine table she brought out a small china doll without hands or feet, that had been dressed in crimson and black broadcloth for a pen wiper, and used until it was faded and inky and forlorn. But little Grace held it close to her heart and kissed its broken nose with motherly love.

"Grace, she thinks everything of her dolly. A lady gave it to her that came here with books, and she won't never go to sleep without she has the dolly in her hand," said the elder sister, with a matronly smile.

Miss Anthony looked about the plain, poor room. It was clean and tolerably comfortable. A clock ticked on the high wooden mantel, and a pot of geranium stood in the sunshine on the window stool. The grandmother sat in a wheezy wooden rocking chair, and the baby—a sickly little boy who would never walk—sat in another playing with an empty bottle and a broken spoon. The children were not ragged or poorly fed, and an open door showed two neatly made beds covered with patchwork quilts in an inner chamber. But Miss Anthony, fresh from Mrs. Merriweather's elegant parlor, could not help thinking that everything in both rooms would not sell for enough to buy the doll Victoire and her wardrobe.

She sat awhile, listening to the grandmother and making friends with the children, until presently Jane came in—a fragile, bright-faced girl, dressed in a threadbare water-proof.

Mabel Merriweather, you should have seen her eyes sparkle when they fell on your "old dud" of a cloak! The poor always ye have with you; but not always poor so deserving and poor so grateful.

The next Sabbath Jane Pulsifer was in her place in the class, and through all the winter weather she did not miss a single day.

That winter the Lord came into His garden. A solemn hush rested over the great school room, and in the silence many and many a heart heard the still small voice and listened to it. Among them was Jane Pulsifer, and upon the next May day she came forward to join herself publicly to Christ's people.

So it was that by the blessing of Him, who is Almighty, an old cast off garment became to one soul as the key to the Kingdom of Heaven.—Church Union.

OUR LANDED SITUATION.

From the Cincinnati Times.

Yesterday we inconsiderately put the quantity of lands disposed of by the Government in the States at 1,000,000,000 acres, while the quantity in farms owned by the cultivators was less than 200,000,000 acres. The figures as to farms are correct. As to the quantity owned by individuals not farmers we find, from the Agricultural Reports, that up to June, 1868, 408,195,123 acres, exclusive of railway grrnts, had been disposed of by the General Government.

Though this includes swamp swindles and school lands, yet it is fair to presume that nearly all has passed into private ownership. The amount disposed of up to this time and now owned by individuals in the public land States is at least 450,000,000 acres. To this must be added the area of the old States, all of which, except the worthless lands, is owned by individuals. The old States, including Tennessee and Kentucky, contain 285,000,000 in whole numbers, of which at least 250,000,000 are profitable either for agriculture, mining or timber. This, added to the quantity disposed of in the younger States and Territories, gives 700,000,000 of acres. To this must be added what has been disposed of by Texas, as her land was not ceded to the United States, and the land office takes no notice of her public domain.

It is probable that 20,000,000 of acres have been disposed of in Texas, which should be added to the above aggregate, giving 720,000,000 acres of land in the United States owned by individuals. Our working classes own only 180,000,000 of acres. Deducting this from 720,000,000 we have 540,000,000 acres in the hands of speculators or persons who personally make no use of it. This gives just three acres to the speculator or monopolist for every one acre that system has secured to the working classes! This is bad enough in all conscience. There can be no object in exaggerating the enormity of this operation of our free system of government!

The balance of the public domain to be disposed of, exclusive of Alaska and the railway grants which are perfected and to be perfected inclusive of the Southern Pacific, is 824,458,800 acres. To this add the public lands of Texas, less what she intends to give to the Pacific Railway, we have in whole numbers 945,000,000 acres left. Deduct one-third for mountains and desert lands, and there remain 630,000,000 acres left that might be saved for actual settlers. This is nearly three and a half times as much as is now owned by our people. If saved for settlers only it might serve as a refuge for the landless for some time to come. But if the new soldiers' bill is a speculators' bill, more than half of this remainder will be legally usurped by speculators at a merely nominal price.

All our speculators seem doomed to agony as long as there is a section left. They believe it absurd to suppose that we shall have any poor children or poor grandchildren to whom free land would be a blessing for which to thank Heaven.

The following horrible table of acres of land owned by the working classes of the United States, by private speculators and by corporate monopolies, must be kept before the people:

	Acres.
Owned by working men	180,000,000
Owned by individual speculators	540,000,000
Owned by railway companies	200,000,000
Total owned by speculators	740,000,000
Ratio of acres to laborers and speculators	1 to 4
Should be owned by laborers and in homesteads	920,000,000
Proportion of wrong to right in our system	4 to 1

Shall the ratio of iniquity be continued? What sense would there be in putting God into the constitution if the Devil is to be supreme everywhere else?

A Bridal Party Astonished.

Yesterday, at 4 p. m., a large congregation assembled at the Columbia Street Presbyterian Church, Newport, to witness a marriage ceremony. The beauty and fashion of Newport, as well as many friends of the bride and groom from Cincinnati and Covington, were present. The beautiful little church was decorated and made as handsome as possible. Day was turned into night by closing the shutters and window-shades and lighting the gas. As the bride and groom appeared in the aisle, the music struck up in sweet tones as the happy couple approached the altar, and all was well. But the ambitious sexton, who was anxious at this opportune moment to do his part faithfully in making the affair more brilliant, hastened to turn on, with a sudden whereas, the superincumbent pressure of gas. But alas! he turned the wrong way, and left his audience in darkness in a twinkle. Just at this juncture, a gentleman who stood near the window to the right of the pulpit (which, by the way, had its shutters open, pulled down the inside blind from the top, just sufficient to let the bright sunlight shine upon the bride. As the sunshine rested upon the bridal party, with the rest of the congregation in gloom, it made the effect magical and beautiful. All united in saying that it was a propitious event—that, although earthly lights should be extinguished, yet the light from above would continue to shine. A host of friends united in this wish to the beautiful bride—that bright sunshine and happiness might ever be her portion.—Cincinnati Chronicle.

The Household.

FRUIT STAINS ON TABLE LINEN.

Fruit stains on table linen are often a a great annoyance to the tidy housekeeper. These are very easily removed if they are attended to at once, but if left a day or two it is more difficult. Stretch the stained spot tightly over a deep bowl or pail, and pour over it boiling hot water, letting it filter through till the stain disappears. The water must be really boiling, not merely scalding. If the article has been thrown into suds before the stains are removed, the hot water will not destroy them. In that case, wet the stain, and while wet spread over the spot some chloride of lime, lay the piece on the grass or hang on the clothes-line, where the sun will strike through, for a few minutes, and then wash and boil immediately. Care and judgment are necessary in the use of the chloride of lime, or it will rot the cloth. There is a preparation of chloride of lime designed for such purposes, which is safer to use, and can be procured at druggists'.

HOUSEHOLD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Wheat flower, one pound is one quart.

Indian meal, one pound two ounces is one quart.

White sugar, powdered, one pound one ounce is one quart.

Eggs, average size, ten are one pound.

Liquid measures—fifteen tablespoonsful are half a pint.

RECIPES.

Breakfast Relish.—Cut round, and not too thick, some mutton cutlets; dip into egg and bread-crumbs, then into chopped mushroons, into the egg and crumbs again, and fry in butter to a light brown. When sent to the table pour over them a little good gravy of either beef or veal.

Hasty Pudding.—Place some milk in a saucepan over the fire. When it boils put in a little salt, and stir in, slowly and smoothly, enough flour to make it a proper consistence. When it has cooked a few minutes, beat in eggs in the proportion of two to a quart of milk. It is very good without eggs, but they make it more palatable. Send to the table hot, and eat with sugar and butter.

To Make Old Kid Gloves New.—Make a thick mucilage, by boiling a handful of flax seed; add a little dissolved soap; then, when the mixture cools, with a piece of white flannel wipe the gloves, previously fitting to the hand; use only enough of the cleaner to take off the dirt, without wetting through the glove.

How to Save Your Shoe Soles.—Melt together tallow and common rosin, in the proportion of two parts of the former to one of the latter, and apply the preparation, hot, to the soles of the boots or shoes—as much of it as the leather will absorb. One farmer declares that this little receipe alone has been worth more than the cost of five years' subscription to the newspaper publishing it.

How to get Rid of Rats and Mice.—A gentleman of large experience, and fully as humane as most of us, says he gets rid of rats by putting potash in their holes and runs. The poor wretches get it on their feet and over their fur, then they lick it, and don't like the taste of it; burns them somewhat, and the more they see of it, the less they like it; so they clear out almost as soon as the application is made. To get rid of mice, the same person uses tartar-emetic, mingled with any favorite food; they take it, take sick, and take their leave.

Apple and Tapioca Pudding.—Put a teacup of tapioca into a pint and a half of cold water over night. Before breakfast next morning set it where it will become quite warm, but not hot enough to cook. After breakfast pare six good-sized sour apples, or eight if not very large; quarter and steam them in a dish until tender. Lay them into the pudding dish, stir a cup and a half of sugar into the soaked tapioca, and a teacup of water and a teaspoon even full of salt, stir together and pour over the apple, slice a lemon very thin and lay over the top, bake slowly three hours; eat with butter, with wine sauce, or hard sauce, as you prefer.

Feeding vs. Selling Grain.

The Montrose (Indiana) Farmers' Club lately discussed the question of feeding grain to stock or taking it to market:

Mr. Jackson—This matter is governed somewhat by circumstances. For several reasons I am inclined to the opinion that feed should be consumed on the farm. By feeding grain on the farm that produces it, we measurably return to the soil that fertility that was used in its production. By selling the products of the soil in the markets, the soil is gradually impoverished, unless the fertility is restored in some other way. I think the surplus grain should be fed only upon the farm, and should recommend a rotation of the crops, to aid in keeping up the fertility of the soil.

Mr. Parker—There is no wisdom in farmers growing grain and turning it over to speculators. Farmers should feed all their surplus over to their own stock. This course will make them more money and enable them to more readily keep up the fertility of the soil.

A 150 pound hog, fed 15 bushels of corn, at 35 cents per bushel, can be made to weigh 300 pounds. We find here, then, 150 pounds of pork, worth $9 at 6 cents, produced for $5.25. Take $5.25, market value of corn, from $9, and we find we have saved $3.75 by having our surplus corn consumed on the farm.

I cannot see why farmers persist in selling their feed at town instead of feeding it out to their own stock at home.

Mr. Brown—Whether one should feed surplus grain to stock at home depends on one's proximity to market, value of land, &c. Those living within four or five miles of a good grain market should sell rather than feed to stock. One very remote from market must, necessarily, feed surplus to animals. The value of land is to be taken into consideration also. It will not pay to raise stock on land worth $150 to $200 per acre. Land remote from market, worth from $30 to $35 per acre, it will pay to raise stock upon. The cheap land is the land for stock raising. The hog fatted on land worth $30 per acre is just as good as if fatted on more valuable land. Formerly, when our prairie lands were cheap, we supplied the markets with cattle. But since they have become too valuable for stock raising, we are driving into our markets thousands upon thousands of beef cattle from the far-off cheap lands of Texas.

THE only resin why the inhabitants of the pine regions in North Carolina don't leave the State in a body is that their business makes them tarry.—New York World.

Blaine and Butler.

The battle between Blaine and Butler promises results of as much interest and importance as the one between Grant and Sumner. The Republican press charges that Grant caused dissension in the party by his war on Sumner, and it is plain that Butler appears for the President in his efforts to drive through the bill for the overthrow of civil government in the Southern States. Grant most ardently desires the passage of the bill, and is bringing every influence and agency at his command to bear upon Congress to carry the measure. Chandler, and Morton, and Nye are applying the party lash in the Senate, and Butler has essayed to use it in the House.

He is acknowledged to be the representative of the President. In the framing of the Ku-Klux bill he consulted the wishes and interests of Grant. The design was to prepare a measure by which the elections in the Southern States could be controlled by Grant. The prospect of the renomination of the latter would be greatly improved by the passage of such a bill, because it would enable him to say he could carry the South for himself, but would not carry it for any other man.

The letter of Butler, assigning his reasons for refusing to serve on the committee of thirteen, is proof that his Ku-Klux bill was simply a device for controlling elections. He says, in fact, that unless it can be made to appear that there is a political vendetta in the South by which the life of every member of the Republican party is placed in danger, the Democrats will carry the next Presidential election.

The Ku-Klux bill assumes the existence of such a state of affairs, and arms the President with such extraordinary powers as accord with the assumption. It invests him with absolute authority, and he could, under its provisions, manage elections as easily as Ames did in Mississippi or Reynolds in Texas. The appointment of an investigating committee to inquire into the alleged outrages in the South upset the calculations of Grant and Butler. An honest and searching investigation is precisely what they do not want. Such an investigation would disclose three facts which would prove very damaging to Jacobin interests. One is, that the accounts of outrages in the South are, many of them, fabrications, and others are greatly exaggerated; another is, that in the majority of instances the blacks and the carpet-baggers are the aggressors; and the third is, that the Confederate leaders, loaded with political disabilities as they are, are the men who do more than all other classes combined to preserve order.

Butler, and Shellabarger, and Maynard are three of as venemous Radicals as can be found in the country. Butler's experience as a tyrant, thief, and villain has given him as sharp a scent for all sorts of rascality as is possessed by the most adroit detective in the country. It is nonsense to say that he could not obtain evidence of Ku-Klux outrages in the South. The refusal of these men to serve on the committee is an acknowledgment that they do not believe they can obtain any evidence which will serve as a decent pretence for a bill as infamous as the one which Grant and Butler are now pressing. There is now an open breach between the Radicals and the Conservative Republicans in the House. The former are ranged under Butler, and the latter under Blaine. There is good reason to believe that no measure can be carried in the present Congress on the ground that it is an Administration measure. The quarrel is too bitter and has gone too far to leave any ground for supposing that the parties to it can again work together in harmony. It is not a mere question of personalities between Blaine and Butler. The latter is no longer leader of the House, and his relations with Grant do not promise him any support. The appointment of the committee of thirteen was a defiance of Grant as well as of Butler.—Chicago Times.

President Grant Delighted at the New Military Empire.

The Minister of the new German Empire had an interview with President Grant the other day to announce that the King of Prussia had become Emperor of Germany, and to present a letter from the new Emperor. To the speech which he made on that occasion the President replied in the following sentences, which we copy from the Washington Chronicle, a semi-official paper:

"BARON GEROLT: The notification which you have conveyed to me relates to an event of great historical importance. The States of this Union, which severally bear a relation to the others similar to that which Prussia bears to the other States of Germany, have recently made such sacrifices and efforts toward maintaining the integrity of their common country for general purposes in peace and war that they cannot fail to sympathize in similar proceedings for a like object elsewhere. The new title which has been accepted by your sovereign may be regarded as the symbol and the fulfillment on its part by Germany of that high purpose. The disposition which you express in behalf of the Emperor of United Germany to maintain unimpaired its friendly relations with the Government and people of the United States is heartily reciprocated."

This is a strange specimen of Presidential composition. It beats even Gen. Taylor's celebrated phrase of "all the world and the rest of mankind." The President says that "the States of this Union severally bear a relation to the others similar to that which Prussia bears to the other States of Germany." What in the world did he mean by this incoherent and confusing phraseology?

All that can be distinctly made out from it all is that since Germany has been made a great military empire, and has a military Emperor at its head, it is much more admired by President Grant than it was before. Also, he thinks that this country is like the German Empire, except that we have not got an Emperor. Very likely, if we had such a "symbol and such a fulfillment on our part of our high purpose," Gen. Grant would admire the United States more than ever, and be more than ever convinced that our institutions and those of Germany are in all essential particulars identical.—N. Y. Sun.

BOTH in the Senate and House, at Washington, the Democratic members have preserved a discreet neutrality and silence in the quarrels which have been going on among the Republicans.

It will not do, however, to assume that they have been indifferent spectators, or have regarded the contest as the old lady did the one between her husband and the bear. Outside of the results of the dissensions on party interests, there have been questions of national concern and elements of decency and indecency involved which could not fail to awaken interest in those who have been on the ground.

There is little about the history of Sumner commending him to Democratic sympathy, but on this San Domingo question he has opposed a corrupt scheme, and has been assailed by the lowest and worst men in the Senate. The demagogues and corruptionists of that body, acting under orders from Grant, have attempted to worry and trample upon the Massachusetts Senator, and he has met them with a pluck and manliness which good men of all parties must respect.

In the contest between Blaine and Butler, we have a despicable scoundrel, acting as agent for the President, assailing a gentleman and honest man. The Democrats are not disposed to be melancholy because the Republican leaders are cuffing each other soundly; but it is impossible not to wish that in these quarrels in one of the worst political parties which ever existed, the vilest characters may come off second best in the battle.

Making War in San Domingo.

The telegram from the San Domingo Commission, which was published yesterday by all the journals of the Associated Press, contains the following statement:

"Before the Commission left Hayti, Luperon, who is one of Cabral's generals, made a hostile demonstration against Monte Christi; but the crew of the United States man-of-war Congress checked the demonstration."

Here we have the naval forces of the United States actually taking part, with arms in their hands, in the civil war which has so long been raging in San Domingo? By what right was this act of warfare performed? What law of Congress has empowered the President to make war in San Domingo?

The Constitution provides (Sec. 8, Art. I.) that Congress "shall have power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water." The President has no such power. In Art. II., Sec. 2, of the Constitution, it is provided that he shall be "Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States." Where, in these provisions of the fundamental law, does Gen. Grant obtain any authority to order the crew of a United States man-of-war to check by force of arms any military movement of either of the belligerents in San Domingo?

This act of the President is a clear and flagrant violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of his oath of office. Is it not the duty of the House of Representatives at once to impeach him and bring him to trial for this high crime and misdemeanor?—New York Sun.

MR. GRANT is in want of some person to accept the situation of Minister to Brazil, lately abandoned in disgust by a breezy citizen by the name of Blow. Mr. Orth, of Indiana, Mr. Loan, of Missouri, and Mr. McClurg, of the same State, have all successively declined the honor. The situation is a respectable one, but the person who must be served by the incumbent is not a master whose service is accepted by the same alacrity and zeal that were formerly exhibited by Radical place-hunters.

VERY interesting discoveries have been made by the German exploring expedition to Greenland. Extensive meadows were found starred with flowers, with butterflies and bees playing about them, and having large herds grazing near by of reindeer and musk-oxen.

NO plant yields so great an amount of nutriment for the same extent of soil as the banana. Humboldt estimated that it returns twenty times as much as corn, forty-four times as much as the potato, and one hundred and thirty-three times as much as wheat.

IT is said that when a piece of new muslin is torn in the dark a line of light is observable along the torn edges. It is not known whether this arises from electricity or phosphoresence; but it seems to depend upon the dressing of the cloth, since, after being washed, the phenomenon does not manifest itself. A piece of stout, twilled new cotton is said to furnish the best subject of experiment.

CAPTAIN C. F. HALL is busily engaged in fitting out his vessel for his next summer's cruise, and he will be amply provided with everything necessary for his comfort and the success of his enterprise. It is understood that Dr. David Walker, the well known companion of Sir Leopold M'Clintock during his expedition on the Fox in search of Sir John Franklin, will accompany Captain Hall, in charge of the scientific department.

BISMUTH has been discovered in Archer county, Texas, by means of the investigations institutad by the General Land Office. The bismuth ore is associated with copper glance, but in separate veins. The metal is disseminated in small grains through quartz, and a heat of 500° Fahrenheit is necessary to fuse the bismuth, which is collected as it runs from the furnace. Bismuth is of silver brightness, with a roseate tinge, and is used in small proportions as one of the components of Britannia ware. This mineral is reported to be abundant in Missouri.

PROFESSOR LISTING, of Gottengen, in an article on certain optical phenomena, explains why birds are so often found dead under telegraph wires. It is not, as is popularly believed, that they were killed by a passing current while perched on the wires, but because their eyes, being in the same horizontal plane, they cannot calculate their distance from the wires, and are consequently killed by flying against them. It is to this same fact—the horizontal plane—that the difficulty of distinguishing the edges of the steps occurs while going down stairs, and of clearly calculating the distance from one to another.

The Northern Pacific Railroad.

BY SCHUYLER COLFAX, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

From the New York Independent.

Midway across the continent—at the head of twelve hundred miles of Lake navigation—a thousand miles from Buffalo, the western terminus of the Erie Canal, and as near to it by water as Chicago—a hundred miles west of the longitude of St. Louis or Galena—is the young city of Duluth, the initial point of the Northern Pacific Railroad. That great work, so magnificently endowed by the Government, is already being pushed rapidly westward, under its energetic controllers; and before the snow flies next Fall, it will be completed to the western line of Minnesota, where it crosses the Red River of the North—which runs northward to Lake Winnipeg—and one-eighth of its distance to the Pacific Ocean will have been accomplished. Commencing, too, this season on its western line, the work will be prosecuted from both directions, and long before the nation celebrates its Centennial Anniversary of Independence, the Lakes will be united by iron bands with the Mediterranean of our Northwest, Puget Sound.

Of the auspicious influence of this enterprise, which but a few years ago would have been considered so daring, the most sanguine of its friends have scarcely yet a full realization. Even taking Chicago as a starting point, it will be (via St. Paul, where an arm of the Northern Pacific Railroad is reached) two hunered miles less to Puget Sound than to San Francisco. Besides this, vessels from the Golden Gate to China sail on what is called the grand circle, instead of in a straight line; and anyone testing this by a string on a globe will be surprised at the result, if they have not previously studied the effect of the rotundity of the earth, and its diminished protuberance as you go northward towards the Pole. Hence, when they have sailed eight hundred miles from San Franciaco they are only one hundred miles from the entrance to Puget Sound; and this striking fact shows the advantages this route will have in commanding the through traffic of Asia with our Atlantic States, or that portion of it which will pass over the soil of this nation on its road to Europe.

Nor is this all. Development is the great duty of the Republic, after all its recent trials. Resources are the gift of the Creator. Developing them depends on the work of man. Along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, as it follows up the water courses, the Missouri and the Yellowstone on this side, and descends by the valley of the Columbia on the other, a vast body of agricultural land is waiting for the plough, with a climate almost exactly the same as that of New York, except that, with less snow, cattle, in the larger portion of it, can subsist on the open range in winter. Here, if climate and fertility of soil produce their natural result, when railroad facilities open this now isolated region to settlement, will soon be seen waving grain-fields, and happy homes, and growing towns; while ultimately a cordon of prosperous States, teeming with population, and rich in industry and consequent wealth, will occupy that now undeveloped and almost inaccessible portion of our continental area.

But this road is fortunate also in its pathway across the two ranges of mountains which tested so severely the Pacific Railroads built on the central line, and the overcoming of which reflected such well-deserved honor on their energetic builders. At the Deer Lodge Pass, in Montana, where it crosses the Rocky Mountains, its altitude above the sea is 3,500 feet less than the Union Pacific Railroad at Sherman, which is said to be the highest point at which a locomotive can be found in the world. And on the Pacific side of the continent it is even more fortunate. From Arizona up to the Arctic Circle the Columbia is the only river which has torn its way through that mighty range, the Andes of North America, which in California is known as the Sierras, but which in Oregon changes its name to the Cascades. Nature has thus provided a pathway for the Northern Pacific Road through these mountains, the scaling of which, on the other line, at an elevation of over seven thousand feet (a most wonderful triumph of engineering), cost the Central Pacific Company millions of dollars, and compelled them, for seventy miles, to maintain a grade of over one hundred feet to the mile—twice the maximum of the Northern Pacific at the most difficult point in its entire route.

It is fortunate, also, in its terminus on the Pacific coast. No one who has not been there can realize the beauty of Puget Sound and its surroundings. One hundred miles long, but so full of inlets and straits that its navigable shore line measures seventeen hundred and sixty miles, dotted with lovely islets, with gigantic trees almost to the water's edge, with safe anchorage everywhere, and stretching southward, without shoals or bars, from the Straits of Fuca to the capital and center of Washington Territory, it will be a magnificent entrepot for the commerce of the grandest ocean of the world, the Pacific. * * * The Land Grant of the United States, exceeding Fifty Millions of acres in the winter-wheat region of our nation (ten times as large as the area of Massachusetts), is doubtless sufficient for the completion of the road; but, besides this, millions of private means are already invested in it. The bonds based on the Land Grant, and a mortgage on the road itself in addition, are being sold as rapidly as the money is needed; and, as an investment, yielding about eight per cent. per year in currency, rank already with the best class of rail road securities. And thus the good work will go on with unchecked step to its final consummation, carrying the blessings of settlement, development, civilization, and christianity with it in its progress, and literally causing the wilderness to blossom as the rose.

A VARNISH recommended as well adapted for lacquering pictures and engravings, as well as for preserving dried plants and flowers, is prepared by pounding up ten-ounces of gum sandarac, four ounces of mastic, and half an ounce of camphor, and adding three quarts of strong alcohol. The mass is to be frequently shaken up, and finally placed in a warm situation until it settles. Plants coated with this varnish will, it is said, be protected from destruction by insects, and will retain their colors fresh and unchanged. The varnish does not peel off, and, therefore, can be applied very thin.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN IND....MARCH 23, 1871

WESTON, the pedestrain, is pretty good at walking, but Weston, the newly elected Governor of New Hampshire, is the boy to run.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, the leader of the Republican party, proclaims through the National Standard that "the thirty-three Republicans who last week removed Mr. SUMNER from his post elected a Democratic President for 1872."

THE repeal of the salt, coal, tea and coffee duty, by a majority of ninty-nine in the house, is significant of progress. Next to coal, iron, steel, wool, and a few score other monopolies, salt was the most outrageously unjust of all the numorous impositions of the present tariff.

AGAIN we are assured that the payment of the public debt is to be made a prominent tenet in the Radical faith. If the wasting of three hundred millions of dollars anually with nothing to show for it, is reducing the public debt, then the Radical party is already a success.

THERE are two William Williams in Congress, both clever gentlemen, who get their whisky bills awfully mixed up. They agreed to divide them even, each paying half, until the Democratic Williams found that the Republican Williams drank twice to his once, when he broke the contract to save being ruined. Billy rises to explain, by ordering it down for the house.

THE State tax for 1871 and 1872, will be ten cents less on the $100 valuation than in 1869 and 1871, and ten cents less on the Sinking Fund, the latter tax being repealed, making a total reduction of 20 cents on the $100 valuation on the State duplicate. So much for the "worst legislature than ever convened in this or any other State," according to some of our Radical exchanges.

Not Much.

The Waterloo Press Says. Mr. Britton. seems to forget that very many of his own party friends unite with Republicans in saying that our present Legislature "is hte worst that ever met in this or any other State." and that it would have been a god-send to the people if it had never met at all. This is the Radical view of the thing now that they have been defeated in their nefarious schemes plunder and robbery. It is characterized as the worst because it has accomplished more in the way of retrenchment, than has been attempted by the Republicans for the last ten years. The only reason why it is so denominated, as above asserted, is because of the action of the Radicals in resigning to break a quorum thereby defeating the various means which would have been passed for the relief and benfit of the tax-payer.

The Disgusted Constituent.

An unsophisticated Michigander recently visited the Legislature of his State for the purpose of "lobbying" a little, but the members of that body did not "rush into his fond embrace" to suit his views of the importance of the servant, so he addressed the following letter to the Representative from his county:

DEAR SUR—I was at Lansing for so much as 10 dase, tryin to git a chansce to speak to you about that county rode. But I diden't git no chansce at all. Seems to me you got wonderfully stuck upt sence you got elected to the legislature, and can't see a Common man. You doan't git no moar vote from me. You can sit that down on the squair. Youre now as ded as a dore nale.

Chicago and Baltimore to be Connected by Railway.

WHEELING, March 11, 1871.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Baltimore interests have inflexibly resolved upon such Western communications as will place their city on a basis of equality with its rivals. To accomplish this end, two routes, essentially the same—one known as the Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Chicago, and the other Wheeling and Toledo, have become incorporated and organized. Both these routes, after crossing the Ohio river, traverse a country through the States of Ohio and Indiana which has hitherto been only partially favored with railway facilities; but which, nevertheless, constitues the best grain and stock-producing belt of those great States. Either of these routes, it is now settled, will touch the flourishing towns of Wooster and Ashland, Ohio—towns located upon the very "back-bone" of agricultural wealth, and which draw to their several markets and amount of farm products ample to subsist nearly "empires" of the population of those of France and Prussia.

The importance of direct railway connections between these cities (Chicago and Baltimore) was illustrated in a speech made by Mr. John W. Garrett, of Baltimore, before the Chicago Board of Trade, several months since. In that speech he demonstrated, as your readers will remember, that the construction of the enterprise mentioned would place Chicago at least 200 miles nearer tide-water than she can now reach the ocean by any existing line.

The portion of the route to be constructed traverses a country admirably adapted to railway construction—without mountain or other natural obstructions, and embraces, also, the richest, but most neglected belt between the great interior and Atlantic cities.

While your wide-awake people are looking so intently to their interests connected with the other ocean, would it not be well to guard with vigilance those Eastern connections that have contributed so largely to establish Chicago as almost the chief commercial city of the continent.

All of which is respectfully submitted. F. S.

A DEMOCRATIC VICTORY!!

"Let Us Have Peace."

New Hampshire Wheels Into Line

THE COLORED TROOPS FOUGHT NOBLY.

A DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT IN 1872.

For all purposes, the result in New Hampshire is enough to make all patriotic hearts rejoice. The victory is perhaps as satisfactory as if the vote on Governor had been decisive. There is a majority in both branches of the Legislature—the Senate containing five democrats and four republicans, with three vacancies, and the House one hundred and sixty-four democrats, one hundred sixty-two republicans and four labor reformers, with three towns to hear from These latter have probably elected democrats, and the labor reformers are tolerably sure to vote against any republican candidate.

In consequence of Weston not receiving a majority of all the votes cast, the House of Representatives will dispose of the gubernatorial office, and that body being sufficient*ly* Democratic. Weston will undoubtedly be elected. Now by St. Paul, the work goes bravely on. Let us have peace.

THE total number of immigrants arriving in this country, with intent to remain, during the year ending December 31, 1870, is reported from the Department of State as 280,278, whereof Great Britain furnished 145,384, or over half, the Irish immigration not being reported seperately; Germany; 83,546 less than one-third; Sweden and Norway, 14,133; China comes fourth, sending us 11,553. Canada sends but 249, which contradicts the current belief of a larger influx into the States from the effete Dominion. New York first received 224,688; Massachusetts, 24,217; California, 12,748; (these being the Chinese no doubt); and Maryland three-fourths of all the rest—a tendency of immigration that has not heretofore been generally known.

A POLITICAL THIEF.

Myers of the Kendallville Standard, not contented with using the usual surplus of Radical billingsgate and vituperation with which his journal always teems, has the audacity to steal our "livery," gotten up for the sole purpose of illustrating the concentrated meanness of Radical State legislators, and this double-shotted cartridge of ours he rams home into his swarthy blunderbuss, and then blazes it at the editor of the Ligonier Banner, conveying the false idea that the charge was originally intended for that very purpose. He knew very well who the "cabbage heads" were, and that from Moxa Morton up to the veriest woolly headed Radical of the Indiana Legislature, the whole corrupt pack are but a set of rotten political trash, and have become a stench in the nostrils of a large majority of the people of the State. When another fit or inkling, to illustrate Radical principles and tactics, gets possession of C. O.'s Radically corrupted brain, and nothing will satiate but to steal, as the party is wont, we'll send a package of that substance called "nitroglycerine," and blow his highly scented "stub-and-twist" to the——, if he undertakes to use ammunition to the injury of Democracy.—Elkhart Union

Failure of Alexander, the Great Stock Raiser.

The Prairie Farmer is informed that John I. Alexander, the king of live stock men in the United States, has made an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors. His liabilities are stated at $1,00,000, while his assets foot up from $1,000,000 to $200,000 more than that. Mr. Alexander's residence is in Morgan county. Illinois, where he owns an immense stock farm. Two or three years since Mr. Alexander bought the celebrated Sullivant farm, known as "Broadlands," in Douglas county, containing 27,000 acres. It was reported a short time since that, he had sold "Broadlands" for $600,000, but from some cause the sale was not consumated. This is probably the heaviest failure of any agricultural man yet recorded in the history of the United States.

Grain and Fruit Prospects.

Seldom has the snow of winter left the wheat in finer conditon and with better promise an abundant harvest than is the case now. The fears of injurious effects from the mass of ice which has covered the ground are quite dispelled, and though march often proves to be a hard month for the wheat, yet, as the frost is well nigh all out of the ground, there is good reason to hope it may pass the trials of the spring season unscathed. As for the hazzards of the latter season, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." In respect to fruit, we hear of no serious damage done to the buds in this section, and so far as we can learn the prospect for fruit the coming season are good.

THE three Senators the most urgent to do the Presidential bidding in the degradation of Mr. Sumner, were Cameron, Morton, and Sherman. It is proper to remark that if any well-informed man were called upon to name the three most corrupt men in the United States Senate, his first would be Cameron, his second Morton, and his third Sherman. The difference between them is in kind, rather than degree. The terms of Morton and Sherman expire with the present Congress, and it is some satisfaction to know that Mr. Sumner will be in a condition to preach their political funeral sermons from the seat he now occupies and honors.

DYING.—There is a dignity about that going away along, which we call dying—that wrapping of the mantle of immoratality about us; that putting aside with a pale hand the azure curtains that are drawn around this cradle of a world; that venturing away from home for the first time in our lives, for we are dead, and seeing foreign countries not laid down on any maps we have read about. There must be lovely lands somewhere starward, for none ever return who go thither, and we very much doubt if any would if they could.

OUR schools close one week from Friday next. All the rooms are orderly and apparently doing well. The number in attendance in the upper room is very small; this is to be regretted for if we do not patronize our own school we cannot look for outside patronage.—Some who would have come here, discouraged by the slim attendance have gone to Spencerville and Kendallville. We ought to give more attention to our schools and upbuild them with all our energies.

It would be a gratifying exhibit if we could see a list of proposed buildings to go up this summer; It is not only satisfactory to the resident to know that the town grows but such items attract home seekers and bring an increased population and growing stimulus.

THE IRISH WORLD.—We have received a copy of a new paper of the above name, published in New York. It is a large eight paged journal, and contains 48 columns of reading matter. As an organ of thought it has already acquired even a European reputation; and is recognized by the press of America, of Ireland, and England as standing first of its kind in the United States. As a Vehicle of news, it is, as its name purports, a condensed weekly history of the world—that is, of the Irish world—(and where over the earth are Irishmen not to be found?) The chief editor is the Hon. W. E. Robinson, late member of Congress,—who has so distinguished himself for his persistent opposition to the arrogant pretentions of England at all times and in all places. The Irish World is a marval of cheapness—only $2.50 per year. Three persons, by clubbing together, can have the paper sent to one address for $5 for one year. The editors invite persons to send on for specimen copies, FREE. The St. Patrick's Day number will have a splendid illustration of the Grand Procession, five miles long, march through New York. A thrilling story is to be commenced at about that time. Address—"The IRISH WORLD," 1 Frankford street, New York.

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

OLD PAPERS not mutilated, for sale at this office. 50 cents a hundred.

PERSONAL.—Hon. George Keesler, of Orland, Ind., formerly a prominent physician of this place, is in town on a brief visit.

Josh Billings uttered a great truth when he said: "He who by his buz would rise, must either bust or advertise."

RELIGIOUS.—The funeral sermon of Mr. Penny, lately deceased, will be preached at St. John's Reformed Church, by the Rev. Mr. Sandoe.

WE return our thanks to our enterprising farmer, Christ Sheets, Esq., for a specimen of beautiful apples, called the Monstrous Pipin, which we found most excellent eating.

THE third semi-annual meeting of the editors and publishers of the Tenth and Eleventh Indiana Districts will be held at Goshen on the 2d Friday in April next.

DEATH AT LAST.—Mr. C. Baker's infant son, who was severely scalded a few weeks ago, lingered until last Monday evening when death relieved the little sufferer.

A DANCING master named DaMond has victimized a number of Fort Wayne persons who paid him in advance for lessons in the terpsichorean art. Look out for the rogue He is an expert.

JUST as soon as the weather will permit we hope our city authorities will make a complete overhauling of our sidewalks, some of which are in bad condition, and some of them particularly dangerous on a dark night.

AN exchange says the reason why poultry eat peas and refuse beans has been discovered. They like the peas and don't like the beans! We suppose it was because the hens were modest.

WE invite all clergymen in the county to send us the names of persons united in marriage, date of ceremony; and also, any deaths that may occur, giving name, date and age, brief and to the point. Such notices are published gratis.

A DIFFICULT PROBLEM.—Our talented young friends, who aspire to mathematical honors can now have a chance for the ponderous working of their brain. Question, "if four men build a stone wall in nine days how long will it take five men to build a like wall in six days?". Answers solicited.

Town elections will soon be held, and we hope that a good selection from our best citizens will be made. Politics should not be the main consideration, but the improvement and good of our town, and we'll vote for the man that has this spirit of enterprise about him.

VEGETABLES, FRUIT, &c.—The season of vegetables is rapidly approaching, and even now we have a taste of what we may enjoy in midsummer. Messrs. Baals & Steger, opposite the Aveline House, have opened a depot where all kinks of early vegetables and fruit will always be found in abundance.

SEND US THE NEWS.—We invite correspondence from all parts of DeKalb County Sketch down and send us every important item that comes under your observation.—We want to make THE COURIER a local paper in every sense of the word, and we need the assistance of our friends in the different townships to accomplish it.

CONCERT.—The Sabbath School Concert at the M. E. Church Sabbath evening was was quite an improvement on former attempts, and is rapidly becoming more interesting to the large number who usually attend. We are glad to see this spirit of enthusiasm manifested by all, and trust it will be a productive of much good.

ACCIDENT.—One of our German citizens, by the name of Havernix, got abord the train going North, one evening last week, with a friend, intending to go a mile or two and then jump off. His foolhardiness brought him more than he contemplated. A long deep gash on the head, a bruised arm, and a stiff leg is about all that ails him just now. He did'nt stop to consider how high was dat.

EXCHANGE HOTEL.—For excellent accommodations, moderate charges, and courteous treatment stop at the Main Street Exchange, at Fort Wayne. It is a good house, and deserves you patronge. We stopped at a hotel in Toledo the other day, the St. Charles, and found ordinary accommodations and stiff prices, and we don't think we'll be fooled again in that place. If you want to stop at a good house, go to Fort Wayne, where the prices correspond with the accommodations.

Editorial Convention.

The next regular session of the Editors' and Publishers' Association of the Tenth and Eleventh Districts of Indiana, will be held at Goshen, on Friday, April 14th, 1871. The attendance of every member of the Association is earnestly requested, as business of the utmost importace will be submitted.

MESSRS. C. BEUGNOT & Co., have established a large Stave Factory, at Auburn, and will be ready for operations in a few days. On account of the large body of excellent timber in the vicinity of the above place, we regard it as one of the best points in the State for the manufacture and shipping of staves and headings. We congratulate our neighboring town on their good fortune in securing the location in their midst of such a sterling and reliable firm.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

THE fashion correspondent of a bon ton publication has the following information: Little moustaches, often appearing under the pretty noses of brunettes, are no longer considered a defect, to be mourned over with days and nights of agony, with patent depilatories and tweezers. They are now admired and petted, and termed "fine shading" and other aristocratic nonsense. How charming to make the best of a thing, like the fox with his tail cut off.

THE Jackass who edits the Lafayette Journal, uses all the old worn out phrases that were used towards the democracy during the war. "Copperhead," "traitor," "rebel," &c., occur in every other item in his paper. Northern Indiana editors treat each other with more courtesy than this "loyal" puke of the Journal.—Goshen Democrat.

RAIL ROAD MATTERS.

A deep interest is being taken by the friends of the proposed Baltimore & Ohio Railroad extension, west of us as will be seen from the following proceedings of a meeting held at Syracuse, March 11th, which we take from the Northern Indianian.

On motion Geo. W. Hattle was chosen Chairman, and S. L. Ketring Secretary, Nelson Prentice of Albion, being present, he was selected to address the meeting, which he accordingly did in a speech in which he set forth the advantages of this route to the company, over all other routes proposed for said road, from the fact that it is the only direct route from Pittsburgh to Chicago, and therefore it is as much nearer as it is more direct, and that it would be a route comparatively easily built, and running through one of the most rich agricultural countries in the world, and about midway between the Michigan Southern and Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad which would enable it to compete on freights with said roads for the benefit of the producer. He also read several communications from Mr. Garrett, the President of the road, and Mr. LaTrobe the Chief Engineer, in which they gave assurance that in the location of the road, they would be entirely governed by these advantages, and the road would be built on one of the proposed routes, and that a hearty co-operation of the citizens along the line, would secure the road, and that the citizens of Defiance, Ohio, Auburn, Albion, Bremen, Indiana, and other towns along the line, are awake to their interests.

After which remarks were made by George W. Hattle, Joseph Rippey, S. L. Ketring, Dr. D. C. Kelley, Evan Miles, and others, setting forth to the farmers of this vicinity, the benefits of the road to them.—On motion, Dr. D. C. Kelley, Dr. L. Violette, Joseph Rippey, Esq, J. L. Lape and Evan Miles, were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the meeting. On motion, the Chirman appointed S. L. Ketring, Jos. A. Kindig, Martin Hillibold, and Joel Spangle a committee, to raise funds to defray the expenses of a survey. Committee on Resolutions reported the following which were enthusiatically adopted:

1st. Resolved, That we, the citizens of Syracuse and vicinity, appreciating the the benefits derived by us from the extension of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, from Pittsburgh to Chicago through our place, pledge ourselves to bear our share of the expense of a survey of the road, and that we will not be behind any town along the line, in giving aid to its construction.

2d. Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to Nelson Prentice, of Albion, for his very able remarks in setting forth the advantages of the proposed road, and of the prospects of Syracuse soon becoming a railroad town.

IMPROVEMENTS.—The fine weather so far has inagurated the preparatory steps for the erection of a large number of buildings to go up in this place during the year. Smith & Hare have already commenced on their brick building on Main street the foundation being now completed. It will be 20x60 feet, and two stories high.

Preparations are also going on for the erection of the Odd Fellows' block north of the Court House, to be three stories high, and by far the largest and costliest building in the place. Mr. Moody also contempiates the erection of a brick business house on his lot between 6th and 7th streets, during the year. Mr. Swineford will make additional improvements on his property, on the corner of seventh and Main, while storerooms north of this point are being refitted and modified to meet the great demand for business rooms now made upon the place.

In the way of private residences, there is no opportunity of correctly estimating how many of them will be built. Material is seen on every hand, ready for the handiwork of the Carpenter and Mason, and we suppose that many others will follow the examples of these with similar enterprise.

Dr. J. A. Cowan, has a portion of the material on the ground for a handsome brick which will be ready for occupancy during the coming fall. It will be a fine building, and a credit alike to his enterprise and the attraction of our place. West and north the building fever will rage quite fiercely, and we look for the next year to add more to the beauty and importance of Auburn than the last twenty has done.

Fix up your fences, plant beautiful shade trees, paint your houses and let us assume the cosy tidy appearance that makes every place attractive.

We inquire of our exchanges if any of them have received pay for publishing an article headed "Helmbold's Pirates," sent them by old "Buchu," and to be inserted as paid matter.—Anderson Herald.

We are very sorry to say that we have not. We received it direct from Helmbold, with orders to publish and send our bill, and, as we supposed Helmbold to be good, did so.—We hav'nt seen the greenbacks yet.—Noblesville Register.

We are happy to inform our friends of the Herald and the Register, that we have. We received the order the same way and sent our bill accordingly. In due time the greenbacks turned up all right, and at no half rates either.—Crawfordsville Journal.

We are also enabled to add our testimony to Helmbold's ready reponse in the shape of a neatly executed Draft. "Old Buchu" never "cuts" a printer's bill.—Ligonier Banner.

Here, too. We published the pirates and got our price in due time. We have an abiding faith in old H. T., especially where printers are concerned.

Lying in Bed.

It is often a question among people who are unacquainted with the anatomy and physiology of men, whether lying with head exalted or on a level with the body, is the most unwholesome. Most, consulting their own case on this point, argue in favor of that which they prefer. Now, although many delight in bolstering up their heads at night, and sleep soundly without injury, yet we declare it to be a dangerous habit.—The vessels in which the blood passes from the heart to the head are always lessened in their cavities when the head is resting in bed higher than the body; therefore, in all diseases attended with fever, the head should be pretty nearly on a level with the body; and people ought to accustom themselves to sleep thus, and avoid danger.

A COUPLE of African gentlemen of this city, recently had a difficulty that waxed to a glowing heat. Violent terms of abuse were resorted to by one party, and the other repelled the charges by assuming a highly dignified air and assuring his opponent that he knew nothing about the matters of which he was speaking. Then came the crushing and quite original retort:—"Don't know you, hey? Yes, I does, sah, I knows all about you. I knows you' fo'fathers dare millions of 'em over in de fore'n country, rapen dar tails round de limbs.—Laporte Argus.

Funeral Discourse Delivered by the Rev. W. B. Sandoe on the Death of Mrs. Addie L. Gross.

Text—1st Thessalonians, 4th Chapter, 13 to 18 verse.

This chapter properly comprises two parts: first, various practical exhortations, verse 1-12 and secondly suggestions designed to console those who are bereaved, verse 13-10 the first part embraces the following topics:

1. An exhortation to increase and abound in the christian virtues which they had already manifested; v. 1-2.

2d. A particular exhortation on the subject of sanctification (v. 4-8) in this two points are specified; probably as an illustration of the general subject, embracing those in regard to whom they were exposed to special danger. The first was fornication; and the other was found.

3. An Exhortation to brotherly love—v 9. 10. There is nothing that tends to promote the well-being and interest of society at large, the true communion of saints more than brotherly love, kindness, sympathy and affection. It is that chain "that binds the happy souls above," and should bind us on earth. In traveling through this vale of tears, we meet with many trials, sore afflictions, heavy burdens, Oh how heavy when we must bear them alone; Oh how encouraging, how cheering when we are assured that we have friends, true friends who are ready to assist us, and sympathize with us.

4. An exhortation to quiet, industry, and to honestly in their dealings, particularly with those who were christians, v. 11. 12.—The second part is designed to comfort the Thessalonians who had been bereaved, v. 13 to 18.

Some of their number had died. They appear to have been beloved members of the Church, and dear friends of those to whom the apostle wrote. To console them he brings into view the doctrine of the second coming of the Saviour, and the truth that they would be raised up to live with him forever. He reminds them that those who had died, were "asleep," that they were reposing in a gentle slumber, as if they were to be awakened again.

(a). He reminds them that if they believed that Jesus died and rose again, they ought to believe that God would raise up all those that sleep in Jesus, v. 14.

(b). He reminds them of the fact, that in the last day they would rise before the living. That they should be changed, and that the living would not be taken up to heaven and leave their friends in their graves, v. 15, 16. This is the greatest and grand source of comfort and consolation to those who are thus bereaved, when they know, that those who have thus been taken away from them, that they died in the triumph of a full and living faith, that they shall one day meet them, in the day of resurrection, and be again united to them around the throne of heaven.

(c). He also reminds them that both the living and the dead would be raised up to heaven and the Lord, v. 17.

With this prospect, they had every ground of comfort which they could desire, and they should sustain each other in their trials by this bright hope, v. 18.

With these words that is with these truths, as our guide, we will notice the following points, in reference to this important subject, viz:

1st. This portion of scripture (v. 13-18), contains a truth which is not to be found in no heathen classic writer, and no where else except in the teaching of the New Testament. For the elevated and glorious view which it gives of a future; scenes pertaining to our world, and for all its inestimable consolations we are wholly indebted to the christian religion. Reason, unassisted by revelation, never dared to conjecture that such scenes would occur; if it had, it would have had no argumen's on which the conjecture could be supported.

2d. The death of the christian is a calm and gentle slumber, v. 13. Death is not as many suppose a cessation of existence, annilation. It is not the extinction of hope. It is like the gentle repose when we lie down at night, and when we hope to awake again in the morning; it is like the quiet sleep slumbers of an innocent babe. Why then should christians be afraid to close their eyes in slumber after the day is spent? They have no reason for fears. When one is once truly converted to Christ, the spirit once bears witness with their spirits, death has no dismay; the grave has no gloom, he feels that the former is but the precursor to a glorious immortality, and the latter but the anti-chamber to the mansions of the Fathers House. Why should they dread the night; Then why dread the stillness of death; Is he afraid of the darkness, the silence, the chilliness of the midnight hour, when the senses are locked in repose? Look at the child, with what confidence and trust it sleeps on the mother's knee, as she prepares it for the couch. So the christian, who knows in whom he has trusted, calmly fails asleep in Jesus, and with a Stephen commits his spirit into the hands of Jesus, with the assurance, that in the morning of the resurrection he shall awake him to realize the fullness of eternal bliss. Then why should death appear to him so terrible? Is the slumbering of an object of terror? Most certainly not.

3d. There are magnificent scenes before us. There is no description anywhere which is more sublime than that in the close of this chapter. Great events are brought together here, any one of which is more grand than all the pomps of Regal Courts, and all the sublimity of battle, and all the grandeur of a triumphal civic procession. The glory of the descending Judge of all mankind; the attending retinue of angels, and of spirits of the dead; the loud shouts of the descending host; the clangor of the arch-angel's trumpet; the bursting of the graves, and the coming forth of the millions there entombed; the rapid, sudden glorious change on the millions of living. The consternation of the wicked; the ascent of the innumerable hosts to the regions of the air, and the solemn process of the judgement there. The meeting of husband and wife, parents and children, brothers and sisters, welcoming them home, and above all this, the grand congratulations of angels, and the welcome plaudit of the Judge, "Well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, now will I make the ruler over many things, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." What has there ever occurred like these events in this world? And how strong it is that the thoughts of man are turned away from the tribes, vain show, the pleasures of this world, the shaddow, the glitter, the empty pageantry here, to these bright and glorious realities.

4. In those scenes we shall be personally interested. If we do not survive, yet, nevertheless, we shall have an important part to act in them. We shall hear the arch-augels voice or trump; we shall be summoned to stand before the descending Judge. But here I would charge your memory with one important truth, we shall not be there as we often are here, carless and unconcerned spctators, here you can despise the christain religion; here you can respect the invitations of Christ here you can treat lightly the offers of mercy; here you can mock, scoff and scorn at the humble penitent, and meek follower of Jesus Christ, here you can say there is no necessity or virtue in the observance of the ordinances of the house of God, and you can engage in all that the flesh desires, but there, I charge you remember, that there you must give an account for all these things.

We have in this portion of scripture before us an interesting view of the order in which these great events will occur. There will be (1st.) The descent of the Judge, with the attending retinue of the heavenly host. He shall rise from the throne of mercy and grace, dressed in the awful habiliments of judgment, and descend to the earth on a cloud.

2nd. The rising up of the righteous dead. They that here his voice and have done good, to the resurrection of life. They who have been faithful unto the end, they shall rise to wear the crown of immortal glory.

3d. The change which the living undergo, [1 cor. 15 52]. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; at the last trumpet, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed.

4th. The ascent to meet the Lord in the air.

5th. The return with him to glory, there to live and reign with him for evermore. There, at the right hand, to enjoy all the immunities of his house and his table.

What place in this series of wonders will be assigned to the wicked is not mentioned here. But the scriptures speak elsewhere of them. We are told "they shall rise to the resurrection of damnation;" in that day they shall loudly "call upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne." They shall pass to the left ringing in their ears the dread sentence. "Depart from me ye wicked, I never knew you." They shall have a part in the lake where the worm dieth not and where there is weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth," and "the smoke of their torment ascendeth forever and ever."

There is no intimation of the personal reign of Christ on earth in this connection, and for want of time we pass on.

7th. The saints will be forever with the Lord. They will dwell with him in His own eternal house. This expression comprises the sum of all their anticipated felicity and glory. To be with Christ will be in itself, the perfection of bliss; for it will be a security that they will sin no more, that they will suffer no more, and that they will be shielded from danger and death. What has been the pain and sufferings of our deceased sister during the past months is known to all, she suffered intense pain, now she is relieved, and as we gaze upon her lifeless form before us, how calm her slumber, how placid her countenance, yes beautiful. They will have realized the object of their long fond desire; that of seeing their Saviour; they will have suffered the last pang; encountered the last temptation, and escaped forever from the dominion of death. What a glorious prospect is this, assurdly we should be willing to endure pain, and contempt here for the brief period of our earthly pilgrimage, if we come at last to a world of eternal rest. What trifles are all earthly sorrows compared with the glories of an endless life with our God and Saviour.

8th. It is possible that even the judgment day should be a source of consolation, v. 18.

To most men it is justly an object of terror and dread, for all they have to hope or fear is concentrated upon that day. But why should a christain fear it? In the descending Judge he will hail his Redeemer and Friend; and just in proportion as he has true religion here, will be the certainty of his acquital there. Nay, his feelings in anticipation of the judgement may be more than the mere abscence of fear and alarm. It may be to him the source of positive joy. It will be the day of deliverance from death and the grave. It will confirm to him all his long cherished hopes. It will put the seal of approbation on his life spent in endeavoring to do the will of God. It will reunite him to his dear friends who have died in the Lord. It will admit him to a full and glorious view of that Saviour whom having not seen he has loved, and this will make him the companion of angels and God.

If there is anything, therefore, which ought to cheer and sustain our hearts in the sorrows and beravements of this life, it is the anticipation of the glorious scenes connected with the second advent of our Lord, and the prospect of standing before him clothed in the robes of salvation, surrounded by all those whom we have loved, who have died in the faith or in innocence, with the innumerable company of the redeemed of all ages and all lands.

Yet in conclusion, you who have hitherto despised the religion of Jesus Christ, and are assembled here this day, to pay your last tribute of respect, to our discessed sister. You have heard again the consolations and cheering comfort of those who fall asleep in Jesus, who die in the faith. What consolation have you? Your way is dark and uncertain, and that solemn change will be as a leap into the dark. You are well assured of death and the judgement, and sister Gross speaks to you to-day in a way she has never spoke before. "Prepare to meet thy God" Oh prepare for death and eternity.

And to you my dear Brother, who are mourning this day on account of the abecence of your much loved and cherished companion, we have only to say that our acquaintance with her was brief and of necessity limited. We have the testimony that she was a good citizen respected and esteemed, by all who knew her, for her many good and amiable qualities—she was a fond and affectionate mother and companion in life, and we hope and trust, if not sooner, that at least during her illness she has made peace with her God, and if this is your assurance, and you desire to be again united with her, live a christain and exemplary life, follow in her footsteps, and there with her and those gone before you shall make an undivided family around the great white throne in Heaven. May God then in his infinite mercy add his grace.

Educational Ideas.

Education deseredly demands and obtains a vast amount of thought. Rich nuggets of precious learning found by the patient miner for knowledge, excite those who have, to strive for more, and those who have not, to furnish their children with a claim, and time, teacher and books to work it.

Riches are a bar to intellectual superiority since they nullify the necessity which is the great ground of human action.

Colleges may grant honors to the children of the wealthy, but the system of free schools develops in the poor, in pocket, at mental power which fills our schols with efficient teachers and our legislature with able men.

Opinions on education are widely different, yet all are agreed as to its value, its power, and its influence.

Important thoughts, well known, will still admit of a profitable repetition, while failures and discouragement are so frequent on the part of the instructor.

Our worthy State Superintendent, looking at the bright side, uses the following language: "The condition of our public schools and of general education was never more flattering than at present. Education in our schools is constantly assuming a higher standard." We need encouragement but our standard can not well lower, and we think knowledge is to be found only on the pages of the text books of the present day, while those books are filled with diluted milky, mental food, and every particle of the old rich meats are carefully expunged.

Our standard of comparison is wrong. We ought not to look upon the many who have not used this food and think we are superior but, rather to the many gifted minds which toiling years in obscurity at lenght come out in power and move communities with written or spoken thoughts, and swayed by their example, strive to emulate them.

Some may study from a love of the work of their free will, but most con the long lesson because they must. Gold can not purchase a home in Heaven neither can it store a mind with valuable knowledge.—Wealth of any kind is the price of toil and the treasures of wisdom are won by hard study.

Generations rise and pass away. Each educates and gives character to the following and gradnally great and steady progress has been made, not individually but in general. We have many law givers but no Solon,—many orators but no Cicero, and many mathematicians but who is possessed of the perseverance of a Keplar or the abstractive power of a Newton?

We may be improving, but how do crime and ignorance abound! Murders, superstitions, broils and madness seem to rule the hour and long columns of the mighty press are filed with tales of burglary, assasintions fraud and a legion of crimes. If we would prevent the splendid edifice of civilization from tottening and falling into ruin, parents must bring up children to be every way better than themselves and every agency to aid them should be eagerly sought for, and that teacher especially, should have the warmest support who devotes himself to aid the parent in their duty to his nation and to his race.

NEW ERA, March, 21st, 1871.

MR. EDITOR.—The select school at this place, conducted by Mr. Little, closed last Thursday. In the evening there was a concert and exhibition, the scholars acquited themselves with credit, but what else could be expected with such a competent teacher.

Prommentamong those who took part in the evening exercises outside of the school were Mr. Houser, our popular trustee, Gordon Dr. Larimore, Millikan, Bacon, Hoffman, Spake and Gettel.

We now have a singing class under the superintendence of that popular music teacher, Mr. Spake. We are having very pleasant weather for this time of year, and plenty of mud.

CITIZEN.

THOSE who have stirred up their garden soil this spring have found the last years' pest—the Colorado potato bug thickly sown and promising a heavy crop. Perhaps, the early rose, early planted would mature before the bug could greatly injure their growth.

Butler school commences March, 27, W. H. McIntosh Principal.

EDITOR COURIER.—I see other localities in the county represented in in your enterprising paper, and we are none the less important, therefore, I propose to call your attention this way. This is a lively locality with a fair proportion of good schools, churches, money and good looking people. Improvement is our moto, and many are busy preparing their building material. A few days ago, whilt a number of men were getting out building timber, for Mr. Wallace the ax of Mr. John Wilson grazed a limb with sufficient force as to throw the ax into his foot making a fearful wound, almost entirely amputating a large portion of the foot.

Dr. Cascheer, of your place, who has by his works won an imperishable reputation in surgery, in this communnity was speedily sent for and was soon on the ground, and soon the beterans wound was beautifully dressed, and notwithstaning our fears, the wound is doing well and the foot likely to be saved.

Brahma Fowls.

A correspondent of an exchange says an experience of five years in keeping this breed of fowls, has been productive of the following results:

1. The knowledge that these fowls are unequaled, as winter layers.

2. That their eggs average larger and richer that those of any other breed.

3. Their home-like domestic qualities qualify them for confinement in small yards which with little or no disposition to roam, make them a desirable fowl for cities or villages.

4. Their superior quality for the table cannot be denied. Kill and pick one, and you have something that will do for a meal for a fair-sized family. One will weigh as much as two common fowls, and oftentimes more.

5. Their chickens are hardy, easily raised and grow rapidly, and, last of all, they are fine, handsome looking fowls, such as a man can take pride in showing to his friends.

HOW TO MAKE MONEY.—Send to the American Publishing Company, Rutland, Vt., for their beautiful Specimen book, and make ten dollars the first day you show the book. Read their advertisement in another column, concerning the Parlor Album, and you will get full particulars.

The Parlor Album contains more beatiful embellishments than any other work extant. The Specimen Book is sent free on receipt of postage.

Don't forget the Red Front, Keystone block when you go to Fort Wayne, Readymade clothing in great abundance, at awully low figures.

To Nebraska, California, Kansas, and The B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is BURLINGTON, on the Mississippi. It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western termini.

Its northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing to Omaha, it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the intra continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and trafic choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the South Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season, rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg, it makes close connections, twice a day, for St. Joseph. Leavenworh, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to no other in speed, safety, or any Pullman luxury of Modern travel; and while on your way, survey the garden of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then before the people bound westward, "to take the Burlington Route."

THE HOWE.

The OLDEST and the latest improved SEWING MACHINE in the world. Manufactured by THE HOWE MACHINE CO of Bridgeport, Conn., adapted to every variety of sewing. Unequaled in beauty, excellence, and durability.

It is the most simple in construction and the easiest to understand and operate of any SEWING MACHINE ever yet placed in market. Some new and valuable improvements have recently been added, which renders our NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINE superior to any we have made heretofore, and all that could be reasonable be desired. The Howe Sewing Machine, both family and Manufacturing, use a much smaller needle for the same size of thread than any other using the same size or number of thread on the under or upper and under side, and sew equally with cotton, linen and silk. Our Family Machines are especially adapted to all household sewing—Shirt making, Cloak and Vest making, Seaming, Quilting, Tucking, Gathering, Hemming, Felling, Binding and Cording. The Hemmer, Braider and Corder are unequalled.

The undersigned having for some time past, used the Howe Machine, sold by Mr. Geo. L. Segner, would state that we are well pleased with the working of the machine in every respect.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The East.

—New York dispatches say the small-pox is reported spreading in several wards of the city, and in adjacent towns.

—Col. Burr Porter, of Newark, New Jersey, was killed in battle Dec. 9, while serving with the troops in France under Garibaldi.

—The number of immigrants arriving at New York since Jan. 1, was 9,734—a decrease of 2,853 compared with the corresponding period in 1870.

—A boat in which were four Frenchmen was swept over Salmon Falls, near Russel, on the 14th, and all the men were drowned.

—Thomas, the negro murderer, was hanged at the Tombs yard in New York on Friday. Twenty-eight persons have been hanged in this yard in thirty-eight years.

—The yacht Maria, engaged for years in the West India fruit business, is supposed to have been lost in the storm of October 6, as nothing has been heard from her since September last, when she sailed from St. Andrews for New York. It is thought all on board—twenty-five or thirty, perhaps forty persons—must have gone down with her.

—A Frenchman and his wife narrowly escaped death by poisoning, at New York, for which an ignorant drug clerk would have been responsible. M. Pauze went into a Broadwy drug store to purchase some borage, a harmless herb, but in its place he received belladonna, a deadly poison, to cure colds. He and his wife drank a decoction of this poison. By the exertions of a medical attendant the life of the woman has been saved, and probably that of M. Pauze will be preserved.

—The new list of reduced rates just adopted by the New York Central and Hudson River Railway, Erie, and Pennsylvania Central lines, to the most important Western points, are as follows: First class, including dry goods, boots and shoes, and general merchandise—Chicago, $1; Cairo, $1.29; Louisville, $1.14; Nashville, $1.43; Cincinnati, 93c; Cleveland, 66c; Toledo, 78c; Sandusky, 72c; Detroit, 71c; Kansas City, $1.84; St. Louis, $1.29; St. Joseph, $1.89; Keokuk, $1.34; Milwaukee, $1. The other classes are in proportion. The rates by steamer by way of Buffalo to Lake Michigan ports also show a considerable reduction.

The West.

—Patrick Gibbons shot Martin Lavine dead, at Stockton, Cal., on the 16th.

—The total number of hogs packed at Cincinnati this season is 498,000, against 337,000 last year.

—The citizens of Peoria, are agitating the question of removal of the capital of Illinois to that place.

—United States Senator Matt Carpenter, of Wisconsin, is seriously ill at Washington with pneumonia.

—Senator Yates, of Illinois, returned to his home on the 17th. He has been a public servant for twenty-eight years, and now retires to private life.

—Two companies of the 7th cavalry have been ordered from Fort Harker, Kan., to Saline and Solomon rivers, to protect the frontiers against the Indians.

—On the 16th, at Hedricksburg, Belmont county, Iowa, Henry Yous, just pardoned from the Penitentiary, shot and mortally wounded Moses Kline, and then shot and killed himself. The cause is said to be jealousy.

—A ruffian named Pepper was shot and killed in a drunken brawl, at Taylorville, Ill., on Friday. Morgan, the killer, was arrested. He is a desperate man, and has shot several persons within the last two years.

—William Folliott, the last of the gang of five men who were engaged in the murder and attempted robbery of David Kinner at Cleveland, two years and a half ago, has been sentenced to the penitentiary for twenty years.

—Hon. Charles Chandler, one of the most prominent citizens of Clinton, Kewanee county, Mich., died after fifteen minutes' illness, on the 10th. He had been a resident there thirty-seven years, and filled many important public positions.

—Two men were killed by trains on the Cincinnati and Indianapolis Junction Railroad recently, one near Liberty, Ind., while crossing the railroad in a wagon, and the other while walking upon the track near Palestine.

—A St. Paul dispatch says that in the Red River country, a few days ago, the Canadian troops, finding Mr. Andrew Scott, formerly a Riel supporter, chased him far into Minnesota, and finally catching him, "kicked and stabbed him with bayonets," and left him in a dying condition.

—A terrible accident occurred on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota Railroad, one mile south of Solon, Iowa, on the 17th inst. A construction train, having a large force of laborers on board, was thrown from the track. Five of the men were instantly killed, and four others severely injured, two of whom cannot recover.

—Private letters from Lake Superior report the prospects of the early opening of navigation flattering. At Portage River Light Station, Feb. 27, the weather was very fine. There was a heavy rain on the 24th, with lightning, but no thunder. The lake was then open to within one mile of the station. Advices to March 1 say that the ice was then about two miles from Portage range lights. There were that morning plenty of ducks in sight, and everything looked like spring.

—The stage from Fort Yuma to Tucson was captured by the Apaches fifteen miles east of Gila Bend, on the 7th inst. The driver, Thompson, received three bullets in the leg and an arrow in the chest, but escaped with the only passenger. This is the first attack made on a stage west of Tuscon in fifteen years. The citizens are greatly alarmed and exceedingly bitter against Gen. Stoneman for removing to California, and representing the country quiet, while every settlement is being attacked in turn by the Apaches.

The South.

—Martial law has been proclaimed in the counties of York and Chester, South Carolina, and lively times are expected there during the next two weeks.

—A serious row occurred between some negro soldiers and roustabouts at Memphis, on Friday, in which one man was killed and another seriously injured.

—George Rice, a man of wealth, residing near Kirksville, Mo., was arrested recently, charged with abducting two girls, 14 and 16 years age, for the purpose of prostitution. Rice is 43 years old, and has heretofore borne an excellent reputation.

—The message which it is announced will be sent by the President, next week, to Congress, will be confined wholly, there is reason to believe, to a statement of the disorders existing in the South, which Congress will be urged to devise some means of suppressing.

—The San Domingo Commissioners left Kingston, Jamaica, for home, on the 16th. All on board both vessels were well. The report of Commissioner Wade is finished. He will go to Washington by the most direct route. The other Commissioners wish to stop at Charleston to write elaborate reports. All express themselves decidedly in favor of annexation.

—In a family quarrel, recently, at Memphis, in a saloon on Jefferson street, between [illegible] Richard Bucinanni and Lippi, the former shot and instantly killed the latter, and then surrendered.

—About noon, on the 16th, a terrific gale came up at Memphis, Tenn., from the southwest, the lower portion of which struck the northern part of the city, unroofing a large number of houses, among them the Stanton block on Madison street, and the Bradley block, on Batture street. Several persons were fatally injured.

—T. Murray, of St. Louis, father of one of the girls alleged to have been enticed from her home by George Rice for the purpose of prostitution, has entered suit in the Circuit Court against Rice for seducing his daughter, claiming $25,000 damages. Both the girls have been found, and will be delivered to their parents.

Foreign.

—Napoleon has gone to England.

—Charles Hugo, the eldest son of Victor Hugo, died in France, on the 16th, in his 45th year.

—It is rumored that Prussia has offered to sell the city of Mulhouse back to France for two hundred million francs.

—Messrs. Sykes, Swinburn and Johnson, of the American ambulance corps, have been presented with the cross of the Legion of Honor.

—The Prussians have returned to the French authorities 12,000 Chassepot guns, for use in case of need at Paris. Disorders continue, but not of an alarming nature.

—The French troops in Belgium are now returning to France, but leave their arms in the hands of the Belgian authorities until after the conclusion of a definite treaty of peace.

—An article in the Journal Officiel, of Paris, declares in favor of a Republic as the definitive form of government for France, and urges the people not to disturb order, for the sole hope of France is tranquility.

—It is rumored that the Government of England has asked that of Belgium for an explanation as to the neglect and delay which have characterized commercial intercourse between the two countries.

—The Rouen (France) Independent, for advising the people to display emblems of mourning during the recent reunion of the German troops in that city, has been suppressed, and its proprietors subjected to a fine of 1,000 francs.

—It is reported that a newspaper stamp duty has been arranged at two centimes daily on all journals, both in Paris and the departments. Political journals must each lodge 24,000 francs with the Department of Finance as security for the payment of the duty.

—A London Times special from Paris says the French Cabinet has decided to appoint Valertin Prefect of the Paris police. This indicates the adoption of measures for the suppression of all popular tumults. The police, however, permit the usual mid-lent gatherings, and disturbances are feared.

—The French Official Journal publishes a decree approving the formation of regiments of infantry at Bordeaux, and dissolving the headquarters of the staffs of the armies recently operating in the north, and the camps of instruction at Havre, in Brittany, and in the Vosges.

—It is reported from Paris that the Government intends to levy a tax on imported raw material, especially textile fabrics. The tax on cotton alone is expected to produce annually sixty to eighty millions of francs. Foreign manufactured articles will be taxed proportionately.

—The London Times' special dispatch from Paris, the 16th, says: "The Government will attempt, to-night, to take by surprise the thirty cannon held by the insurgents in the Place de la Vosges. A company of National Guards on duty there has promised to assist the undertaking by refusing to guard the guns any longer.

—The German Government has asked information from that of France as to whether the decree issued by the late Government of the National Defense for the expulsion of Germans from France has been canceled. An immediate reply was required, but Favre desires time for consideration, and it has been granted.

—The Journal des Debats, of Paris, commenting on the result of the Conference on the Eastern question, makes a bitter attack on England. It declares that she has lost every advantage gained by the Crimean war. "France is now helpless; her sword is broken. But when it is unsheathed again, its aim will not be so distant as Turkey." Other Paris journals speak of England in a similar spirit.

—Ten trains will be run daily between Paris and Versailles during the sitting of the National Assembly. One hundred seats in the Assembly are vacant. Gen. Ulrich is a candidate for the Assembly at the ensuing election, to fill one of the vacancies from Paris. The vacancies are mostly from Alsace and Lorraine, where there is great rivalry at present among popular men for the votes of electors.

—English journals in sympathy with Germany say that the reported negotiations for the return of Alsace and Lorraine to France may be looked upon as absurd. The expediency of their retention is doubtful for political reasons, which Bismarck unquestionably estimates at their full value; but the military reasons dictating annexation in the first place, will far outbalance these. The line of the Moselle is the natural defense of the Rhineland, and when Germany gives it up again it will be for monetary considerations.

—Trade at Rouen is reviving, and purchases of cotton tissues have commenced. The German military authorities have billeted a large number of additional troops on the inhabitants of Rouen, because of the general display of mourning during the review of the German forces in that city.

—A decree dated the 5th inst., just published, abolishes the Governorships of Versailles, Nancy and Rheims, the duties of which are transferred to military commanders. The Germans also relinquish the administration of affairs in the occupied departments of France, so far as education and religion are concerned—reserving, however, the right to resume it in case the French arrangement proves unsatisfactory. The Germans retain the management of the postal, railway and telegraphic service in those portions of France held by them.

A Marked Compliment.—The engraving and notice of the house of D. B. Fisk & Co., Chicago, which we republish from Harpers' Bazar, is a just tribute to the greatest Millinery Emporium in the Northwest. We cordially indorse this high testimonial to its metropolitan character.

Congressional Summary.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the resolution to adjourn sine die on the 15th was tabled by a vote of 32 to 13.——Frelinghuysen wanted to know how many States had ratified the 15th amendment to the Constitution of the United States since the issue of the proclamation of March 30, 1870.——The bill repealing the duty on coal was laid over.——The resolution in regard to Ku-Klux outrages in the South was taken up, pending which the Senate adjourned.

In the House, after the disposition of a few bills of minor importance, Cox offered the following, and demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That economy requires that the annual taxation should not exceed $250,000,000, including the $125,000,000 principal of the public debt.

Resolved, That the tariff should be for revenue only, and not for protection to a certain class of interests at the general expense.

Resolved, That in case this session adjourn without the appointment of a Committee of Ways and Means, a special committee of seven be appointed to consider and report upon a reform in our revenue, in such bill or bills embodying a revenue tariff on the foregoing principles as will best carry the same into practical effect; and in case said Committee of Ways and Means be appointed this session, that then said Committee shall perform the duties required by this resolution.

They were ordered printed.——The political disability bill was killed, after some discussion and considerable amending.——Adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 15th, Wilson introduced a bill to carry into effect the decision of the Supreme Court relating to the bounties of soldiers enlisted between May 3 and July 22, 1861. Passed. The bill gives $100 bounty to honorably discharged soldiers enlisted between May 3 and July 22, 1861.——On motion of Trumbull, the House bills repealing the duties on coal and salt were read a second time.——A large number of bills were introduced and referred, when the deficiency bill came up and was made the special order for to-morrow.——Adjourned.

In the House, on the 15th, Eldridge gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill for the suppression of the Ku-Klux in New Hampshire. Dawes replied that New York, as much as New Hampshire, was interested in the bill being passed.——Several motions to adjourn were voted down.——Peters offered the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That a select committee of thirteen be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the condition of the late insurrectionary States, so far as regards the execution of the laws and the safety of the lives and property of the citizens of the United States, and report the result of their investigation to the House in December next, with such recommendation as they may deem expedient; and that the said Committee be authorised to employ a clerk and a stenographer; to sit during the recess, send for persons and papers, take testimony, and visit, at their discretion, through a sub-committee, any portion of the Southern States during the recess; and that the expense of said Committee be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

Wheeler offered a resolution that, the Senate concurring, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House close the present session of Congress on the 20th of March, at 12 o'clock, noon. Agreed to—yeas, 117; nays, 76.——The Speaker then announced a committee under Peters' resolution.——Adjourned.

The business of the Senate on the 16th was quite uninteresting. A large number of bills were introduced and referred, and that will probably be the last heard of them this session.——Sherman offered the following resolution relative to protection in the South:

Resolved, That, as organized bands of desperate and lawless men, mainly composed of soldiers in the late rebel army, armed, disciplined, disguised, and bound by oaths to the secret of organization, have by violence subverted all civil authority in the late insurrectionary States, there overthrowing the safety of persons and property and all those rights which are the primary basis and the object of all civil governments, and which are expressly guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to all its citizens, and as the courts are rendered powerless, by organized perjury, to punish crimes; therefore, the Judiciary Committee is instructed to report a bill or bills that will enable the President and the courts of the United States to execute the laws, punish such organized violence, and secure to all citizens the rights so guaranteed to them. Laid over and ordered printed.

Adjourned.

The morning hour of the House was occupied by members withdrawing from the Committee on Southern Outrages, and personal explanations caused by a letter from Ben. Butler, giving his reasons for not serving on the committee. The letter was printed on slips, and laid upon the desks of the members. Judge Kelley arose first and denied the truth of that part of the letter which charges that the high tariff men united with the Democrats to pass the resolution in question. Judge Kelley showed that the high tariff men, as a general rule, had voted against the resolution, and in favor of some bill for the relief of the South. Butler said he did in his letter refer to Kelley, because Kelley had always stood with his party—had attended the caucus, and felt himself bound by the caucus decision. He referred to other Republicans, who were tariff men, and who had to fight at every step all bills intended to suppress the Ku-Klux. In the meantime, while Butler was speaking, Speaker Blaine called Wheeler, of New York, to the chair, and came down himself to the floor. As soon as Butler finished, Speaker Blaine was recognized by the Speaker pro tem., and proceeded to deliver one of the most scathing speeches heard in the House for many years against Butler. He denounced the letter of Butler as false in its statements and mean in its insinuations and inferences. Butler, he said, had spoken of tricks. The whole country knew that the gentleman from Massachusetts was the embodiment of trickery. Blaine became more and more excited. He charged Butler with insincerity as a party man, and intimated that if it should further his personal ambition, he (Butler) would go over to the Democratic side, and lead them as gallantly as he did at the Charleston Convention, when he voted fifty-six times for Jeff. Davis for President. He said that Butler, as Chairman of the Reconstruction Committee, had refused to report when he should have reported; otherwise he might have had a bill passed for the relief of the South long ago. Butler got the floor to reply. He started out calmly, but soon waxed up to a terrible state of excitement. He said he was not responsible for the disgraceful spectacle which the House had witnessed to-day. He had his right as a citizen and a member to give his reasons for not serving on the Committee of the House. For this the Speaker of the House saw fit to leave the chair, and come upon the floor, and pour a torrent of personal abuse upon him. He had felt, both in the last Congress and in this, that the Speaker did not regard him with a friendly eye. He knew what it was by experience to be on bad terms with the Speaker. Butler went on to say that he still regarded the introduction of Blaine's resolution, yesterday, as a trick; said he: "For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, commend me to Blaine, which I rise to maintain."——After excusing several members from serving on the Committee, and without further action, the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 17th, the proceedings were not of a very interesting nature.——The bill to define a gross of matches was passed.——The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was given power to mortgage its road.——Anthony submitted a resolution for an investigation into Southern affairs, as follows:

Resolved, By the Senate, the House concurring, that a joint committee, consisting of five Senators and seven Representatives, be appointed, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the condition of the late insurrectionary States as far as regards the execution of the laws and the safety of the lives and property of citizens of the United States, with leave to report at any time the results of their investigation to Congress, with such recommendations as they may deem expedient, and that such committee be authorized to employ clerks and stenographers, to sit during the recess, take testimony and visit, at their discretion, any of the said States during the recess of Congress, to print and make public at any time during the recess the results of their investigation, and the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the Congressional contingent fund.

Trumbull suggested an increase of the committee to seven Senators and nine Representatives, and that the present Senate Committee to investigate Southern affairs be included in the former number. Anthony accepted the suggestion for an increase in the number of the committee, and the resolution was modified accordingly. After debate, the concurrent resolution then passed.——The unfinished business being the appropriation bill for the payment of additional clerks and messengers in the Pension Office, and for other purposes, it was proceeded with, but, after being amended, was laid aside, and the Senate took up Anthony's resolution to limit the business of the present session to legislation upon the South. Debate occupied the time of the Senate until 3:30, when a brief Executive session was held, after which the Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

In the House, Butler attempted to have reported his bill for the protection of the lives and property of loyal citizens, but failed.——Platt asked leave to offer a joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of 1862 to all aliens who had entered or shall enter the navy or marine corps, and have been or shall be honorably discharged, so as to place them on the same footing as to naturalization and citizenship. Passed—yeas, 165; nays, 18.——On motion of Kelley, the House then took up the bill authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to determine the form, character, and device of all stamps required by the internal revenue laws, to be provided by contract or otherwise. Passed.——Scofield called up the Senate bill giving R. H. Lawson leave to withdraw his resignation as lieutenant in the navy, and offered an amendment authorizing the President to nominate him to be lieutenant. This was agreed to, and the bill passed.——Adjourned till Monday.

The proceedings of the Senate on Saturday were mainly devoted to the discussion of Ku-Klux outrages, and the devising of means for their suppression. At 6:30 p. m. the Senate adjourned without action on the matter. It comes up again on Monday.

ANOTHER WAR IN FRANCE.

Its Gloomiest Hours Yet to Come—An Outburst in Paris—Revolution Under the Banner of Pillage.

The telegraphic dispatches of Sunday, the 19th inst., give accounts of a formidable revolution now going on in Paris. Events of the most unfortunate character have taken place, and the situation is hourly becoming graver. The Government, following up the proclamation of President Thiers, at midnight on Friday sent a detachment of troops and gendarmes to occupy the position of the insurgents in Montmartre. A considerable number of cannon were removed, and the gendarmes made some 400 prisoners. In the morning, the National Guards of Belleville and Montmartre, with many unarmed soldiers of the line, arrived on the scene and released the prisoners. Gen. Vinoy, who was in command of the Government forces, had placed a cordon of troops around the hill of Montmartre, and planted mitrailleuses at the approaches, and his sentinels prevented all persons from ascending the hill. The batteries of mitrailleuses, however, were soon surrounded by angry groups, who demanded to know why the authorities distrusted the people, and if it was their intention to massacre them. The soldiers, when asked if they meant to fire on the citizens, made no reply, and soon a general fraternization commenced. The people were allowed to draw the mitrailleuses aside, and ascend the heights. The companies of soldiers on the summit fraternized with the Nationals, who were guarding the cannon still in their possession. As fresh troops arrived on the grounds, the people shouted to them, "Reverse arms," and the order was obeyed. At 10 o'clock the Nationals held the ground again, and prevented all unarmed persons from going up the hill. At the same hour a serious conflict occurred in the Place Pigalle. At the end of the street leading from the heights, some artillerymen and Chasseurs were surrounded by an angry mob, who accosted them with shouts of "Go and fight the Prussians." The Lieutenant of the Chasseurs, while endeavoring to disengage his horse from the crowd, drew his sabre, and he was instantly dragged from his horse and killed. A general melee followed, in which an artilleryman and two of the Nationals were wounded. But the fighting soon ceased. The soldiers abandoned their posts and mingled with the crowd, distributing among them their cartridges and relinquishing their chassepots. The artillerymen suffered the people to remove two mitrailleuses, making no further show of resistance. Gendarmes alone proved faithful to the Government. At 11 o'clock many battalions of the National Guards, fully organized, marched into Montmarte, shouting "Viva la Republique." The district was then wholly in possession of the Nationals, the soldiers of the Seine having all deserted. There was not a single regular visible. All the National Guards were amply supplied with cartridges, and appeared to be determined to retain their cannon and hold their position on the heights. The purposes of the insurgents are still indefinite. Their main object just now is resistance to the Government. Crowds in Montmartre and Belleville, however, are unanimous in their clamors against the Assembly at Bordeaux. They demand its immediate dissolution, and the election of a new body which shall sit in Paris. At 6 o'clock Saturday evening there was still agitation. The troops have been withdrawn from Faubourg, where the people appear excited and hostile. Gen. Faron was surrounded for several hours by the mob in Montmartre. His troops proved faithful. They charged and took three barricades, using the bayonet, and finally cut their way out and escaped. Gen. Lecomte and others, not so fortunate, being abandoned by their men, were made prisoners by the rioters, and are now detained in the chateau Rouge. Gen. Paturel was wounded. In the morning the troops succeeded in capturing forty cannon in Montmartre. Of these the people retook five without fighting. The remainder were removed to a place of safety. The rebels killed and cut up a horse of a staff officer, whom they surrounded and made prisoner. The rebels are now building barricades in Montmartre, Belleville, and Faubourg St. Antoine. The Government has issued another proclamation repudiating any intention of a coup d'etat, warning communists who seek to pillage Paris that they will ruin France, and appealing to the National Guards to put an end to the condition of anarchy into which they have plunged the capital.

At 9 o'clock p. m. it was reported that Gens. Lecomte and Clement Thomas, the latter formerly commander-in-chief of the National Guards, who were captured in the morning, had been shot by the insurgents after a summary trial. The news spread consternation throughout the city.

The journals this morning confirm the report of the execution of Gens. Le Comte and Clement Thomas. After their capture they were taken to the garden of Rue des Rosiers, Montmarte, where the Central Revolutionary Committee hold their sittings. After a brief trial they were condemned to suffer death and taken out and shot. All accounts say they died bravely. Gen. Vinoy's staff, all troops of the line, and the entire force of gensdarmes have retired to the left bank of the Seine, leaving the National Guards to restore order on the right. The Journal des Debats says: "Yesterday will be considered as one of the gloomiest hours in the history of France. Revolution, under the banner of pillage, is the mistress of Paris. France will condemn these horrible assassinations, and this odious insurrection, which is without pretext or purpose. Will the provinces come to our aid, or must the Germans re-enter the capital? This terrible day has wrought more damage to the republic than all the Bonapartes. The latest news is that the Nationals and Montmartre have seized and now occupy the staff and general headquarter buildings of the National Guard of Paris in the Place Vendome.

Most of the earthquakes felt on our coast are confined to small districts, and are so weak as to be barely perceptible. The centers of the several districts in which a majority of the shocks are felt, are Humboldt Bay, San Francisco, Monterey and Los Angeles. On the 1st and 2d instant shocks were felt at Humboldt Bay and Weaverville, and probably at various points in the same region. The concussions are generally most severe in the low land, and the shock of the 2d was no exception to the general rule, for while it was so severe as to shake down the "light work" of buildings, and frighten people at Eureka, at Weaverville it scarcely had force enough to make itself felt.—Alta California, March 8.

The firm name of John V. Farwell & Co. is familiar as household words to Western merchants, and is everywhere a synonym for enterprise, integrity and fair dealing.

The following is an enigma, said to have been written by Mr. Canning, which for a time baffled the skill of all England to solve:

There is a word of plural number,
A foe to peace and human slumber;
Now any word you chance to take
By adding S you plural make;
But if you add an S to this,
How strange the metamorphosis;
Plural is plural then no more,
And sweet what bitter was before.

The word is cares, to which, by adding an S, you have caress.

The following little nursery rhyme deserves to be incorporated into Mother Goose's melodies:

There was a little girl,
And she had a little curl
That hung right down on her forehead.
And when she was good
She was very good, indeed,
But when she was bad she was horrid.

There is nothing in the line of staple or fancy dry goods or notions that cannot be bought at the lowest price at John V. Farwell & Co.'s.

MOST WONDERFUL CURE OF SCROFULA.

Donnelsville, Clarke Co., Ohio,
January 10th, 1871.

Messrs. J. N. Harris & Co.:

Dear Sirs—I have sold some of Dr. S. A. Weaver's Canker and Salt Rheum Syrup, from my store, and I think it the best medicine ever sold, but my object in now writing you is to make known to you the result of its use in my own home. My daughter has been afflicted with scrofula for three years. A lady Doctress, who has a great reputation in treating such diseases in this section of the State, doctored her for some fifteen months, but seemed to do the girl no good. I was then advised to try Dr. Rose, of Dayton, who has a great reputation in curing such diseases. He had her under treatment for about sixteen months, and could not effect a cure. I attended the State Fair at Springfield last fall, accompanied by my family. I there met a gentleman, who, seeing my daughter so sorely afflicted, advised me to procure Dr. Weaver's Syrup and Cerate, that they would cure her.

My daughter then could not see at all, her eyes being blinded by the humors; her mouth and jaws badly affected: she had two ulcerated sores, one on her hip and one on her arm. From the ulcer on her arm several pieces of bone had been taken out. Up to this time I had not spent less than $100 in medicines for her, and with it all she got no better, but when she had taken the third bottle of Weaver's Syrup she commenced to get better. She has now used since October eight bottles of Syrup. Her eyes are entirely restored to sight, and the sores are healed up. I think a little more of the Syrup will restore her sound and well.

I write you of this cure, and want you to make it known, that others similarly afflicted will learn of the medicine to cure them. I think any one afflicted with Scrofula can save large doctor bills, and get cured by the use of Dr. Weaver's Syrup and Cerate. I think it will cure scrofula and old running sores, if anything known will.

Any person who knew the condition of my daughter will testify that Weaver's Syrup and Cerate cured her, and any person who wants to inquire further about the cure can write to me, and I will satisfy them that Dr. Weaver's Syrup and Cerate cured that disease which baffled the skill of physicians, and that no other remedy would cure. I repeat that you cannot say too much in favor of Dr. Weaver's medicine, to make them known to such as are afflicted with any scrofulous diseases. With much gratitude I remain,

Yours truly,
JOHN MOUK,
Merchant, Donnelsville, Clarke Co., Ohio.

Most certainly the above letter is strong and convincing proof of the merits of Dr. Weaver's Syrup and Cerate.

The Great Vernal Specific.

No class of invalids are more sensitive to changes of season and variations of temperature than dyspeptics, and persons of billious habit. Tender lungs are not more easily affected by these vicissitudes than feeble stomachs. If there is a tendency in the system to indigestion, billiousness, or bowel complaints, the variable weather of early spring is almost sure to develop one or other of these ailments. Intermittent fevers are also more prevalent in the spring months than at any other season except autumn. In view of these facts, this seems to be a proper time to invite especial attention to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine, which for a long series of years, has proved superior to all others as a remedy for the above named disorders, and as protection against the miasma which frequently produces, and always aggravates them. It was formerly the practice to give violent cathartics as "spring medicines," nor is the custom yet entirely obsolete. Nothing, however, can be more ill-judged and unphilosophical. The chilling moisture with which the air is loaded at the breaking up of winter, presses heavily upon the vital forces of the body, and reinforcement, not depletion, is what it requires. The Bitters is a genial and excellent tonic, a moderate alterative, and just enough of an aperient to regulate, without convulsing, the bowels. It is, therefore, a specific peculiarly adapted to the present season.

Western Enterprise.

From Harper's Bazar.

The growth of Chicago, from 40,000 people to 300,000, in eighteen years, is one of the marvels of history. But the increase of its trade, commerce and wealth has greatly exceeded its increase of population. As a mart for lumber, grain, beef and pork, it surpasses all Western cities. As the center of a great net-work of gigantic railways spanning the continent and uniting the Northern lakes with the Mexican Gulf, and as the entrepot for the agricultural and mineral products of the Northwest, it has no rival. It has become the great distributing point to the Northwest and Southwest for the products of the Atlantic and Pacific slopes, and the manufactures, teas, silks, &c., of the Eastern world, and is the great Metropolitan city for the vast portion of this country west of the Alleghenies.

INCREASE OF POPULATION.

Of the 7,641,746 souls added to the Union, the last ten years, according to the census, 4,739,671 have been added within the district directly tributary to Chicago, without including any States east or south of Illinois.

OBLIGATIONS OF CHICAGO TO YOUNG MEN.

Chicago owes its unexampled growth largely to the enterprise and energy of young men. They have laid the foundations and built the superstructure of her fortunes. Her business men, with the fresh, warm blood of a vigorous manhood in their veins, have made her what she is—the wonder of modern times. They have raised the city from six to ten feet out of the mud, given it perfect drainage, paved it, tunneled Lake Michigan and supplied the city with the best water in this country, improved its sanitary condition, established a system of magnificent Parks and Boulevards surrounding the city, comprising 3,000 acres, and making a drive of twenty-five miles, built double roadways under a navigable river—the first instance in the world—attracted capital from abroad for permanent investment, erected the most substantial and imposing business structures, and given her character and fame throughout the Union.

CHANGE IN THE COURSE OF TRADE.

The course of trade has changed materially since 1860, the wholesale business having expanded into unwonted and unexpected proportions. Formerly, most of our country merchants went to New York twice a year and bought a six months' supply. Now they buy limited amounts at Chicago, try the temper of the home market, replenish their stocks as they become reduced with only such goods as they can sell, and receive them in from twelve hours to two days. So that their goods are often sold long before they could be received if purchased in Eastern markets. They are thus enabled to supply their customers with fresh goods of the latest styles, and avoid the loss of carrying over unsaleable stock.

As an illustration of the growth of Western trade and a type of Chicago and her business men, take the well-known firm of importers and wholesale dealers in millinery, straw goods, ladies' furnishing, fancy goods and trimmings, whose store is represented by the above engraving. It is the pioneer wholesale millinery house of the Northwest, was established in the spring of 1855, on Wells street, between Lake and South Water, and was regarded at the time as a hazardous experiment. The city then numbered about 40,000 people, the surrounding country was new and sparsely settled, railroads were not, money was scarce, and the people poor. In 1864 they moved to 134 Lake street. From 1855 to 1867 they were at 166 and 167 Lake street, up stairs. In the spring of 1867, their business having steadily increased, they removed to the splendid iron building where they now are, occupying the second and third floors. Two years ago their business had so outgrown their accommodations that they took the whole building—the two floors above them for manufacturing and packing rooms, and converted the two stores below into one, for a salesroom and counting-room—and fitted it throughout in the most substantial and elegant style, with toilet rooms on the first floor for their lady customers.

AN ACRE AND A QUARTER OF MILLINERY GOODS.

So that, including the basement, they now have six floors, 50 by 190 feet—1875 square rods, or nearly an acre and a quarter of floor room for the display and sale of millinery goods—it being the largest store devoted exclusively to the millinery trade in the United States.

EXTENT OF THEIR TRADE.

Their trade extends from the Wabash to the Pacific, and from the Red River country of British America to Texas. Beginning with annual sales of a few thousand dollars, they have swelled them into millions, their sales last year exceeding by 33 per cent. the sales of the year previous. Western people are more liberal in their expenditures than Eastern people, and the ladies, especially in our thriving Western cities and villages, require even more fashionable and costly styles of dress and millinery goods than their Eastern sisters.

SYSTEM AND PROMPTNESS.

Everything in this house is systematized, and their arrangements with the telegraph and express companies are so perfect that they can send orders to their buyers in New York on Friday night, and have the goods ordered delivered at their store in Chicago at 8 o'clock on Monday morning, in season for their morning customers.

LARGEST AND FRESHEST STOCK.

They always have the largest, freshest, and most complete stock of goods in their line to be found under one roof in this country, thus saving their customers the time and expense of coming East, and the extra freight on their goods, and reducing the time between purchasing and ordering their goods from days to hours.

REASONS OF THEIR SUCCESS.

Their great success has been achieved by their enterprise, sagacity, affability, integrity, industry, good taste in the selection of their stock, promptness in securing the latest and best styles, ample means and rare facilities for making the manufacturers of their goods, both in the Old World and in the New, tributary to their wishes; thorough acquaintance with the wants of the trade, and constant attention to the interests of their customers; and by keeping only those in their employ who are efficient and trustworthy assistants, and who take a personal interest in the business of the firm.

WHAT SUCH MEN HAVE DONE.

It is such as they who have transformed Chicago, within a few years, from a mud village, struggling for existence between a waste of waters and a pathless wilderness, into a gigantic city, whose business houses, of mammoth proportions, are as substantial as marble and iron can make them; whose temples of science, art, and religion rival those of cities a hundred years old; whose trade and commerce embrace both hemispheres, and whose name has gone abroad into all the earth.

A GREAT MEDICAL DISCOVERY.
MILLIONS Bear Testimony to their Wonderful Curative Effects.
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

They are not a vile FANCY DRINK, Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits and Refuse Liquors doctored, spiced and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics," "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and A LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters according to directions and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

They are a Gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, possessing also, the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver, and all the Visceral Organs.

FOR FEMALE COMPLAINTS, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters have no equal.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism and Gout, Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia.

They invigorate the Stomach and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

FOR SKIN DISEASES, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald-Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effect.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French and Spanish.

Grecian Styles of Dress or Furbelows.

There is a somewhat amusing perplexity in society in regard to the two most prominent styles of dress—the dignified and elegant Grecian, with severe outlines and heavy folds, and the airy, fluttering style, gay with ruffles, flounces and furbelows. Both seem equally attractive, but are so distinct in impression that they require a totally distinct manner, carriage of the person, and arrangement of features. Both cannot rule in the same wardrobe, without infinite trouble on the part of the wardrobe's owner. After acquiring, through hard study, the grave, indifferent, somewhat abstracted manner befitting the majestic simplicity of the Grecian style, it is not easy to slip, on the instant, into a ravishing sprightliness, with the ruffled gown. Which mode is to reign preeminent nobody can tell. Fashion has taken one sensible and effective step during the last two years—a step to which most physical reformers seem surprisingly indifferent. Women no longer lace themselves into deformity in their ancient idiotic manner, but are content to leave to their waists their elegant natural outlines. A pinched waist is now an exception in society, and one which is invariably sneered at. Another reform which is sadly needed is probably useless to hope for, stout old John Knox and the voice of him being laid away forever. Never have evening dresses been made up in a more outrageously decollete style than now. Dresses have been worn this winter which would more appropriately have graced South Sea Islanders than modest American women. It is time that maids and matrons understood that a lovely figure is none the less lovely for being delicately veiled, and that the admiration excited by its ridiculous exposure is the poorest of compliments. There is not even a man of the world who does not feel a mild contempt for a woman after seeing her in this sort of garb.

WORKING HORSES.—Horses intended for use in spring work, especially those which are to do the plowing, and have been idle, or nearly so, during the winter, and have had but common care, and little or no grain in their feed, should, from now on, have extra good care and feed; and where there is anything for them to do, they will be all the better prepared for the heavy spring work if they are gradually put to work, as it will toughen their muscles and flesh, and accustom them to the tasks before them.

A GYMNASTIC youth boasted the other day that he received especial training daily at his home from the famous Brooklyn gymnast, Mr. Burnham. A wag, who overheard the innocent, thus extinguished him: "I wonder much that Burnham would come to such a dunce inane."

To Whom Shall We Give Thanks?

A little boy had sought the pump
From whence the sparkling water burst,
And drank with eager joy the draught
That kindly quenched his raging thirst.
Then gracefully he touched his cap—
I thank you, Mr. Pump, he said,
For this nice drink you've given me!
(This little boy had been well bred.)

Then said the Pump, my little man,
You're welcome to what I have done;
But I am not the one to thank—
I only help the water run.
Oh, then, the little follow said,
(Polite he always meant to be,)
Cold water, please accept my thanks,
You have been very kind to me.

Ah! said cold water, don't thank me;
Far up the hillside lives the spring
That sends me forth with generous hand
To gladden every living thing.
I'll thank the spring, then, said the boy,
And gracefully he bowed his head.
Oh, don't thank me, my little man,
The spring with silvery accents said.

Oh, don't thank me—for what am I
Without the dew and summer rain?
Without their aid I ne'er could quench
Your thirst, my little boy, again.
Oh, well, then, said the little boy,
I'll gladly thank the rain and dew.
Pray, don't thank us—without the sun
We could not fill one cup for you.

Then, Mr. Sun, ten thousand thanks
For all that you have done for me.
Stop! said the sun with blushing face,
My little fellow, don't thank me,
'Twas from the ocean's mighty stores
I drew the draught I gave to thee.
Oh, ocean, thanks! then said the boy—
It echoed back, Not unto me.

Not unto me, but unto Him
Who formed the depths in which I lie.
Go, give thy thanks, my little boy,
To Him who will thy wants supply.
The boy took off his cap, and said,
In tones so gentle and subdued,
Oh, God, I thank Thee for this gift,
Thou art the giver of all good.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

There dwelt in California, some years ago, three fellows, wild fellows enough, who had seemingly linked their fortunes for better or for worse, and who, whatever their luck, were constantly in each other's company.

These young men were Charles Chester, Harry Bray and Edward Warren. They were more brotherly than many brothers, more akin than many kinsmen. True to each other, even when women and money were between them. Damon and Pythias, with a twin Pythias added. For a long while they had been very poor; at last fortune favored them. Each had a certain sum, by no means contemptible, stowed away in the leathern belt he wore about his waist. Each carried a gold watch, and each wore a suit of clothes supposed by himself to be the latest style and choicest fashion. Moreover, their revolvers were perfect, silver-mounted and rejoicing in a multiplicity of barrels; for without these it would be quite impossible to maintain a position in this quarter of the world in any society.

How they came by these possessions, we will not inquire into too particularly. They were neither burglars nor highwaymen, but dice and betting may have helped them to the winning of their little fortunes. They were not over scrupulous; but they would have knocked any man down who had neglected to address them as gentlemen, and used those wonderful revolvers promptly on any "stranger," who objected to drinking with them; and consequently, stood rather high in the community. Certainly in their conduct to each other they were faultlessly honorable and miraculously generous.

One day soon after "luck" had come to its rest, a letter directed in a woman's tremulous hand to "Charles Chester," was handed to that member of the trio, in the presence of the other two. The young fellow seized it eagerly, read it through, and tearing off his belt, spread its contents before him upon the table, and counted it over. Having done so he burst into tears, and very unwisely and profanely cursed himself for extravagance, and requested for himself all sorts of uncomfortable things here and hereafter, a proceeding which seems to relieve some men extremely, though why, it would puzzle the unenlightened to declare.

The cause of all this, as his comrades soon discovered, was that his mother had written to him from her little farm in a Southern State to tell him a doleful tale of sickness, death among the stock, etc., and a final crash. A mortgage was almost due, and, as the old people would find it impossible to meet it, they would be sold out and left homeless in their old age. "It will kill your father," wrote the mother, "and I will die with him."

"I did it all," said the young fellow, sobbing openly. "My debts and my wild ways encumbered them at first, and now look."

And he pointed to the gold upon the table, and began his profane litany again. The mortgage was three thousand dollars, and he had but two thousand.

"Is that all?" cried Ned Warren, hauling out his belt.

"Good heaven! What does he take us for?" cried Harry Bray, furiously. "Five hundred a piece, and the expenses of the journey are about the figure. There, go to the old folks. We'll see about your horses while you pack your bag."

This set the other at his oaths again; but in joyful style this time. They were trumps and bricks, and by everything he could think of he'd do for them if there were any need of it.

"He'd pay them back, if he lived, and he'd—he'd—bless them," and so choked off into sobs again, at which they left him to recover, returned with a horse and a well-filled pocket flask, and saw him set forth upon his mission as though the "old folks" had been their old folks also.

They waited for news from him, but none came. They waited quietly at first, then impatiently; at last they heard this: He had never been seen at home, or by any one who knew him since the day on which they had shook hands with him. Some terrible fate had befallen him in the lonely places over which he had journeyed alone. To doubt him never entered their minds. That he was true to them as they to him they well knew; and one thought filled each mind. They must discover his fate, and, if it were what they supposed, avenge him.

So one bright morning, well mounted, well armed, and followed by a favorite dog, a hound which would by no means be left behind, the two set forth in search of their lost comrade. They took the road he must have taken, and asked at every tavern and cabin for news of him. One old man remembered him well; another pointed out the dangerous place in the road leading past a precipice to a man of his lost friend's description, but at that point the clue was lost. After much travel and many inquiries our comrades began to fear that they should have paused to examine the rocks and ravines at the foot of the precipice alluded to ere they proceeded further, and determined to turn back and do so. They came to this resolution about nightfall, and just as they reached the borders of a little farm, which bore evidence of careful tillage. Upon this land also stood a farm house; from the crevices in the shutters of which streamed long bars of ruddy lamp-light, and whence the sound of music was plainly heard. It was the only dwelling within sight.

"We will stay here," said one friend to another, "until dawn, and then return."

That the house was not an inn did not matter to either of them. Hospitality was never refused in the land to any one at that day.

They rode boldly up to the gate and gave a loud halloo. In an instant the door opened, and they could see within a sudden panic in a lively dance, as all heads turned to see what had caused this interruption.

"Can you let us sleep here to-night?" inquired one of the friends, as one asks who fears no refusal.

"Certainly, gentlemen," said a pleasant voice. "You're welcome. You'll find a stable there, and corn for your horses. Our man Jack is on the floor to-night; but here is a lantern if you'll tend to yourself."

"All right, stranger," said Harry, "and thank you, too."

And the two men led their horses into a stable, already full. Ned watered them and secured them for the night, and would have left the place at once; but that one of the animals attracted Harry's attention. He turned back to look at him; examined him from head to foot, turned red and pale, and suddenly clutched Ned's arm.

"You remember the horse we bought for Charles Chester?" he asked.

"Yes," said Ned.

"Look at the fellow," said Harry. "Yes, the very one. The star on his forehead, the scar on his foreleg, the color, the height! Ned, it's Charley's horse!"

"It is the horse," said Ned, slowly. "Harry, if Charley had lived to go, and his horse would have gone with him."

"The owner of this animal may know all we need to hear," said Harry. "It won't be good news, Ned."

Ned shook his head, and sadly and slowly the men went toward the house. They found the dancing at its height, and that this was the home-coming of the farmer's bride—a pretty young woman, with rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes, of whom the stalwart bridegroom seemed very fond and proud.

"Sit down, strangers," said the old man near the door; "You've come at a merry time, and don't get much attention. My son is just the happiest fellow out, I believe—got no eyes for nobody but that gal. You see they've been waitin' quite a spell, and he had no luck, none at all, and it seemed he'd got to give it up; but six months back he had a streak. Wonderful! Explained it, but I don't remember; so he sends for her and me from Connecticut. She's an orphan gal, and soon as the school term was over—she was teaching, ye know—she come. This is their warming, and them's the neighbors. They all like Ike. Ike's a good fellow—a real good fellow, though I say it. Take a nip, stranger—don't be afraid of the jug. I'll fill it again. Why, what ails your dog?"

The dog left outside was howling rather fearfully.

"Wants to come in perhaps," said Ned; "but it mighn't be agreeable to the ladies."

"Bring him in," said the old man; but the dog wouldn't come.

He stood beside a patch of grass in the garden, howling woefully, and scratching and tearing with all his might. Leave the spot he would not, and the friends, as they saw him, and remembered the horse in the stable, felt the blood curdle in their veins.

"Whose horse is that with a white star on the forehead and a scar on his fore leg—a handsome brown horse, with wonderful eyes?" whispered Harry to to the old man.

"That's my son's horse," said the old man.

"Where did he buy it?" asked the other.

"Don't know," said the old man, laughing childishly. "Come to him with the rest of good luck, six months ago."

Again the dog outside began to howl. Again the friends felt cold chills creep over them.

"Where are we to sleep?" asked Edward of the old man. "We don't want supper—we need rest."

"I'll show you," said the old man. "The house will be full to-night, but you'll not mind roughing it."

And he led the way to an upper room, where a rude bed was already spread.

"Just lie down here, strangers," he said. "There's a blanket, if you are cold, and there's a candle. Good-night."

The two men had sought solitude, that they might commune with each other. Yet now they could only say, "What does this mean?" They had said it as many ways a dozen times, when Harry, by accident, lifted his eyes to a peg in the rough wall. On it hung something which riveted his gaze with horror. Yet it was an object quite common and innocent in itself—only a pair of brown saddle-bags, rather new in appearance, and with the letters "C. C." on the side.

"Look!" he cried. "Look, Edward!"

"The other, in turn, stood mute for a time, then gave a spring toward the peg, tore the bags down, and opened them. Within they found garments they knew their friend had worn, an empty belt, and the daguerreotype of a young girl of whom they had known him to be very fond.

"His horse in the stable, his saddle-bags and belt here, the dog howling on the turf without—what does it all mean?" cried Harry again.

And Ned answered, "We shall soon see," and strode into the great room where the dancing was going on, and up to the bridegroom, standing at the head of a Virginia reel, with his bride's hand in his own.

"Stop a bit," cried Ned, furiously. "We have a question to ask. Whose horse is that in the stable—the brown one, with a star on the forehead?"

"Mine," said the farmer, turning deadly white.

"And the saddle-bags up stairs marked C. C.?"

The farmer turned paler.

"Gentlemen," he said, "wait until morning and I will explain everything."

"We choose to learn the truth for ourselves," said the young man fiercely.

"You had a mysterious streak of luck six months ago, I understand from the old man there," said Harry Bray.

"Not very mysterious," said the farmer. "I went to the diggings and fell in with a nugget. As for the horse, I found him, and the saddle-bags too. If you know to whom they belong, he's welcome to them."

"They belong to the man you murdered for his money, and buried in the ground yonder where the dog is howling," cried Harry Bray. "We are going to dig there, and Heaven help any man who hinders us."

"Dig where you choose," said the farmer. "I am too well known here to be afraid of two madmen. I murdered a man—I? There, I'm a fool to care for such words! Dig, confound you! Many a horse strays in the woods; many a man has found one, as well as I. Come, neighbors, set the fiddles going, and let these madmen dig."

And the spades sank into the turf, and the terrified guests gathered around, and the bride clung to her husband's arm, and the music was dumb, and the dog's long, melancholy wail filled the air, and at last, just as the rising moon flung her yellow beams upon the newly dug earth, Ned Warren cried in an awful voice, "He is here!" And the two friends lifted from the grave that which had been a man, with long, death-grown black hair falling down over his shoulders.

He had been shot in the head and through the heart, and there was no doubt in either mind that it was the body of their lost friend. The farmer seemed petrified with horror; the bride fell into a death-like swoon; the guests fell away from their host and looked at him askance. The old father tore his hair and pleaded for mercy. But there was no mercy in any heart there. The avengers were all powerful. The great room, adorned for festival and mirth, was turned into a court room. The women were thrust from it; the men remained. On the raised stand where the fiddler had been seated, Harry Bray now took his seat in the character of Judge Lynch. The jury was named, the mock trial hurried on, and the accused called upon to answer. He pleaded not guilty. He denied any knowledge of the fact that a grave lay so near his house. He persisted in the repetition of the statement that he had found the horse and saddle-bags, but he admitted that there had been money in the latter.

He stood before them looking very unlike a murderer, calling on them for justice—calling on God to witness the truth of his words; speaking of his young wife and his old father; bidding his neighbors remember that he had never done them any wrong.

But Judge Lynch has no mercy, no compassion, no belief in the possibility of false accusation; and this Judge Lynch was an avenger of blood. The end was what the end of such a trial generally is; the sentence the awful one of death; and in less than three hours from the moment on which they first saw the bridegroom happy and blithe, standing with his bride at the head of the gay country dance, his body dangled, a horrible sight to look upon, from the branch of the trees that shadowed what all believed to be his victim's grave!

When all was over they found the old father dead in his chair, beside the fire-place, and found among the women a hopeless, gibbering maniac, whom they would hardly have known for the rosy-cheeked young bride.

They were revenged, but at what cost! The two men returned to their homes, saddened and altered, yet not remorseful, for they had but revenged their comrade; and this, to them, seemed common justice. The legal code of border life had been adhered to; but for the last look at the mad bride they could scarce have recognized how awful all this had been. They lived on together friends, still speaking often of poor Charley, and fancying that in some other world he might even know how well they had revenged themselves upon his murderer.

And so five years passed: and one day the two went together in a coffee room kept by an old Frenchman in the city of San Francisco, and, being in low spirits, out of luck, and with slender purses, were sitting disconsolate over their meat, when a hand came down on each shoulder, and a voice cried, "Found at last! I've searched the city for you. Heaven bless you, dear boys!"

It was Charley Chester, handsome and cheerful, well-dressed, and well-to-do-looking; Charles Chester, whose murderer they believed themselves to have lynched years before.

And this was the story he told them, wondering at their pallid looks and awe struck silence the while.

The money he had with him being in gold, and heavy for his belt, he placed it in his saddle-bags, and had completed many miles of his journey, when, near a new but apparently deserted dwelling, he saw a traveler who had been set upon by ruffians and robbed and wounded. He had crawled to this house for assistance, but found it empty, and now lay dying on the road. Charles Chester had done his best for the poor fellow, but without avail. He died in his arms just as the sun went down; and, by the fading light, he had dug a grave on the turf before the empty house, and there buried him. There was no ode within sight, and his fears of attack upon himself warned him to hurry on; but when the last sad rites were over, and he turned to mount his horse, it was gone. The animal had escaped in the woods, and, with night coming on, all search seemed hopeless. The money in the saddle-bags rendered the loss a maddening one. He threaded his way through the underbrush, calling his steed by name, until total darkness hid all objects; and, at last, striking his head violently against a tree, he fell to the ground insensible. When he came to he found himself lying in a wagon, to which he had been conveyed by a kinkly German, who could speak no English. In falling, he had broken his arm, and was very weak and ill. Before he was able to communicate his story to any one, all hope of recovering either horse or money had deserted him. He was in despair. He could not assist his parents. To return to his friends would be to throw himself upon their bounty. This he would not do; and his struggles had been great at first, but they were over now. He had done well by 'the old folks,' and had returned to pay his debts and resume his friendship with his old friends."

He was with them; he lived. The farmer had doubtless told the truth. He did not even know why the turf had grown so green in the little yard, and he had found the horse at large in the woods, and knew nothing of the rider; but the thing had been done, and could not be undone—the dead brought to life, or the maniac's mind restored, or the blood washed from the murderers' hands.

Of course they told their story, and of course they believed their friendship as warm as ever; but it was not so. They never meet each other again as of yore. The two could not forget the man they had lynched to avenge their friend, and doubted the propriety of his returning alive and merry to trouble their consciences, which were quite enough as long as he seemed dead. As for Charles Chester, he cleared the murdered man's memory among his neighbors, and saw the wild-eyed, white-faced woman, who only shook her head and moaned and muttered when he spoke to her; and then he, too, was content to say good-bye to those who had done the deed—albiet for his sake.

So the three parted, each going his own way; for thus it seemed easier to forget the deed done by Judge Lynch and his court on the day of the bride's coming home.

How to Commence Bee-keeping.

There are numbers perhaps who would be pleased with from one to three colonies of bees if they knew how to do it without much trouble. If they could have two or three hives that would give them an average 100 pounds, with no trouble of hiving swarms, and little trouble with their bees but to put the surplus boxes in the hive in the spring, and exchange them as filled for empty boxes; then remove them in the fall and fit their hives for winter, they would be glad to keep one or two hives or more.

Do not imagine that twenty large hives can be kept, and each give a hundred pounds of surplus, in a field where but twenty swarmers in small hives have been kept, and some of them have starved to death in the winter. If the field has given to the swarmers an average of ten pounds of surplus and their support, twenty non-swarmers' hives could only get what the fields yield.

Begin say with two hives the first year, or more, according to the number of bees in the neighborhood around you. Build or buy as many large hives, with boxes of an aggregate capacity of 140 pounds or more: take them to a neighbor who keeps bees; agree with him to transfer one of his best colonies to each new hive in the following manner:

When the first swarm issues, hive it in the new hive; then set the new hive in the place of the old one. Take out all the comb from the old hive, driving out all the bees; the will go into the new hive. Put all the worker brood in a box, and place it in communication with the new hive, so that they can easily pass from one to the other; they will hatch out all the brood, and make a very large colony. The queen will go into breeding with all the activity evinced in a new swarm. All the brood that was left to support the old colony, with the force that was left in the old hive, will gather, if in a field, 100 pounds of surplus. Fill each of your new hives in this manner with bees, and they will fill your boxes with honey, if the season is a favorable one.

If you prefer it, you can have comb and all transferred from the old hive to your new hive. But it will be safe, and I think safest, to wait for swarming, and then transfer them as above directed.

If the boxes are all on at the time of hiving the new swarm, the queen may injure one or two of the top boxes of honey by depositing blood in them. If the colony is quite large, there will be very little danger of it. If the colony is below medium, it will be best to remove the top boxes, covering the breeding apartment with a brood. After the first season, the queen having established her nursery in the center of the hive, there will be little danger of brood in the box. In this way a man can secure a hive and colony of bees for say, including boxes, about eighteen or twenty dollars, that will give him from $25 to $40 worth of surplus honey annually, at 25 cents per pound. I am aware that this is a new way, but I think it is a good one, and a very easy one.—Jasper Hazen, in Country Gentleman.

"Does Raising Calves Pay?"

Of course not. A calf drinks milk when it can get it, and milk being cash at the cheese factory or in the general market, here is so much loss. If milk is withheld, something else must be substituted, and this involves expense—another loss. It takes time to feed them, and as "time is money," here is another item to go down in the debtor column. Now, is it not clear that raising calves does not pay? But, says one, the calf will make a cow or an ox—the one makes cheese and butter and finally beef; the other works several years and then goes to beef also. These facts must be taken into account by way of balancing the debtor column. If this is so, the question is a frivolous one, and about as reasonable as it would be to ask, "Does it pay to eat or live?"

This everlasting iteration "does it pay?" ought to be consigned to the tomb and be denied the promise of a resurrection. If calves are not raised, milk, butter, cheese and beef must soon be expunged from the gastronomical vocabulary. An interrogatory with respect to sheep, swine and poultry would be as pertinent as the one about calves, and must receive a kindred answer, while the human family, following the example of Nebuchadnezzar, would all go to grass! If this alternative is to be avoided, we must raise calves, sheep, swine, and poultry, passing by the stale cry of "will it pay?" as impertinent and out of place.—American Farmer.

Farm-Horses Without Shoes.

A correspondent of the Iowa Homestead writes:

"The late Dr. Beebe, of Dubuque, Iowa, whose untimely death was a great loss to the State, published an article in the Homestead on this subject, several years ago, that has been worth a good many times the subscription cost of the paper to me. Mr. B. took the ground that horses engaged in plowing and ordinary farm work, and hauling on unpaved streets or roads, did not need any shoes at all, and were better off without them. I had always been bothered with having horses' shoes changed at least six times a year, and, after reading his article, I took his advice, and left them off altogether. Except for heavy hauling in winter time, this is much the best plan, both for horse and the farmer's purse. In wet weather an unshod horse slips somewhat, but he is much more sure-footed in winter than with smooth shoes. Twice a year my horses' feet are trimmed off square and even, where they wear unequally, and this is all that is done to them. They are now in better condition than they were with shoes. I have saved at least $50 in cash by pursuing this course, and I am sure the horses are better off. After a thorough trial of this plan, it is recommended to every one owning a horse as exactly the thing."

Microscopic Engraving.

Now that pigeon posts have come into fashion, microscopic writing has risen in estimation. It is a revival of an art that has been highly esteemed during the last hundred and fifty years, although only occasionally practised. We have in our possession many specimens of the art, chiefly consisting of the Creed, the Commandments, the Lord's Prayer in seven languages, all in the minutest characters, and within the space of a sixpence or shilling. Occasionally, the writing is made to take the form of engraved lines in a portrait; and one of the most curious specimens of this particular adaptation of the art of microscopic writing is to be found in "The Book of Common Prayer, Engraved and Printed by J. Stuart," in 1717. The whole volume is a curiosity, each page having been engraved from a distinct plate—said to have been of silver—and ornamented with illustrations and devices. The frontispiece represents a bust of George the First, the lines in which are composed of microscopic writing, consisting of the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, the Commandments, the prayer for the royal family, and the twenty-first Psalm. These are so engraved as to appear, at the first glance, like the ordinary lines in a copper-plate engraving; and yet the writing can be distinctly read.

HOW TO MANAGE SPRING PIGS.—In answer to this question, put by one of its contributors, the American Agriculturist has the following:

"It depends on the breed, the food at command, the conveniences for feeding, the probable price of pork next fall, and the price a year hence. We should premise, however, that in any case the pigs should have all they will eat of some kind of food. The only difference to be made between growing pigs and fattening pigs is in the character of the food. A fattening pig requires rich, concetrated food; a growing pig, a more bulky and less nutritious food; but, in either case, the pig, to do well, must have all it will eat. If you have a small-boned, well-bred pig, such a grade as Essex, or Berkshire, or Suffolk, we think it would be far more profitable, as a rule, to fatten spring pigs than to winter them over. Let them have the run of a clover pasture, all the milk and slop from the house, and soak all the corn and other grain in water twenty-four hours before feeding. If well bred, such treatment should give you pigs that will dress 300 pounds by the 1st of December. On the other hand, if you have a coarse, large-boned breed of pigs, the better plan will be to winter them over. In this case, give them the run of a good clover pasture, plenty of water, what waste from the house you have to spare, and a little grain to keep them growing as rapidly as possible."

TIME FOR COWS TO COME IN.—A cow that drops her calf in April is of more value than one that comes in earlier in the year, with the same care and feed. If your cows drop their calves in February, or the 1st of March, you will have to feed largely with grain, roots, &c., the rest of the feeding season, and you will make an article of butter which must be sold immediately, as you cannot keep spring butter, nor can you make butter as cheaply with the mercury at zero or below, as when thirty to sixty above. By the first of June, whether you have fed extra or not, your cows will fall off in quantity and quality of milk, and you will have a small yield of butter through the best part of the season; when, if they come in six or eight weeks later, they would have gone out to grass heavy and strong, and capable of the best quality of butter. By the 1st of October your cows will be nearly or quite dry, when, if they had dropped their calves in April, you would have found that October was the most profitable month of the season. And further, you will find that this month and the next are best in which to feed grain to cows. All cows in a herd should drop their calves as near the same time as possible. If one should drop her calf after you have commenced to pack and put away butter, do not put her milk with that of the others for two weeks or more, as it is impossible to keep butter made from it, and it will damage the rest. This is one very common source of an occasional bad tub of butter.

HOW TO MAKE BOYS GOOD FARMERS.—The American Agriculturist says: Induce them to take an interest in the farm, in the implements, in the stock; tell them all your plans, your successes and failures; give them a history of your own life and what you did, and how you lived when a boy; but do not harp too much on the degenerated character of young men of the present age; praise them when you can, and encourage them to do still better. Let them dress up in the evening instead of sitting down in their dirty clothes in a dining-room. Provide plenty of light. Thanks to kerosene, our country homes can be as brilliantly lighted as the gas-lit houses in the city. Encourage the neighbors to drop in evenings. Talk agriculture rather than politics; speak of the importance of large crops, of good stock, of liberal feeding, and of the advantage of making animals comfortable, rather than of the hard times, low prices, high wages. Above all, encourage the boys to read good agricultural books. Papers are well enough, but an intelligent boy wants something more. Get him some good agricultural book to study. Read it with him, and give him the benefit of your experience and criticism. When he has mastered this, buy him another. In our own case, we owe our love for farming principally to the fact that our father talked to us of everything that was doing on the farm; answering all the questions, and encouraging, rather than refusing, our childlike desire to help him to plow, to chop, to let off water, and fire the brush heap.

INDIA RUBBER FOR GRAFTING.—Some of the English gardeners have successfully used strips of India rubber in the place of grafting wax, being neater, more perfect and not soiling the fingers. Sheets are purchased in market for sixpence per square foot. They are about as thick as brown paper. They are obtained of the manufacturers of this article before it is applied to muslin and other surfaces. The strips cut from it are about an inch long and an eighth of an inch wide, for small grafting, the pieces stretching two or three times their first length. The ends adhere when pressed firmly with the thumb and nail, the sheet having been previously washed and wiped dry.

PLANT TREES.—We do not mean fruit-trees merely, for those you will be likely to plant for the sake of the fruit. But plant shade-trees. Do not neglect it; plant them now, in the [illegible] time. Do not argue that it takes them too long to grow, and that you will not live to enjoy them. There is an immediate satisfaction in seeing them begin to grow and stretch forth their green branches. And it is not unpleasant to think that the small elm and oak, which you now put in the ground, will live when you are dead, and that your children and grandchildren will sit under their shade, and bless you for its coolness.

Grant's Respect for Public Sentiment.

Perhaps the most characteristic trait of U. S. Grant is his total blindness and utter deafness to public sentiment. He once made use of an expression, which was caught up and widely distributed by his partisans as an evidence of his profound regard for the people's authority, to the effect that "the will of the people is the law of the land." The sentiment, without some explanation of its meaning, which Mr. Grant did not condescend to give, is of course unmitigated nonsense. But it served the purpose of a partisan catch-phrase for a time, and was then forgotten, both by Mr. Grant and his over-zealous friends.

Mr. Grant was not then President. Since he became President, the will of the people has been among the very last subjects of his inquiry. The wishes of U. S. Grant, and the interests of his family relations, have been, if not the law of the land, at least the rule of the Presidential action and behavior. Very few of his official appointments would have been made had he consulted or respected public sentiment. Had his declaration concerning the will of the people meant anything more than a catch-phrase for demagogues, he would not have espoused the "Fifteenth Amendment" in direct violation of the most solemn pledges of the party that elected him. Had he respected public sentiment, he could not have commanded the political degradation of Charles Sumner. Had he felt the least wish to be guided by the will of the nation in his administrative policies, he would not have entered upon the San Domingo scheme, and would not still be prosecuting that scheme in obstinate defiance of an overwhelming public sentiment.

In national as well as individual affairs, it takes two parties to make a bargain. In the matter of purchasing the island of San Domingo, the parties to the bargain are, or should be, the inhabitant owners of that island and the inhabitant owners of the United States. It matters not what brilliant exhibit of benefits, to accrue to either or both parties from the consummation of the trade, some enterprising ring of speculators, or some susceptible board of commissioners, may present, if the people on both sides, or on either side, are opposed to the bargain.

That public sentiment in this country is hostile to the San Domingo scheme, is a proposition which admits of no doubt whatever. And the extreme measures that have been taken not only by Mr. Baez (the nominal autocrat of a portion of San Domingo) to repress all expression of hostility to the scheme, but also by Mr. Grant, in sending ships of war to that island to overawe the rulers of another portion, go with all the force of positive evidence to prove that public sentiment there is no more favorable to the scheme than it is here. Nominally, it is true, Mr. Grant only proposes to buy that half or two-thirds of the island which is presumptively controlled by Baez; but no one, not even the most ignorant negro inhabitant of the island, is so stupid as not to understand that the acquisition of Dominica means the acquisition of Hayti also. Territorially, Dominica is the major part, as 18,000 are more than 10,000 square miles. But Hayti comprises nearly five-sixths of all the inhabitants on the island, and these five-sixths are, to a man, hostile to the annexation scheme, and ready to resist it by force of arms. Even if it be conceded that every inhabitant of Dominica whom Baez has not banished, or who has not fled for his life to Hayti, or joined the "rebel" army of Cabral, is an annexationist (a consession of what is certainly not a fact), it still appears that only a minority of about one-sixth of the inhabitants of San Domingo favor the Fabens-Grant-Baez scheme.

Against this overwhelming hostility of public sentiment in both countries, two speculative autocrats persist in forcing to a consummation their nefarious scheme of trade in nationalities; one stifling popular opposition by decrees of banishment and death against all who dare to question his right; the other sending ships of war to intimidate and overawe the hostile majority that do not acknowledge him as ruler; the other also, in his own country, sentencing to political degradation influential Senators who oppose his scheme, packing Senate Committees in its interest, and descending from the dignity of his high office to enact the part of a lobby agent who seeks to compass the passage of a villainous law against the public good, and in spite of popular hostility. Such is the light in which the country looks upon this measure of imperial villainy.—Chicago Times.

WHILE a Congressional caucus is squabbling over the details of a bill to confer upon U. S. Grant the powers of imperial personal government over the States and people, U. S. Grant is demonstrating to the country that the President is already clothed with all the power that is necessary, or that the Constitution intends he shall possess, to repress domestic violence in the States. His proclamation to the disturbers of the public peace in South Carolina sets forth the law, and proves that the law is all that an honest President needs. He warns the rioters in South Carolina to disperse, and gives them due notice that, if they do not heed the warning, so much armed force as may be necessary to disperse them will be employed. This he proposes to do, and may lawfully do, because the Governor of South Carolina (the Legislature of the State not being in session) has made application for the Federal aid, according to the express provision of the Constitution upon this subject.

Why may not every other Governor do the same, and why would he not, if there be, as is pretended, domestic violence in the Southern States which the State authorities cannot suppress? All but two or three of the Southern Governors are of Mr. Grant's partisan faith. And it is a very remarkable fact that in those Southern States whose Governors are most acceptable to the Radical party, there is the loudest complaint of domestic violence. In Mississippi and the Carolinas, whose Governors are men after Grant's own partisan heart, there is the loudest hullabaloo about "Ku-Klux outrages," while in the adjoining State of Virginia, whose Governor is a genuine Democrat, no complaint of the

AN entertaining farmer, always on the look-out for information regarding hi profession, seeing a work advertised un der the title of "Rain on the Mown Grass," sent for it, and found it was volume of sermons.

"HALLOA! Bob, how are you?" Bob who had been in jail for debt for some months past, answered: "Very well thank you; but I have been in trouble you know." "What trouble ailed you?" "A troubled past in durance."

NO man ever took his place in the barber's chair, who was not informed by the barber that he will have rain soon, or that the weather would soon be pleasanter. The reason of this is that the barber is a professional bayrumeter.

WHEN a lady condescends to a practical joke, it is generally a very neat one. M. Boncort, the rich financier, was very stingy to his wife in the matter of pin money. One day a lady, closely veiled, and very anxious not to be recognized, called upon him and borrowed a large sum, leaving her diamonds as a pledge. It was his wife.

A DEPUTATION of the Maine Legislature, on a visit to the Insane Asylum at Augusta, while walking through the corridors, were greeted by one of the lunatics, who was peering through the gratings of a cell door, with, "Well, I declare, if here ain't the animals from Noah's Ark!"

A PROVIDENCE paper exclaims, with characteristic grace: "A year ago today was just such another day as yesterday was—only more so." This reminds us of the old lady who directed the attention of her husband to a pair of twins, remarking, as she did so, "How much those two children do look alike, especially the one this way."

A CONNECTICUT lawyer, who wished to cross a river on the ice, was told that it would be entirely safe to make the attempt if he crawled over on his hands and knees. Anxious to go, he humbled himself accordingly, and had laboriously got half way across when he was overtaken by a man driving along leisurely in a buggy. The rapidity with which he assumed an upright position was startling to the driver.

AN old lady, slightly blind, while engaged in a futile attempt to sew buttons on young Augustus' new jacket, remarked: "Drat these buttons; I can't find the holes, and they split all to pieces every time I stick the needle into 'em." To which replied young Augustus: "Now, look 'ere, Granny! you just let my peppermint drops alone. You've split mor'n half of 'em already."

THE ATTENTION of the musical world has been much attracted by the improvements in organ making introduced by GEORGE WOODS & Co., in their NEW STYLES of Parlor and Vestry Organs. They invite the attention of all interested in music, and the elevation of all that pertains to it, to their advertisement in another column. All organists, teachers, and music dealers are invited to examine into the merits of their instruments, particularly as shown in their latest style of Number Thirteen Celeste Organ.

PERTAINING TO PLASTER.—At a late meeting of the New York Farmers' Club, W. M. "It is claimed that by putting it in with the seed it helps the crop from the outset, giving a start which keeps it ahead of surface-

AUBURN IND.....MARCH 30, 1871

It would have appeared the "summit of ridiculosity" to Mr. Charles Sumner, Senator from Massachusetts and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, had any one told him at the time when he advised the late Mr. Stanton to "stick" that the very next administration, and that, too, the radical administration of Mr. Grant, would deprive him of an office which he had held for ten years. Yet such is the fact.

A REPUBLICAN exchange felicitates itself that "the Democratic roosters crowed too soon" over New Hampshire because Weston was not chosen by the people. This is terrible, and we didn't suppose Democratic roosters would do so. The Democrats have elected all three members of Congress—it is too bad there were no more to elect—they have also carried a majority of the Legislature, which Legislature will choose Mr. Weston Governor, and, altogether, it does not look as if the "Democratic roosters crowed too soon."

The Democratic press to-day contends for the principles which lie at the very foundation of all free government. Never was it more important to sustain them. No intelligent man fails to see that the tendancy of the few last years has been toward an arbitary and centralized form of government, such as usurped power, and flourished for awhile, and then fell through its own rottenness, in France. It was there called Imperialism; here it is called a "consolidated government." Its advocates have over-stepped the safeguards that men of every shade of political opinion but lately held to be necessary for the protection of private and public liberty. The obligation of law is impaired by the disregard of it, not merely by humble, individual wrongdoers, but by men high in place, who are charged with the duty of enforcing it. But how can they enforce it on others when they violate it themselves? Yet there has grown up a taste and an indulgence for acts of spasmodic violence, instead of the calm, regular administration of the duly enacted laws. Men in office claim an exemption from it, when in truth it is by them that it ought to be most sacredly observed. The functionary who sends bayonets to do his unlawful errand at the polls, encourages every private malefactor who arms his hand to compass some bad purpose of his own. It is in the defence of civil liberty, and free, popular government that the Democratic press stands to-day upon principles cherished by every patriot and thinker and statesmen whose name deserves the respect of mankind. Upon the vindication and endurance of those principles depend the safety fo society, the happiness and dignity of the citizen, the progress of the world. In the battle we fight for them, we ask the aid of every good citizen who cherishes the free institutions of his country, and intends to do his part to maintain them.

Prospects Brighter.

New Hampshire has pronounced against Radicalism. Another State has awakened up to a consideration of State rights, and enrolled herself on the side of Democratic Government, and constitutional legislation. It augurs well for the future that a New England State, should at a time like the present, give such encouragement to the Democracy to labor and wait for the day that is about to dawn. Every election now gives evidence that the people are tiring of Radicalism. The Radicals are cutting one another's throats, politically, in Congress, and the people are condemning them at the polls. It is a time for patriotic rejoicing. There is hope for the country in this voice that is coming from the people. There is ground for joy when we find the rank and file of Radicalism deserting the rotten hulk that is sinking down. We have always believed in the people. It is only the leaders and office-holding cormorants of that party that we have opposed. The masses of each party are about alike in honesty and patriotism. Only the Democracy are wiser. Now as the Radicals have become acquainted with the true character and the motives of their leaders they are not at all sorry to see their power waning. "I am glad of it," said a prominent Radical to us the other day, as we told him the verdict of New Hampshire, and he spoke but the wish of thousands and tens of thousands over the land, who will no longer support the leaders of that party.

A Puzzled Dutchman.

A Wisconsin secular paper contains the following good story:

One who does not believe in immersion for baptism was holding a protracted meeting, and one night preached on the subject of baptism. In the course of his remarks he said, some believed it necessary to go down into the water, and come up out of it to be baptized. But this he claimed to be a fallacy, for the preposition "into" of the scriptures, should be rendered differently, for it does not mean into at all times. Moses, he said, we are told, went up into the mountain, and the Saviour was taken into a high mountain, etc. Now we do not suppose that either went into the mountain, but upon it. So with going down into the water, it means simply going down close by or near the water, and being baptizedin the ordinary way, by sprinkling.

He carried this idea out fully, and in due season and style closed his discourse, when an invitation was given to any one who felt so disposed to rise and express their thoughts. Quite a number of the brethren arose and said that they were glad that they had been present on this occasion, that they were well pleased with the sound sermon they had just heard, and felt their souls greatly blessed. Finally a corpulent gentleman of Teutonic extraction, a stranger to all, arose and broke a silence, that was most painful, as follows:

"Mister-breacher, I ish so glad I vash here to-night, for I has had explained to my mind some things I never could belief pefore. We read, mister breacher, that Taniel vas cast into the ten of lions, and came out alife. Now I neber could beliefe dat for de wilt peasts would shust eat him right off, put now it is ferry clear to mint. He vash shust close py or neare to, and tid not get into de ten at all. O, I vash so glad I vash here to night!

Again we reat dat de Hebrew childæn vas cast into de firish furnace, and dat air alwais look't like a peeg story too, for they would have been burnt up; but it ish all plain to my mint now, for they were shust cast clost py or near to, and tid not get into de firish furnace. O, I vash so glad I vash here to-night!

And den, mister breacher it ish said dat Jona vost cast into de sea and into de whalish pelly. Now I neaver could pelief dat. It seems like a peeg feesh story, put it ish plain to my mint now, he vash not taken into de whalish pelly at all, put shust shumped onto his pack and rode ashore. O, I vash so glad I vash here to-night!

And now, mister breacher, if you will shust explain two more passages of scriptures I shall pe, O, happy dat I vash heare to-night! One of them is vere it saish de vickek shall be cast into a lake dat burns vith fire and primshtone alvays. O, mister breacher, shall I pe cast into dat lake, if I am vicked, or shust close py or near to, shust near to, shust neare enough to be comfortable? O, I hopes you tell me I shall pe cast shust py a goot vay off, and I vill pe so glat I vash here to-night. The other passage is that is whic saish plessed are dey who do dese commandments, that dey may have right to de tree of life and enter through the gates into the city. O! tell me I shall gets into the the city and not shust close py or near enough to see vat I haye lost, and I shall pe so glat I vas heare to-night.

How to Make Farm Life Attractive.

1. By less hard work. Farmers often undertake more than they can do well, and consequenty work too early and too late.

2. By more system. The farmers should have a time to begin and stop labor. They should put more mind and machinery into their work They should theorize as well as practice and let both go together. Farming is healthy, moral, respectable; and, in the long run, may be made profitable. The farmer should keep good stock, and out of debt.

3. By taking care of health. Farmers have a healthy variety of exercise but too often neglect cleanliness, eat irregularly and hurriedly sleep in ill-ventilated apartments; and expose themselves needlessly to cold.

4. By adorning the home. Books, papers, pictures, music and reading should all be brought to bear upon the in-door family entertainments; and neatnees and comfort, order, shrubbery, flowers and fruits should harmonize all without. There would be fewer desertions of old homesteads if pains were taken to make them agreeable. Ease, order, health and beauty are compatible with farm life and were ordained to go with it.

It is stated that the German soldiers are returning to historic order.

JERUBEBA.

sent a special commission to that country to procure it in its native purity, and having found its wonderful curative properties to even exceed the anticipations formed by its great repntation, has concluded to offer it to the public, and is happy to state that he has perfected arrangements for a regular monthly supply of this wonderful plant. He has spent much time experimenting and investigating as to the most efficient preparation from it, for popular use, and has for some time used in his own practice with most happy results the effectual medicine now presented to the public as

Dr. Wells' Extract of Jeruheba

OFFICIAL PAPER of THE COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

THE roads are getting good.

PIGEONS are beginning to fly northward.

THE station house has received a coat of brown paint. Go one better.

BRING on your wood now that the roads are good.

SPRING CHICKENS will be ready by June.—They're just out.

THERE are only three hundred and twenty five days this year. The other forty are lent.

AN exchange says, "The first printers were Titans." There are a good many "tight uns" amoung them still.

SOME benevolent person should import a few more dogs here. There's one house in town that only has two. Poor folks.

LET somebody die that is willing and rich enough to bequeath $500 for a town clock. We could'nt, and nobody else is willing.

GEO. W. MAXWELL, ESQ., at Butler is agent for the COURIER, and any business with this office can be transacted by him, for all in that locality.

HORSE BILLS handsomely decorated and beautifully ornamented at the COURIER office. Bring any old horse along and we'll give you an exact picture of the one you want.

A CONTEMPORARY thinks it must be horrible on the battle-field, "to hear the stifled groans of the dying and the shrieks of the dead."

THE frame work of the building for the manufacture of staves, was put in position yesterday, and a large force is already at work in getting ready for the machinery.

AN Indiana girl on finding a man in her room at a hotel, picked him up and threw him out of the window.—Ohio Paper.

Yes, and she'll serve that editor the same way, if he'll come out here.

COLORED vails are not worn for dress.—When worn at all, blue is the best color. A yard of dotted net, hemmed all around, or edged with lace, is gathered on a string, and warn in front of the bonnet or hat.

THE Steam Flouring Mill, owned by C. C. Buss & Co., of this place, has been purchased by W. W. Griswold Esq., who we understand will manufacture on a large scale, for shipments. This will cause a demand for wheat here and doubtless improve the market.

SOME men are always putting things off. A Michigan man, eighty two years old, was run over and killed by a gravel train, though in his life he had many chances to be killed by nice passenger train, but he kept putting it off, and consequently got his eyes full of gravel.

WHEN visiting Fort Wayne, come and see the tremendous stock of Clothing at the Red Front Clothing House. Our prices will please you, and you will always be suited, as it is our aim to please all.

Mar. 9. ROTHSCHILDS & BRO.

IT is said that the earth is growing small so rapidly that in two thousand mil ion years there will be nothing left of it. This will keep on until they get this world narrowed down so people will have to move into Jersey.

PERSONAL.—We were pleased to meet in our sanctum last Tuesday, J. C. Loveland Esq., of the Franklin Printing Company, Rochester Ind. Mr. L. was some time ago connected with the printing interests in this county.

A YOUNG man started east this morning on a hunting expedition. He was well supplied with amunition—ten cents worth of powder and five cents worth of shot. We would advise the wild "critters" in the forests to give him a wide berth as he evidently means business.

A CEDAR RAPIDS man was having some home amusement with his wife by pounding her with an ax, when a neighbor put a bullet hole through him. He says when he gets well he will move away from that neighborhood and go to some place where neighbors will attend to their own business.

THE crying need of this country to-day is for skilled labor; and that father who neglects to provide his son with a useful trade and to see that he thoroughly masters it, does him a grevious wrong, and runs the risk of helping, by so much, to incsease the stock of idle and dependent, if not vicious, members of society.

MERCHANT TAILORING.—Our enterprising friend Chas. Klots has recently fitted up his establishment with a Merchant Tailoring department and he is now fully prepared to make to order, in the latest fashions, coats, pants and vests of every discription. As Charley is recognized as a master cutter, there is no doubt but that he can give good fits and excellent satisfaction.

MESSRS. ROOT & Co., make a new announcement in another column of this issue. They are the old reliable dry goods firm of Fort Wayne, gentleman of the highest integrity, and on whom you can depend. They keep the very best stock of goods in the city—none of your shoddy,—are selling at lower prices, and give the best bargains. Go and see them.

We acknowledge the receipt of a very handsome catalogue and engraving, from those enterprising seed merchants, Messrs. Briggs & Bros., of Rochester, New York.—It is certainly the most complete work of the kind published, and is handsomely embellished with engravings of all kinds of flowers etc. Those wanting seeds of this kind should send as above for circulars.

IT is believed by many that the habit of chewing gum grows on a person who indulges in it as much as drinking liquor, and a sudden breaking off is injudicious. A girl at Chicago, who had chawed regularly for years, swore off last week, and since that time she has had regular jim-jams, and has had to be set up with every night. A young man sits up with her, however, and so she don't mind it so much. Girls that want to be set up with had better quit chewing.

A MUSIC teacher once wrote that the "art of playing on the violin requires the nicest perception and the most sense of any art in the known world." Whereupon a Western editor comments thus: "The art of publishing a newspaper and making it pay, and at the same time making it please everybody beats fiddlin' higher than a kite."

RAILROAD MEETING.

A meeting in the interest of the Eel River Railroad, will be held at the Court House, in this place, next Saturday afternoon, at 1 o'clock. President Collins and other speakers will positively be present, and everybody should attend.

THE FIRST IN THE FIELD.—We have been making large additions to our retail department, and our stock is now all new and complete. Our entire stock of Clothing is new and fresh, as it has all been very recently purchased, and for cash only. We can now sell you Clothing lower than any other house in Fort Wayne. Don't fail to visit the Red Front Clothing House, No. 5, Keystone Bock, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mar. 9. ROTHSCHILDS & BRO.

JAMES E. GRAHAM, ESQ., Justice of the Peace, and a promising young attorney o Fort Wayne, gave us a call yesterday. Mr. Graham is one among the few who by their industry and gentlemanly behavior elevate their profession and make useful and influential members of society.

B. D. SKINNER ESQ., a prominent insurance agent, of Fort Wayne, also gave us a call last week, looking as handsome as ever.—Come again, gentleman, we are always glad to see our friends.

Public Meeting.

A Public meeting will be held at the Court House, next Saturday evening for the consideration of important business, in which every citizen is interested. It is hoped that everybody will arrange matters so as to be present, as there are several measures of public importance to be brought before the meeting.

MANY CITIZENS.

CHANGE.—The law partnership heretofore existing between Messrs. Moody & Petersor, has been dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Moody will attend to all matters pertaining to the firm, and will continue the practice of the law at the office recently occupied by them. We understand that Mr. Perterson will also remain in the practice, in our place. As young lawyers they have both established a good reputation, in their profession and will no doubt be found prompt and reliable in all their transactions.

I. LAFFERTY & SON, the enterprising clothiers and merchant tailors, of Fort Wayne, have just received a magnificent stock of readymade clothing and piece goods, and are now prepared to furnish their numerous customers with handsome suits of the latest styles. Call and examine their stock, corner of Calhoun & Columbia Sts.

TRUE, EVERY WORD.—We always hear about this season of the year, of the "terrible roads;" and everybody is condeming a country that has such muddy roads. We wish everybody to bear in mind this truth: Any country that has a rich and productive soil will always have muddy roads at certain seasons of the year. When the ground is so poor and barren that mud can not form, the land is hardly worth cultivating.

SAD ACCIDENT.—Wm. Smith Esq., residing about four miles North-west of town was so seriously injured by a horse, last Friday, as to be confined to his bed. He was about to make a visit to a neighbor on horse back, and in attempting to get on the beast, it gave a sudden start, Mr. S. lighting behind the saddle. This is all he can tell o the affair, as he was taken up insensible, a few minutes after and cared for. Though suffering severely it is hoped that under the careful treatment of Dr. Cowan he will be on his feet again in a week or two.

TREES.—Several of our enterprising farmers have responded to the call for shade trees, to be planted in the court yard, and have brought in several very fine specimens which were immediately attended to by our citizens. We hope others will do the same thing until we have enough to make a handsome grove. Grub out a nice sapling, and when coming to town bring it along. It don't cost much trouble, and years hence, it can be pointed to with pride as an index of your liberalty and enterprise. Bring them along.

CHAS. W. WELCHLIN, the celebrated Chicago Barber, now of this place, has been so unfortunate as to have discovered an invention that cannot fail to contribute largely to the comfort, hapiness, and luxury of the American people, or any other man. It consists of a little crook (not the one whose ebony hue has made it popular) but a simple "twist and go fetch it" concern, that gives relief during the sultriness of July. In the day time it holds up the window sash, and at night it bears down upon it like a thousand of brick. Charles is elected.—State, County and Township rights for sale at the Barber Shop.

POTATO BUGS.—A general resurrection of these pestiferous insects, is announced in many localities, and fears are entertained that they have opened an early campaign for the destruction of the coming potato crop Large numbers of them have already been exhumed from the soil, where they have been secreted during the winter. The only safe guard against their encroachements is said to be, early planting of early seeds, such as the early rose, goodrich, etc., as the war waged by these creatures, does not usually commence until the early crop is matured. Doubtless there will be other means discovered and resorted to, however, for their extermination, and we hope they will be both speedy and effective.

FIRE.—Last Thursday evening about 8 o'clock, the house of Mr. R. Elson, situated on Seventh Street was discovered to be on fire. Every effort was made to suppress it but without avail, and it was soon a mouldering ruin. The contents were mostly saved but were so much injured as to be almost worthless. A partial insurance on house and furniture will cover half of the total loss.

We hope this will act as a reminder to our citizens that we should supply ourselves with some little means for emergencies of this kind. Even a hook and ladder company does not exist, which would have been of great service at this fire. The want of water is another matter that should engage the attention of our town authorities. Some thing should be done immediately, for the suppression of other fires that may occur we know not when.

SEDUCTION AND DESERTION.—We have recently been acquainted with the particulars of a case wherein a young girl, of this county, has been cruely outraged, and then wantonly deserted by a very gentlemanly young man whose marriage with another, is announced in this issue. We should be very sorry to wrong this young man, by a false statement, but the story comes from good authority, and we have no hesitancy in denouncing these heinous crimes let them compromise whom they may. The parties reside near Butler Center, or New Era, as it is more recently called, the parents of the girl being as highly esteemed and respectable citizens as we have in the county. This young man has been paying his addresses to the daughter, for a long time, and as the sequel with the evident intention of accomplishing his designs upon her honor. By his assiduous attentions, he won her love and then under promise of marriage, it is asserted, seduced her from the path of virtue. But even yet there was a chance to save her from disgrace by the performance on his part of the promises he had made.—Doubtless in her agony she appealed to him to rescue her from the odium that was in store for her, but he tossed her aside like a plaything, and by his smiles and soft talk woed and won another, who now fills the place that this poor girl was entitled to hold. We regard this as a most villanious transaction and a day of retribution will surely follow. Even now the father of the wronged girl is on the track, prepared to met out a speedy punishment, and another tragedy may be soon added to the many already emenating from this source. We await further developments.

WATERLOO ITEMS.—The Press says, Messrs Best & McClellan, who have purchased the Stave Factory east of town, are making arrangements to opperate it, the present season, to its utmost capacity. This, in connection with the large establishment of Mr. Bowman, will make the stave business lively.

THE butcher shop of Mr. Shaw, of this place, was entered on Thursday night of last week, and smoked hams, to the value of between $30 and $50 were taken out.—Thieves are getting rather bold in their operations, and some of them will be afforded a chance to do the State some service before long.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Saturday last, while Mr. Jacob Brand was engaged in throwing down hay in his barn, his foot slipped and he fell, striking with his whole weight upon his side and back, across a joist. For some time after the accident he was insensible, and when he regained consciousness, he crawled down and attempted to get to the house, being unable to walk or call for help. After getting out of the barn he was seen by parties who came to his assistance. For several days afterward he remained in a very critical condition; but we learned yesterday that he was much better, and would probably recover.

TOO POOR.—Moore, of the Rural New Yorker, was sitting in his office, one afternoon some years ago, when a farmer friend came in and said: "Mr. Moore, I like your paper, but times are so hard I cannot pay for it."

"Is that so, friend Jones? I'm very sorry to hear that you are so poor; If you are so hard run I will give you my paper."

"Oh, no! I can't take it as a gift."

"Well, then, let's see how we can fix it.—You raise chickens, I believe."

"Yes, a few, but they don't bring anything, hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything, hardly. Now I have a proposition to make you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from your lot one chicken and call her mine. Take good care of her and bring me the proceeds, whether in eggs or chickens, and we will call it square."

"All right, brother Moore;" and the old fellow chuckled at what he thought a capital bargain. He kept the contract strictly and at the end of the year found that he had paid about four prices for his paper. He often tells the joke on himself, and says he never has had the face to say he was too poor to take a paper since that day."—Model Farmer.

A LAY, we presume, finding that the newspapers give a constant prominence to the doings of her sex, furnishes the following items about men: Men put their canes under their arms to put out the women's eyes. A man in Massachusetts caused tobacco juice to fly in a lady's face. A man in New Haven keeps a henery, which his wife feeds from the proceeds of sewing, and he sells the eggs to buy tobacco. A man down East makes his wife knit his stockings but he don't mend her shoes. A man in Indiana was fined for whipping his wife, The wife washed to pay the fine. A man in America keeps a millinery shop—His wife makes the bonnets and sells them, and takes care of the babies. Men make and break laws, but don't pay all the taxes. Men smoke —nobody can purify the house for months after. Men that yield the power should have more street-car accommodations, and not stand up. Men in Illinois put their feet on people's chairs who sit before them. A man in jail wants people to be honest. A man in Washington would like to be President. A man in Vermont can't marry because he can't maintain so many women. A man in California says Olive Logan ought to be made to marry, and help some man support himself. Men shouldn't run sewing machines; it's too hard work.

SOMEBODY has written up the effeminate man. This is how he is treated: The effeminate man is a week poultice. He is a cross between root beer and ginger pop, with the cork left out. A fresh water mermaid found in a cow pasture with his hands of full dandelions. He is a teacup full of syllabub; a kitten in panteletts; a sick monkey with a blonde moustache. He is a vine without any tendrils; a fig drowned n oil; a paper kite in a dead calm. He lives like a buterfly—nobody can tell why. He is as harmless as a cents worth of spruce gum, and as useless as a shirt button without a hole. He is as lazy as bread pill, and has no more hope than a last year's grasshopper. He goes through life on tip toes, and dies like cologne water spilled over the ground.

HORSE TALK.—"What do you think is the matter wi' 'er, Mr. Quackington?" Young Farrier fresh from the Horse College."—Well—ahem—Ithink probably the cartilaginous processes have suotended the ossification of bone, and thereby forced the coronal arch, the magnetic meridian; consequently, as things which are equal to the same thing are equal to the sqare of the hypothenuse, it follows that the lateral thurst becomes so powerful as to damnify the ellipticity of the projection, producing such a concatenation of the fluid portions of the periosteum and lesion or the less coagulated pigments of the conate there peutics, as elevates the chalybeate constituents of the anterior extremity of the tibia, which must, of course, guide the treatment to be pursued." Farmer—"Lor!"

It is said the women of America are rapidly growing more beatiful. This may, or may not be, agravating to married men.

RAIL ROAD MATTERS.

President Collins of the Eel River Railroad made a lengthy appeal to the citizens of Whitley County, through the county papers last week, in which he gives a statement of the condition of the road, the cause of the present delay, and the chances yet to be taken advantage of for its final completion.

After giving a brief history of the letting of the work to the Union Construction Co., and their failure, he says:

"Believing as early as the 15th of Jan. that the U. C. Co., could not procure the necessary means to build the road, an effort was made to procure parties who could.—Such parties were found and finally terms were substantially agreed upon by when the U. C. Co., was to transfer its contracts, the parties, they to assume the payment of the labor done and the material furnished then not paid for. But the parties in view of the large outlay in money they would have to at once make, scrutinized closely our ability to pay as we had contracted to do and on consultation with their legal adviser were told that the question as to whether our aid law would be available, yet it had to be decided by our Supreme Court, and they immediately advised us, we must by good responsible parties, personally guarantee, that portion of our subscription or our negotiations were at an end.

Your are all aware of the fact that the question is now pending in the Supreme Court. We are advised the question will not be passed upon before the last of May or the first of June. We cannot wait for the decision and make our road. If then decided favorable to us, it will be too late, if against us, then we would be without hope. We have every reason to believe that the law will be sustained, but before that decision will be rendered we must have the work far forward or we cannot have it completed within the time required, the first day of January 1872.

We have three weeks yet to accept the proposition of the parties who offer to build our road, whom we know can and will build it as certainly as the first day of next January shall dawn upon us, if we can comply with their offer.

Now we propose to make the effort along the line to have the aid voted secured. From our county west we have no doubt but we can succeed and we wish to have a thorough canvass in this county, and we believe that the people when the matter is presented to them will render the necessary aid. Our plan is to ask all to give a note, payable if the aid law is not sustained, if it is, note to be void. Meetings will be held, canvassers appointed, and a fair opportunity given to you to know whether you will make the effort.

We told you in the commecement that there was no hope of us making the road unless we could get a sufficient subscription to prepare the road bed for the iron—we tell you the same thing now. We can succeed in our county if all who are interested will render what aid they can, and it will be a better investment than they ever made. If we do make this road through parties now proposing to build it, it will ultimately be part of a through line not inferior to other of the great lines.

If we are unable to raise the necessary means to secure its construction east, the Eel River folks will get the P. F. W. & C. R. R. to take hold of it at Columbia City and build it from there west, and negotiations are pending between them. If we cannot make it east we must let them make it west. That will settle the question for all future time that Columbia will never have another road and our farmers will continue in the future as they have in the past, to pay the exorbitant rates charged for taking their produce to market and on the goods and groceries consumed. The road alone would add to your tax duplicate and for all future time not less than $125,000 which would almost all be foreign capital, all of which would have the effect to lessen the per centage on your county and all other taxes.

In conclusion let me say to you personally whatever you may hear in regard to this matter I desire you to remember that the true state of the case has been told you fully and freely; that the success or failure of this enterprise is with you. For over two years I have greatly neglected my own business in order to make this a success.

Then I appeal to my fellow citizens of Whitley county to act your will but act promptly. If you fail to make the necessary guarantee within the three weeks I shall regard it as you having settled the question that you do not want the road. I will devote no further time to it, but will at all times be found in my office ready to render my legal service to all who may desire them.

JAMES S. COLLINS, Pres.

SPENCERVILLE.

SPENCERVILLE IND., March 27th, 1871.

EDITOR COURIER.—The winter term of school at this place, conducted by Prof. Marlow, closed on last Friday. The term was four months duration and closed with a grand exhibition on Friday evening last, which was a decided success. A small admittance fee was demanded at the door to defray the expense of curtains &c. Semenary Hall was densely packed, and when the dimes were counted out there was found sufficient to defray all expenses and a sur plus left on hand.

Prof. Marlow has been engaged for the summer term.

There was a horse stolen from this neighborhood about two months' ago. The horse was found and thief caught. It would cover to much space to give a history of the case, suffice it to say we sent the lad to your place for safe keeping. He is generally called Michigan, and I belive he rooms with Billy the wild, and Roberts, the detective, and boards at the county hotel, Jery Plum Proprietor. The citizens of this place are anxious to learn if the body of Amos Keeter has ever been found, and think the matter ought to be investigated by the grand Jury the crime being of to great a character to be overlooked by a virtuous and enlightened community.

RELIABLE.

In answer to the above we would say that nothing further has been discoved in regard to the unfortunate affair referred to in the above, but it is strongly suspected that one Amos Krat, a colleague, has had something to do with the matter. However, we will keep our friends posted in all the discoveries made in this terrible tragedy.—Came again Mr. Reliable, and make the columns of the COURIER contribute to the interests of Spencerville.

Aid for France.

Americans, France is exhausted by this terible war. Many of her people are starving and utterly destitute. Let us not forget her early recognition of American Independence and the prompt and generous aid she then rendered to our struggling Republic, and let us now share with her from our abundance in this hour of her need.

"Hear the Cry that Comes Across the Sea!" Rallying song and chorus. Words and Music by Geo. F. Root. Published by Root & Cady, Chicago.

This is right. It is no time to criticise latter acts. France needs our help and should have it for humanity's sake, even if she had not "Held out the friendly hand when our days were dark." So we say our Chicago friends have done a proper and timely thing in issuing this song. It is stirring and well calculated to arouse sympathy for the war-stricken peasantry, whose mute appeal is so touching.

Let every singer in the land sing it, and there will be no lack of "food to eat" or "grain to plant."

BEAUTY.—The largest collection of beauty ever published in the United States is afforded in the Parlor Album. This album embraces the finest specimens of chromo lithographs, steel engravings and fine wood engravings ever afforded the public. The American Publishing Co., of Rutland, Vt., desire an active agent in every town and village, to whom they offer liberal terms. Send the advertisement of the Parlor Album.

TRUNKS, VALISES, &c.—One of the great features of Fort Wayne is her manufactories, and among them prominently stands the extensive trunk manufactory of H. Lingenfelser & Bro., where thousands of trunks are manufactured yearly. Their large warerooms are constantly filled with every variety of trunks from the lowest price up to the costliest article in the market which they are retailing at wholesale prices. Those wanting trunks should go to their warerooms, No. 117 Columbia St., and examine their stock.

A subscriber informs us that the general prospect for an abundant harvest of wheat was never better, in this county.

Mar. 9. ROTHSCHILDS & BRO.

A farmer near Indianapolis wanted his property insured, and this is the description he gave of it:

"Two thousand dollars as follows: 500 on the frame log house; 500, on his household and kitchen furniture, including his frame rail pig pen, at the rear of the house, and chooking stove and carpets all contained in said house, and one thousand dollars on his frame log barn, four wheeled horse and wagon, and haystack, at the other side of the pasture, and suffolk sow and her litter of ten week s'old pigs, all in said barn, on his farm back of Jim blink's house on the J. M. & I. R. R., in the State of Indiana, ten miles from Indianapolis."

D.; Alice Cary, the poet; Genius and Honesty. A good number. Price 30 cents; $3. a year. Sent half a year, on trial, for $1. Address S. R. WELLS, 389 Bradway, N. Y.

To Nebraska, California, Kansas, and The B. & M. R. R. Lands.

The starting Points of this Route are at Chicago and Peoria. The central point is BURLINGTON, on the Mississippi. It traverses Illinois and the whole breadth of Southern Iowa. Near the Missouri, its trunk forks into three branches, for it has three western termini.

Its northern terminus is Council Bluffs, where crossing to Omaha, it connects with the Union Pacific for all places on the intra continental and Pacific slopes. Over-land travel and traffic choose this reliable route more and more.

Its next terminus is Lincoln, the capital of Nebraska, fifty-five miles west of the Missouri at Plattsmouth. This is the only direct avenue to the south Platte country, where the sales of railroad land last season, rose to half a million.

Its third terminus is at Hamburg, and Nebraska City. At Hamburg, it makes close connections, twice a day, for St. Joseph, Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the whole South-west.

In journeying then, from the East to Kansas, via Burlington, you enjoy advantages you can secure on no other line. You both pass over a road second to no other in speed, safety, or any Pullman luxury of Modern travel; and while on your way, survey the garden of Illinois and Missouri, as well as 400,000 acres of prairie in South-western Iowa now in market at low prices and long credit.

Keep it then before the people bound westward, "to take the Burlington Route."
